As I now understand it. This fee was decided on after checking with Mass.PIRG, the Attorney General's Office and various legal counsels here at the U. of M. After consultation it was decided that 30 cents per page was a fair price in comparison with other clinics.

There are any number of reasons why an individual may need his-her own copy of their medical records, yet we are not considered responsible enough to handle them. Therefore it seems a punitive charge is levied against us.

Nowhere in information given to one attending the University is this policy written down nor the reasoning behind it explained.

Perhap it's time we all reconsider the basic role of the great and benevolent medical machine that emotionally and economically charges us for knowledge of ourselves while passing it freely among its own members.

Our Man In Paris

Long before our homesteading ['Home Steading! And step on it! I plan to catch the two of them at it this time.'] and grassroots Jimmy endeared himself to America by rooting for grass and steading in homes of Average Folk, France's Giscard D'Estaing was already practicing the common touch. Since elected in 1974 he's made it a matter of course to drop in on French families of an evening and pass a garrulous hour or two. President Carter has invited him to the states for a visit in June. One wonders how the evening is likely to go should Giscard drop in on an American household ...

Lansing, Michigan. Home of the Tupplers where Fred Tuppler has just settled down to watch Monday night baseball. His wife Irene sitting on the couch watching with him and sewing "Tuppler's Hardware" onto the back of her husband's softball uniform. The doorbell rings. Fred rises and goes to answer. A tall, slightly balding but otherwise well favored, gentleman on the stoop.

"Bonsoir Monsieur."

"Encyclopedias heh? Always the same old pitch, "Bun swear, Missyuh." Don't you guys ever come up with anything new? Listen up pal, we're as learned as we're ever going to be, okay? Don't need any "Spunk and Hangnails," thank-you Andy. Want some advice from someone who was on the pumping trail for years, get off it. Go into something respectable like hardware. Years from now you'll thank me,"

"No, you see, ah am ... "

"What, you're not peddling Icyclos? Brushes, vacuum cleaners, soap, chocolates? Where's your sample case anyway? Out in the car? Well, would you look at that fancy car — a Daimler! Irene, come quick, there's a Daimler out front. Gets super mileage I bet, huh?"

"Well, uh yes. Ah get 140 kilometers to the litre."

"Listen I've had enough of this parley voodoo business. Time to get on your saddle. No good standin' there like a spare husband at a wedding. C'mon scram or I'll call the cops."

"Actually, ah was hopin' to come into your house for a moment. You see, ah am ze president of France."

"And I'm Brigitte Bardot's naval."

"No, really, I ... "

"Uh huh, one of those, heh? Listen aren't you out after curfew? They're probably starting to worry about you. Funny that, it's always the soft-spoken type ... "

"Well, Cuspidor in a tight fittin' mitten, wouldn't you know it. Nice of you to stop by Mr. President, but you see I'm watching my ball game, you understand. We'll have to make it some other night. How about this Thursday. Harry Carbuncle is up with the flu, so we'll need a fill-in for the bowling team."

"Unfortunately, I will uve left by zen. Mebbe I could watch ze game wiz you?"

"Well, all right, but don't try anything on the wife. I hear you're a race of smooth talkers over there. One minute you're slobbering a kiss on their hand and the next it's Saturday night in Sioux City, get my gist? You people got extended libidos or something. Must get it from the tap water. Strike three! Way to mow 'em down Fidrych! Heard about the Bird over there?"

"Well no, you see I was hoping to talk to you about what you think of France. I always think it's valuable to get other people's views of one's own country, don't you think."

"Pretty strange place, know what I mean? People go to the bathroom standing up and all. Irene and I were in Paris for about a week ten years ago. Never did figure out how to flush the bidet."

"Surely though, you enjoyed the famous French cuisine?"

"Couldn't eat any cheese you know. Makes Irene break wind. Never know where a snail's been so that was out. And when we found out that their wine comes from stomped grapes we passed that up 'cause we were afraid that we might choke on the pips. Stuck to "l'eau potable" ... Beats me how the water is portable but there's no divining the frog mind, know what I mean?"

"Well you must uve enjoyed ze historical sites. After all, for all our shortcomings, we ure a nation steeped in tradition."

"Call those weak-chinned Louis' running 'round in silk tights and periwigs tradition? Royal poofs if you ask me. Ah, look at that would you, the kid's getting shelled."

"Madame, your husband certainly has many astonishing notions about my country."

"Well, you know he's got a broad overview of the world. Always has. Fred prides himself on being a sound judge of men and ideas. I like to think of him as my 20th century Renaissance man."

Americans died for Panama Canal

To the Editor:

The Panama Canal was completed in 1902, at a cost of 30,000 lives. Many of these lives were American. Malaria, which was then a ravaging disease, was the primary cause of these deaths. Americans fought the heat of the jungle, malaria, and dysentery, and overcame tremendous obstacles, in order to carve out this canal which linked the Pacific and Atlantic oceans. At that time the government welcomed us with open arms and granted us the right to a ten mile strip of land forever in return for their rights, we would build a canal, help build up the economy of Panama, protect the canal, maintain it and operate it. The Panamanians receives royalties for every ship that goes through the canal.

Now seventy-six years later because of a petty dictator who is currently the leader of the Panamanians, we are considering abdicating our rights to this canal, that our people died to build. This dictator has threatened riots and uprisings against the United States bases and personnel if we do not turn the canal over to the Panamanians by the year 2000. The U.S. is strongly considering the treaty, even though the treaty would grant the U.S. certain rights. It cannot guarantee the future Panamanian government will honor these rights. If we abdicate our responsibilities in Panama other countries where we have military bases or other vested interests would then look at our abdications in Panama as a weakness, and they would try the same things in their country.

It is time we drew the line in Panama. We must keep the canal. It is in the best interest in the U.S. to continue to honor the commitment that 30,000 people made 76 years ago. It is in our best interest to honor the engineering geniuses of past generations by keeping the canal to protect our national security and economic liability, so I say keep the canal.

Spring concert should be free

To the Editor:

The UMass Student Senate did it again Wednesday night February 22, when it approved $50,080 for the Spring Concert. Imagine, UMass Undergrads have to pay $3 to get in. It isn't enough we pay campus center fees, health service fees, student activities fees, not to mention tuition and room and board.

We Undergraduates pour enough money into this University each year. And now you say we have to shell out another 3 bucks for a ticket. This is absurd! I'm sure the Student Senate, IF they knew anything about managing money, COULD put on the concert for free.

Fred Winer

Third world separatism termed racist

To the Editor:

The concept of a "Third World" should be abandoned. It is such an ambiguous concept that it took the Student Senate four years to define it. This definition that was finally accepted by the Senate is still extremely ambiguous by any standards. By my standards, to group and define any people according to ethnic, racial, and heritage lines is outright racism. This is what the definition of "Third World" has done and I feel this is outright racism.

As for these so called "Third World" people having Senators apportioned to them according to their heritage, it is a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution which states "... nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." These senators of the Third World Delegation should resign on their own accord or the Senate should assume the full responsibility and expel the entire Third World Delegation never to be recognized again.

It is possible that the people in question really do have special needs and if so I agree whole-heartedly that these needs should be met with Senate sponsored programs. To do just this the Senate has initiated the Recognized Student Organization [RSO] Program. Its sole purpose is to allow students with special needs to help themselves.

A much greater emphasis should be placed on the RSO programs and no emphasis put on giving power to them in the senate. Let's apportion the Third World Senators in an identical fashion as the "whites" [people of no color] are apportioned, according to residence.

Nummo News should also be dropped. I understand the need for accurate reporting of affairs which affect any and all parts of the UMass community, but Nummo News and "Black Affairs" deals on issues that affect only a single fraction of our community.

An alternative to the present set up is to have the Nummo News and "Black Affairs" staff combine with the Collegian staff so that the Collegian could do the needed reporting on all issues and affairs of all factions of this community of ours.

Another point, the paranoia so characteristic of some minorities actually encourages acts of racism and discrimination. Sick minds bent on racism and discrimination feed on the over reaction of their victims. I think that a bit more ignorance on the victim's part would show the sick mind for what it really is and soon the incident will lose its warped meaning.

Before closing, I would like to extend an invitation to all those who are presently residing in hyphenated America to leave and join the rest of us in the United States. It's not as bad a place as some are inclined to say. If and when you do act on my invitation and move into the United States I think that I should give you a word of advice: Your heritage is a part of you; You are not a part of your heritage.

Patrick O'Donnell

Tenure should not be abolished

To the Editor:

Stephen Matthieu writes in the February 17 Collegian that because of tenure "students are subjected to some real turkeys in the classrooms." No doubt. If tenure is ever abolished, however, you may be certain that UMass will become one of the biggest turkey farms in the nation, for it would be at an extreme disadvantage in hiring and retaining the best people available. Nothing would turn UMass into a fourth-rate university more quickly than the abolition of tenure.

FBI suspect flees Ashfield

ASHFIELD [AP] — Denis Lee Kelly, described by federal authorities as "one of the foremost manufacturers of LSD in the world," has escaped an FBI arrest attempt after hiding out for five months in a rural house.

Kelly, 36, a chemical engineer by profession, and a woman identified as Brenda May Smith — both said to be heavily armed and extremely dangerous — fled just hours before a Feb. 15 raid at the isolated home in this western Massachusetts hill town.

Kelly, wanted on federal warrants issued in California and Oregon, allegedly developed a process for manufacturing millions of dollars worth of the hallucinogenic drug more efficiently than other underground drug producers.

In their flight, Kelly and Miss Smith left behind a truckload of valuable antiques and other goods. Kelly "lived like a king," according to Alan Ringgold, agent-in-charge of the FBI's Springfield office.

According to a report published Thursday by the Greenfield Recorder, several persons questioned about the fleeing couple said Kelly and Miss Smith drove away with four 75-pound bars of silver and "stacks of currency." The unidentified persons may face charges of harboring federal fugitives, the newspaper said.

Kelly, formerly of Portland, Ore., is wanted on federal warrants issued last March and May in San Francisco and Portland. They charge him with conspiracy to manufacture and distribute LSD; tax evasion; and making false statements on a passport application filed in San Francisco. Miss Smith is named on the drug charge.

It was another alleged attempt this month to obtain a false passport that brought federal agents to Ashfield, Ringgold said yesterday.

A lawyer, identified as William G. Migely, was arrested in Boston Feb. 14 and charged with attempting to pick up a passport applied for by Kelly under a false name. Migeley was listed as a bar association member in Oregon and Illinois who had a home in the Sun Valley, Idaho area.

Kelly and Miss Smith "knew about the arrest within minutes," Ringgold said, and had escaped in a car later found abandoned 25 miles away in Holyoke before FBI agents traced long distance telephone calls to the Ashfield house.

In the driveway, inside a rented truck, authorities confiscated valuable Oriental rugs, antique furniture, photographic equipment and other household items. "Interestingly enough, they appear to be enthusiasts of Oriental culture and the antiques we found basically are of an Oriental nature," Ringgold said.

"The agents on the West Coast have told us Kelly is about the biggest in the LSD business," he said.

Kelly reportedly developed a quick and inexpensive method of manufacturing LSD and was able to produce an estimated 5 million doses within a few weeks, each worth $5 to $10 when sold to drug users.

While in western Massachusetts, the two suspects took the aliases Stephen Sutton and Adrienne Stuart, Ringgold said.

Your Birthday

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 24

Born today, you have a changeable personality. It is difficult for you to maintain a permanent relationship, except with those who, like you, are able to bend with the prevailing wind. You are inclined to dictate – or to attempt to do so – your will to those who seem unable to make up their minds. However, you are willing to allow those who hold decided views to have their way.

You know yourself exceptionally well. You are never surprised by your own responses, though you may be by the responses of others. You are not noted for your diplomacy. On the other hand, you are not overly curious about others and are disinclined to ask tactless questions.

You are very sympathetic toward children and animals. You cannot bear to see either in physical or emotional distress, and will go out of your way to help them. You possess a mystical understanding of animals, and can establish genuinely mutual one-on-one relationships with them.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 25

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) — Independence of mind is essential to success. However, don't attempt to order others around.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Your commercial training should stand you in good stead. Consider seriously another's suggestion.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Make the most of recent training in your field. Now is the time to step ahead of the competition.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Your financial future depends on decisions you make now. Take care not to make a rash or false move.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Accept much-needed aid from one willing to rescue you from seeming certain failure.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) — There is still time to reverse a decision on your future at home. Loved ones are willing to backtrack.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) — Play a hunch early and you may set yourself up for certain gain later. Listen to directives.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) — Home activities keep you within sight of children and vice versa. Only good can come of the situation.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) — Concentrate on your affairs and allow others to concentrate on theirs, even if it means mistakes.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) — Quick answers can only serve unimportant questions. Wait for a reasoned reply.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) — Early afternoon festivities may prove more than you bargained for. Surprises live up to their name.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) — An unsettled atmosphere at home prevents real progress in family affairs.

Women in MAIAW hoop clash

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

It's that time again.

For the UMass women's basketball team, it means post-season playoff time has arrived.

The Minutewomen begin what they hope will be a successful 'second season' this weekend when they participate in the third annual Massachusetts Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (MAIAW) tournament at Boston University.

UMass, the defending champion and first seed with a 12-5 record in this season's field, meets fourt-seed Bridgewater State tonight at 9 p.m. The first game (7 p.m. tip-off time) will find second-seed Northeastern tangling with third-seed BU, the host school. All of the games will be played at the Case Center.

The winners will meet tomorrow night at 8 p.m. in the championship game, while the losers play at 6 p.m. in the consolation title. All games will be played at the Case Center.

"My kids are ready to play," UMass coach Mary Ann Ozdarski said. "They want to prove to themselves that they are the best team in Massachusetts and they don't want to relinquish their Mass. Division I title."

The Minutewomen last season won the title handily by defeating Bridgewater State and Springfield. The tourney was held at Bentley College.

Actually, UMass has one regular season game left (Tuesday at Southern Connecticut), but for all intents and purposes, the focus now shifts to the tourneys.

Ozdarski expects to hear sometime Sunday about the seedings and pairings for the Eastern Regionals, which this season will take the form of two consecutive weekends of competition. UMass is assured of a spot in the 16-team field, and all that remains to be resolved is where the Minutewomen will play and where they will be ranked.

Coming off a resounding 75-56 win over UConn Tuesday night, Ozdarski feels that her squad is peaking at the right moment.

"I was a little concerned about our 19 day layoff between games," she said. "I didn't know how they'd react."

But the extended inactivity turned into a blessing in disguise, as it gave several players a chance to recover from the flu and also gave them the opportunity to work on their weaknesses in practice, Ozdarski said.

The only change the coach may make in her starting five is the insertion of Julie Ready at center. The 6-2 transfer student, who joined the team in mid-January, had her best game to date against the Huskies when she scored 19 points and had 10 rebounds.

Ozdarski was originally planning to use Ready as a substitute, but forward Maura Supinski may be forced to sit out this weekend's game due to illness. Supinski was due to be examined by a doctor.

If she cannot play, Ozdarski will use Ready at center and Cathy Harrington and Cheryl Carey at the forward slots.

Little is known of this season's Bridgewater State team. UMass was supposed to play the Bears three weeks ago, but the snowstorm took care of that. Attempts to reschedule the game also fell through.

According to UMass assistant coach Sue Walas, who played on last season's Bridgewater team, the Bears lost seven seniors from their squad.

Among the returning veterans are Mary Swiatek, a 6-1 center who saw limited action last year; 5-7 forward Denise Bereseniewicz; 5-11 forward Liz Sullivan; and 5-3 point guard Rosie Griffin-Hayden, whom Walas said is a good outside shooter.

Ozdarski and her squad are itching to play BU in the finals, due to some remarks coach Averill Haines made in a story about a Terrier player in Wednesday's Boston Herald-American.

BU is 11-4, but the Minutewomen whipped the Terriers, 91-67, in a game in a Christmas tournament at Southern Connecticut.

"If we don't win the states this year, we'll get it next year," Haines said.

And UMass would like nothing better than to make her eat her words.

Ski-women in Regionals

By LISA CAPONE
Collegian Staff

UMass' invincible women's ski team will travel to Middlebury College this weekend to compete in the Women's Eastern Regionals — a part of Middlebury's Winter Carnival. The races will begin at 9:30 Friday with a slalom, finishing up with a giant slalom Saturday, according to coach Bill MacConnell. This is the first year UMass has raced as part of the Middlebury Carnival. The Minutewomen will be recognized as a team, says MacConnell, but allowed to race only three skiers: Nancy Haydon, Kathy Shinnick, and Cathy Donovan.

Competing in the Easterns will be all ten colleges in the Eastern Inter-College Ski Association, consisting of the most powerful teams in northern New England. Doing well in this competition would mean qualifying for the Nationals held in New Mexico.

"We don't expect to win," says MacConnell. "The women are realists — they know how tough the competition is. We have a very strong team, but not of national team caliber."

MacConnell estimates that of the twelve teams racing, if UMass placed eighth or tenth it would be a wonderful showing for the school.

After the Easterns, the Minutewomen will continue racing for two more days, according to MacConnell, in the Women's Inter-College Ski Conference (WISC) championships. The WISC meet will be held at Middlebury College Sunday and Monday. The events will be a slalom and a giant slalom. As it now stands, UMass is the number one team in the league with a perfect 32-0 record. MacConnell is very optimistic about the outcome of the championships:

"We'd have to make some horrendous mistakes not to win again."

ten minute misconduct, leaving UMass short-handed for five minutes and without the services of Milan for the rest of the game.

The Mohawks, who skated well all night on the power play, took advantage of the situation and scored what appeared to the big insurance goal at 15:45.

Defenseman Jim Farrina fired a slapshot from 40 feet out that UMass goaltender John Riley made the initial save on. The puck then bounced away from Riley, and according to the goal judge crossed the goal line.

Riley bitterly protested the call but it went to no avail, and the Minutemen fell behind by three.

Mark Sheldon put the game on ice at 16:13, when he slid a loose puck past a still upset Riley to make it 6-2.

Ken Richard scored his first goal of the season, and made the final 6-3, when he connected on a backhander at 19:20.

Professional Wrestling.

A world of body slams, knee drops, and back breakers. Whether real or fake, millions of us are hooked on it. On Saturday mornings we sit glued to our television sets listening to Vince Mcmahon Jr. call the matches. We attend the exhibitions at our local arenas to cheer on the forces of good in hopes of seeing the forces of evil defeated.

The wrestler himself is a special kind of person. He is part athlete, part actor. He is idolized, he is despised. He can be American, Italian, black, white, and on occasion unknown.

Professional wrestling, much like the old AFL and NFL, is divided into three major organizations. They are the National Wrestling Alliance (NWA) which operates in the western and southern states, the American Wrestling Alliance (AWA) which controls the midwestern states, and the World Wide Wrestling Federation (WWWF) which governs the northeastern states. This article will concern itself only with the WWWF and its stars.

The current WWWF heavyweight champion is "Superstar" Billy Graham, a bleach blond, muscle bound character managed by a little man with dark glasses and a turban known as the Grand Wizard.

Graham won the title in stunning fashion by beating wrestling's "living legend," Bruno Sammartino, in what was a highly controversial match.

Sammartino is an amazing character in his own right. Now approaching 40 years of age, Bruno continues to reign at the top of the wrestling game despite a lengthy career of some eighteen years. Most of his career was spent as champion of the WWWF, he captured the title in 1963 by defeating Buddy Rogers in just 48 seconds with his famed back breaker. Sammartino held the title for eight years. In January of 1971, Sammartino engaged in a series of matches with the Russian Bear, Ivan Koloff. The series came to an end before a packed house at Madison Square Garden when a stunned crowd saw Koloff leap off of the top turnbuckle and plant a knee into Bruno's chest. The referee counted to three as an elated Koloff grabbed the championship belt that Bruno had worn for so long.

Almost four years and two title changes had gone by before Bruno got his chance to be atop the throne once more. The title was in the hands of one Stan "the Man" Stasiak who had defeated Pedro Morales, a titleholder for three years after defeating Koloff, but Stasiak would not have the title for long. Bruno soundly whipped him and regained his title.

Just as we had become accustomed to Bruno being in command, along came Graham to grab his share of the title.

Ah, but weep not for Sammartino, because for every time this man has entered the squared circle he has come home with an average paycheck of over three thousand dollars.

Switching to tag team action, an interesting situation arises. Going back to 1969 it can be discovered that there was no WWWF tag team championship. Instead there was an International Tag Team Championship which was held by the team of Victor Rivera and Tony Marino. It seems that when the title fell into the hands of the Mongols, it became changed to the World Tag Team Championship. The tag title has changed hands on many an occasion and is currently controlled by the Japanese tag team of Prof. Toru Tanaka and Mr. Fuji.

Such is the world of professional wrestling.

(Thanks to Ricky D for his help with this article.)

Reminder: there will be a seven bout card held at the Springfield Civic Center this Saturday (Feb. 25), starting at 8:30 p.m. There is a double main event. Ken Patera faces Bob Backland in one of the headliners and the second main event features a tag team title match with champs Tanaka and Fuji putting their championship belts on the line against the popular duo of Chief Jay Strongbow and Peter Maivia.

AIR FORCE ALWAYS NEEDS MORE LEADERS.

We're looking for pilots... navigators... missilemen... engineers... math majors... people managers... doctors... scientists... journalists... and more. And the Air Force ROTC program is a great way to get into a job like one of these which can help you improve your leadership ability and your professional competence.

As a commissioned officer in the Air Force, you can be proud of the role you play in your community and the contribution you make to your country's security. You can know that you're doing a job of importance, a job with responsibility.

The Air Force ROTC program offers a way to help you achieve these goals. As an AFROTC cadet, you'll learn about leadership, management, and more. You'll learn about benefits of being an officer later on, like an excellent salary, medical and dental care, housing and food allowances, and 30 days of paid vacation each year. You'll discover a whole new world open to you in the Air Force. And you can get there through AFROTC.

Look into it right away. You'll be glad you did.

Swan song for senior skaters

By MICHAEL McHUGH
Collegian Staff

The UMass Minutemen hockey team will close out the regular season this weekend with games tonight (Williams at 6 p.m.) and tomorrow night (Salem State at 8 p.m.) at Orr Rink.

The weekend games might be the last time seniors Bob and Bill White (co-captains), Brian Kittredge, John Riley, Paul McCann and Lincoln Flagg wear UMass uniforms, unless the team qualifies for post-season play.

Despite losing to Boston State last Saturday, the Minutemen still own an 8-8-1 record (excluding last night's North Adams contest) and are currently listed in the Boston Globe as being in seventh place in the ECAC Division II West standings. Since the top 8 teams make the playoffs, the Minutemen's chances are still pretty good.

But more importantly, this weekend just might be the end of a long road for the seniors, who replaced departing seniors four short years ago. The old adage that "time waits for no one", has become a reality for these six UMass seniors.

It seems just like yesterday when co-captain and right winger Bob White arrived at UMass in 1974 after a brilliant high school career at Revere High. The 22-year old, Physical Education major has three fond memories of his UMass hockey experience.

"I'd have to say that the Merrimack win (7-6 in OT) was the biggest thrill this year," said Bob, "because we hadn't beaten them in four years.

"My sophomore year was a thrill too, because we won eight out of our last 10 games and finished with a 12-8 record, but for some reason didn't make the playoffs. And my freshman year, when my brother Billy and I started for the varsity, we got to play with Chris Lamby (a phenomenal hockey player whose brother Dick plays for Boston University).

Bill White, Bob's twin brother, arrived at UMass with him in 1974 and received the honor of being named co-captain along with his brother this year. The 22 year old, Juvenile Justice major echoed his brother's sentiments that the Merrimack victory and his sophomore year were his biggest thrills here at UMass.

Bill, who was a voluntary probation officer in Northampton last semester (internship), added, "throughout our four years here we've met a lot of people that will continue to be our friends for the rest of our lives."

Kittredge, 21, a senior defenseman from Hudson, came to UMass in 1975 after graduating from St. Johns High (Shrewsbury) and Choate Academy (Connecticut). The senior HRTA major said he "enjoyed every year, but I probably enjoyed this year the most. Barry Milan (his defense partner) and I played real well together this year. There was a stretch of 10 games where we didn't have a goal scored against us while we were on the ice during regular shifts, powerplays and shorthanded situations. And of course, the Merrimack win."

The Cinderella story of this year's UMass hockey team has got to be Riley's. The UMies were suppose to be weak in goal this year, but the 22 year old senior from Lexington has proven himself one of the strong points on the team. In fact, Riley was named the ECAC Division II player of the week in early February when UMass beat Holy Cross (3-2), Merrimack and New Haven (8-3).

Riley came to UMass in 1974 from Lexington High and had the opportunity to watch the likes of Dana Redmond and Doug Janik in goal. The senior English major learned well, as he proved to be one of Division II's finest goalies this year. Riley has three fond memories of his UMass hockey experience.

"I have to say that getting the chance to start this year, the shutout over Army (4-0 last December 7) and beating Merrimack in overtime were my biggest thrills. I hope the best is yet to come."

McCann, 22, a Communications Studies major from Dedham has played back-up to Riley this year, but he still has fond memories of his UMass hockey experience.

"It was in a JV game against RPI. I made about 50 saves in an overtime tie. I remember that — I played really well."

Flagg, the lanky 22 year old center iceman from Classical High School in Springfield, came to UMass in 1975 after having played with the Springfield Olympics, a Junior A team. The Legal Studies major said "the victory over Merrimack was sweet, and hopefully, we'll make it into the playoffs. We haven't been there in a long time and it would be nice. Every one of the players are a great bunch of guys and I think we have the material to make a run for the playoffs."

In the game tonight, the Minutemen will face the Ephmen from Williams College in a make up game at 6 p.m. The Bill McCormick coached Ephmen own an 8-10 Division II record and 6-9 overall mark. UMass will have to watch out for defenseman Tom Reisor (4 goals 23 assists 27 points), forwards Peter Gonye (12-13-25), (Dan Sullivan 12-11-23) and Matthew St. Onge (9-18-17).

Tomorrow night, the icemen will encounter the powerful Vikings from Salem State at 8 p.m.

Gym season winds down

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

The women's gymnastics team is in the process of winding down their 1977-1978 season with two meets over the next five days. Canisius will compete against the Minutewomen on Saturday in the Boyden Auxiliary gym at 7 p.m. and New Hampshire will invade on Tuesday for the last home meet of season. The UMass-UNH encounter has been moved to the Cage to allow for more spectators in what could prove to be the most exciting match so far this season for the gymwomen.

Canisius will be competing with an abbreviated line up due to the flu and injuries. Canisius' top threat Carolyn Johnson, is out with an elbow injury and Valerie Roe will be left with the responsibilities of anchoring the Canisius gymnastic threat. Canisius has been averaging totals of 115 to 135 for the Minutewomen.

Karen Hemberger, Susan Cantwell, Karen Clemente and Cheryl Morrier will be UMass' all around performers against Canisius. Stephanie Jones, is still taking it easy but will compete in the vault and on the uneven parallel bars. Laurie Knapp will compete on the beam and Debbie Smith will definitely compete on the floor. The sixth positions in all four events are still in question due to illness. Debbie Law is expected to be the sixth vaulter and may be the sixth bars person if Jean Anderson doesn't land the slot. Coleen Thorton is recovering from muscle strains and may perform on the balance beam and Julie Myers is the questionable performer in the floor exercise.

UNH promises to be a more formidible foe for the gymwomen. The Wildcats have a 5-0 record and defeated Michigan State University earlier this season 138.0-136.45. MSU is the only team to defeat the Minutewomen this season, (141.35-135.45).

This is the first year UNH has offered a strong challenge to the Minutewomen. UNH has decided to offer scholarship money and are in the process of upgrading their entire women's athletic program. Denise Walker leads the UNH attack, she was ranked tenth in the country in the elite program and continues to be a very strong competitor.

The UNH-UMass meet will also be the last appearance for seniors Susan Cantwell and Stephanie Jones. Cantwell has been a UMass competitor for four years, competed on both Eastern Championship teams and reached All-American status during her freshman year. Jones joined the team last year and proceeded to break UMass records and become an All-American. Jones has been hampered in recent meets by a sprained hip and rib injuries, but hopes to be back at full strength by the UNH meet.

Gym-men finale

By STEVEN MARKS
Collegian Staff

Tomorrow the UMass men's gymnastics team travels to Philadelphia to take on the Owls of Temple University, and coach Dick Swetman suspects that it will certainly be another close one with the outcome of the competition in doubt. The regular lineup will be going with the exception of freshman all-arounder Bob Lamb, who recently sprained his wrist.

The Owls are led by senior Mike Silverstein, a finalist on floor and vaulting in the Division I nationals. He was also a member of the United States International Team in 1977.

On floor exercise for UMass will be John Forshay and freshman Dave Bugelar. The pommel horse will be led by senior Dave Kulakoff and freshman Tim Berry, while on the still rings freshman Dave Felleman will be the lone specialist. Long horse vaulting will again have John Forshay and Dave Bugelar. Parallel bars will have Kulakoff and freshman John Nelson, and the horizontal bar will have Tommy Thompson and Nelson filling in the two specialist positions.

Designated as all-around will be Bob Donahue, Steve Nunno, Paul O'Neil, and Frank Cohen. Swetman hopes to pull another upset in the last and final meet of the season topping off a 6-5 record in a certain close encounter.

Track stars in N.E. meet

By KEVIN McCAFFREY
Collegian Staff

A selected handful of trackmen will represent the maroon and white of UMass tomorrow and Sunday, as the indoor track ledger winds down to the New England Championships at Tufts University.

Tomorrow's competition will serve as the qualifying round for the finals which begin at noon on Sunday.

"Northeastern is the runaway favorite," said UMass head coach Ken O'Brien." The real battle will be for second place where there is no clear cut favorite. UConn, Boston University, Boston College and our team are very similar. It all comes down to who will compete the best on that particular day."

The qualifiers boarding the van for the Minutemen are performers split evenly between the field and running events.

Representing the Minutemen in the hurdles will be the trio of Paul Enis, Dan Kelly and Paul King. These three performers represent strength in an event UMass has been weak in for several seasons.

Sophomore Bruce Parsons and Senior Brady Mayer enter the New England's sporting third and fifth place performances from the Yankee Conference Championships a week ago. Parsons and Mayer will compete in their specialty, the triple jump.

Freshman Don Dowden comes off a remarkable performance in the high jump, where he snared first place in his first YanCon Championship with a height of 6'6".

The only other winning performer from a week ago is Senior Francis O'Keefe, who will try to defend his newly acquired title in the 880. Also competing in the event will be freshman C.J. Reitenbach.

Freshman Rich Cady will carry the burden of representing the UMass sprint corps, as he is the lone Minutemen qualifier in the 60 yard dash.

Veterans Rich Thompson and Joe Martens will display their experience in the 600 yard run and 440 yard dash, respectively.

Standouts from the varsity cross country campaign will exhibit their talents in separate distance events. Stetson Arnold will run the mile, while teammate Mike Morris will compete in the two mile. Lou Panaccione and All-American Mike Quinn are forced to sit out the championship because of illness.

Sophomore surprise Steve MacDougall will concentrate his efforts on the 1000 yard run, with the possibility of running on the two mile relay team.

Slumping Cagers drop third straight

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Wins over Villanova, George Washington and Holy Cross are now long forgotten as lowly, at least record wise (5-19), UNH decided that pride and emotion can beat talent, and utterly humiliated UMass in its first Cage and third straight loss, 73-60, before 3,678 speechless Cage followers.

"I think this was the worst UMass performance I have ever coached," said UMass head coach Jack Leaman. "A game played entirely without emotion."

"Simply, UMass was not prepared mentally, and it's obvious we wanted to win a lot more. I guess you could say pride meant a lot more to us tonight," said UNH coach Geofry Friel.

Ironically, the last team to beat the Minutemen at the Cage was UNH in almost the exact time period last year, 78-76 in triple overtime. But last season's encounter was played with Alex Eldridge while for last night's game, Eldridge sat on the bench with sprained knee ligaments.

Eldridge is not expected to play until the EAA tournament, next Thursday.

Using a superb inside game by senior forward Peter Laskaris (30 points) and junior forward Brendan VanDeventer (26 points, 17 rebounds), UNH took a 35-32 halftime lead, shot 58 per cent in the second half and outrebounded the Lea-men 44-33 for the game.

Without Eldridge, UMass produced only a total of 14 points with its backcourt combination of Derick Claiborne (8), Bill Morrison (4), and Tom Witkos (2). But more important, offensive mistakes of traveling, offensive fouls, and bad passes plagued the UMass backcourt all night.

The only bright moment of the night happened at the start of the game, as with 14:56 to go in the first half, Claiborne scored his 1,000th UMass career point, giving the Minutemen a short-lived 10-8 lead.

Starting at the 12:11 mark of the first half, the Wildcats began to set the tone of the night. Using basic shoulder fakes, Laskaris and VanDeventer went to work on the inside and upped the Wildcat lead to 18-12.

Mike Pyatt (the Minutemen high scorer with 19) and Mark Haymore (13) brought UMass to a tie at 22, and Haymore's two foul shots with 7:34 left gave the Minutemen 24-23 lead. But after UMass' Claiborne and Laskaris traded jumpers, the Wildcats went to the inside again.

For the last five minutes of the first half, VanDeventer and Laskaris would either drive to the basket or be fouled. But in either case Laskaris (7) and VanDeventer (10) gave the Wildcats a halftime three point lead while UMass' Pyatt (10) and Haymore (10) saved UMass from falling behind even further.

In the second half, UMass found itself behind by four 43-39, but Laskaris hit a jump shot and then scored on a three point play and within 25 seconds, UMass found itself down by nine 48-39 with 13:54 left.

Morrison tipped in a Pyatt jumper and Pyatt came back to hit one himself to cut the deficit to five, 48-43, but the climax of the game occurred, when for the next four minutes, the Wildcats, behind Laskaris (4) and VanDeventer (3) increased the lead to 56-43 with 9:53 left.

Pyatt again hit a jump shot and Len Kohlhaas came off the bench to hit a layup and add two free throws to cut the lead to nine, 58-49, but time was in UNH's favor.

UMass tried a full-court trap press to force UNH into mistakes and in four occasions it succeeded in UMass stealing the ball. But for every occurrence, the Minutemen committed the costly mistake via travelling, missed shots, or bad passes.

The closest UMass came in the last seven minutes was 63-56, but time after time, UNH beat the UMass press and just let the clock become its strongest ally.

If you think UMass' efforts get any easier, think again, for the Minutemen go back on the road this Saturday against URI (2 p.m., game time), which is sky high following its upset over nationally ranked Providence.

UNH — Dickson 1-4-6, Dufour 1-1-3, Laskaris 12-6-30, Cavanaugh 1-2-4, Layne 0-4-4, VanDeventer 7-12-26, Totals 22-29-73.

UMASS — Pyatt 9-1-19, Williams 3-0-6, Haymore 4-5-13, Claiborne 4-0-8, Witkos 1-0-2, Kohlhaas 2-2-6, Morrison 2-0-4, Holcomb 1-0-2, Totals 26-8-60.

NORTH ADAMS — For the UMass Minutemen hockey team, it was a bad start to a big weekend last night as it let a close game get away in a disasterous third period, and ended up 6-3 losers to the North Adams State Mohawks at Vietnam Veterans Memorial Rink.

The loss drops the Minutemen to 8-9-1, and leaves them in a must win situation for games this weekend against Williams (tonight) and Salem St. (tomorrow night, both at Orr Rink).

The Minutemen need to win both games if they hope to overcome a challenge from Buffalo for the final playoff spot in the Western Division of ECAC Division II.

The story in the North Adams contest was some very costly and unnecessary penalties in the third period that kept the Minutemen short-handed and off-balance, and prevented them from getting the goals they needed to tie the game.

Down 2-0 at the end of the first period after Mohawk goals by Bob Fitzsimmons and Dave Rand, the Minutemen came back as they have all year and played themselves back into the game.

Hard working winger Nick Carney made it 2-1 when he connected on a 15 foot wrist shot that beat Mohawk netminder Gary Mastrioanni to the stick side at 1:27.

The UMies fell behind by two again a minute and a half later when Peter Leahy deflected in a slap shot, but drew to within one at 16:12, when freshman Mark Ferragamo took passes from Rich Riccioli and Lincoln Flagg and deposited one of his patented wrist shots into the top right corner.

The second period ended in controversy when the time keeper apparently let the clock run after a whistle had stopped play, robbing the Minutemen of a precious second or two when they had the man advantage.

UMass co-captain Bill White complained a little too violently about the call and was banished to the penalty box for a ten-minute misconduct, leaving the Minutemen without one of their top playmakers for the first half of the third period.

With White in the slammer and the Mohawks playing tight-fisted defense trying to protect their one goal lead, the Minutemen could get nothing going early in the period.

UMass fell behind by two again at 9:16, when loose play at the red line resulted in a two on one break for North Adams and a slapshot goal for Mark Flaherty.

The roof fell in on the short-tempered Minutemen just a few minutes later when defenseman Barry Milan was put away for a five minute major interference penalty and a Pass the word: the Mighty O is back....

Sidelined for the past three weeks with a rib ailment, UMass wrestler Larry Otsuka returned to the Minutemen lineup on Wednesday night and along with fellow co-captain Timmy Fallon led his mates to a 2[illegible]-19 victory over Connecticut.

Although still slightly out of shape, Otsuka had little trouble beating his Connecticut foe 21-6 for a superior decision.

Freshman Dana Rasmussen started the scoring for the Minutemen with a 10-3 win over Stuart Hochberger in a 126 pound match, and Otsuka's victory gave the UMies a lead that they were not to relinquish.

In the 142 pound clash, Charley Rigoglioso put away Hans Putnam, 15-2, for four more UMass team points.

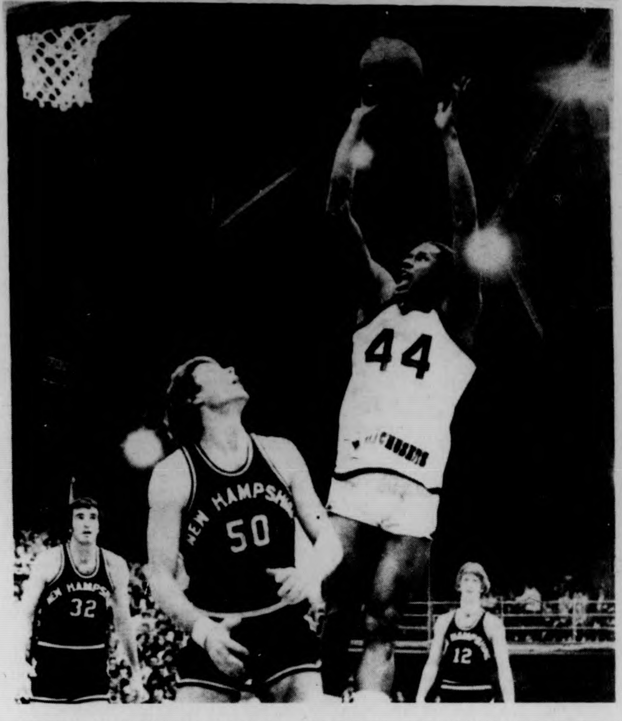
Mike Carroll continued the UMass onslaught with a hard-fought 6-3 win in his 150 pound bout.

Fallon was wrestling in a heavier weight class in this meet, but the Lowell senior did not feel out of place as he pinned the Huskies' Bob James for six UMass team points. Fallon wasted little time, as he took only 1:38 to gain the pin.

However, Connecticut turned things around with victories in the 167, 177, and 190 pound weight classes; and as the heavyweight bout began, the UMass lead had dwindled to 22-19.

Enter John Allen.

The Minutemen heavyweight gave his opponent a personally guided tour of the gym ceiling with another Minutemen pin to give his team its fifth win of the season.



UMass's Mark Haymore flies for a jumper here, but UNH's Pete Laskaris (32) soared for the rest of the night, as his 30 points led UNH to an upset win. (Staff photo by Dan Vullemier)

The answer is biorhythms

While sitting at my desk, trying to think of yet another way to waste space in a Friday newspaper, I received a call for the Collegian sports department from the University Health Center.

"We've got an epidemic here!"

There was something in the voice at the other end that sounded desperate.

"We're already out of beds and there's a line at the door that must stretch to the Southwest. Craziest symptoms I've ever seen. They just stand motionless with blank looks on their faces. There's print on their lips, too. Typewriter print. The minute we deciphered it, we called you."

By this time I was mildly interested. "What's it say? I asked.

"It reads, 'What's the matter with the UMass basketball team?' And oh, I almost forgot, their faces are green, too."

So it had finally come to pass. It had to happen sometime, of course. Only its scope was unexpected. No one could have imagined that more than half the university would have the question 'What's the matter with the UMass basketball team?' on its lips.

"I'll get on it right away," I said reassuringly. "And don't worry about the green in their faces. They probably just subscribe to the 19-Meal Plan."

I knew that only one person could answer the Question. So, clicking my heels together and repeating the phrase "there's no place like Morrill," I quickly found myself in the laboratory of A.C. Electrode: Biorhythms Expert — Peaks and Valleys a specialty.

A.C. was busy hooking up a ham and cheese sandwich to a bio-feedback monitor. The sandwich had been partially eaten.

"What's up, A.C.?" I said salutorially.

Electrode raised his head.

"Hi there! Just checking out my lunch. It tasted sort of peculiar, so I'm giving it the once-over. Probably just a triple valley of the pumpernickle, ham and mustard. It shouldn't have been taken out of the refrigerator today."

I ambled over to the food in question.

"That thing should have left the refrigerator two months ago. Look at it. The cheese is turquoise, the ham is yellow, and that isn't pumpernickle at all. It's just dirty Wonder Bread."

"Oh."

"Listen, A.C., I need your help. If I don't find out what the matter is with the UMass basketball team, over half the university may never kiss again."

"Gone straight to the lips, huh?"

"Yes."

"Then we don't have much time. Let me have the birthdays."

I handed him the goods and he began to analyze them in lightening style. It wasn't hard to see that this was a real pro in action. In a moment he had finished the preliminaries.

"It's always easier to figure out what's gone wrong if you know what you were doing right in the first place," Electrode theorized. "Give me the date of a game the team won."

"They blew out Villanova on February 14."

"February 14... February 14... Aha! Just as I expected. Team physical and sensitivity curves peaked on the fourteenth. Cognitive curve is very low."

"What's all that mean?"

"Well, the sensitivity apex shows that they'd rather be chasing women than playing basketball, and the physical peak points out that they have the stamina for the chase."

"Then how did they win the game if they didn't want to play it?"

"Because this trough at the cognitive level indicates that they didn't know the difference between a loose woman and loose ball."

"I see."

"I'll bet February 20 was a disaster."

"Right! They were beaten by Duquesne and got five technical fouls called against them. Tempers were boiling."

"Of course. High sensitivity, low cognitive and physical. They were in heat."

"What's the future hold in store, A.C.?"

"Looks like all crests until the end of March, then the team falls apart on the 27th."

"That's the date of the NCAA finals. Are you trying to tell me they'll make it all the way to the finals only to lose the Big Game?"

"I guess so."

"Well, who's the team they're gonna lose to?"

"There's only one club which peaks that late in March."

"Name it."

"You're not going to like this."

"I don't care Who is it? Who's going to beat them for the National Championship?"

"The University of Maine."

Feds nix disaster money

BOSTON [AP] — The Federal Disaster Assistance Administration has denied Massachusetts $9 million or more in snow-clearing aid from the record February blizzard. State officials are unhappy with the decision.

The net effect is that Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, who had been planning on a mild winter, will soon have to ask the Legislature for substantial additional funds.

The Department of Public Works started the fiscal year with a $9 million kitty for snow and ice control, 20 per cent less than was spent in 1977. This has already been bumped $5.5 million, with plenty more to come, according to administration aides who said the governor wants the federal government to share the load.

Other New England states on the current FDAA list are in the same boat, according to Bill McAda of Dallas, Texas, public information officer for the federal coordinating staff.

The immediate issue is simple. Federal aid for snow clearing is available to cities, towns and counties, McAda said. But the states must pay their own snow removal costs.

Tentative snow clearing costs to the Massachusetts DPW were estimated at $8.73 million by George Josephs, who is assembling data for all agencies within the Executive Office of Transportation and Construction.

The Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority is down fo $2 million for snow clearing and $3.3 million in damage. The Massachusetts Port Authority has tentatively reported $1.6 million in blizzard-related losses, a large part of which is from lost landing fees. The Massachusetts Turnpike Authority had an extra $350,000 in snow removal expenses.

Damage claims are expected to be honored and will total several million dollars. The Metropolitan District Commission had no estimate available on snow clearing puts damage at $7 million.

McAda said this was only the second time that the FDAA offered 75-25 reimbursement for contract snow clearing services. The first occasion was in the heavy January snows that clobbered Michigan, Ohio and Indiana.

Josephs said Massachusetts will fight to recover at least its contract expenditures.

McAda said the state can appeal the ruling, but did not hold out much hope for success. "Helping cities and towns in the cost of snow clearing was a liberalization of policy in itself," he said.

Massachusetts received free federal snow clearing aid, through the Army and the Corps of Engineers, particularly on the traffic-clogged section of Route 128 between Canton and Needham.

However, the state spent huge sums itself in the same battle. Josephs estimated DPW overtime there would exceed $500,000 and much of the $7 million in contract clearing was expended on that stretch.

Area reps ditch views; will reflect constituents

By GAYLE YOUNG
Collegian Staff

Two area representatives have said they will vote for the upcoming bottle bill and follow the dictates of their constituents rather than their personal opinions.

There has been speculation that they could be the swing votes in what is expected to be a close passage.

Representatives William P. Nagle, D-Northampton and William A. Carey, D-Easthampton voted against the ecologically-oriented bottle bill in 1976 but said they will support the bill when it comes to the house again this year. The expected house vote is 121 for, 118 against with a majority needed to pass.

The bottle bill would put a mandatory five cent deposit on all bottles and cans to give consumers an incentive to return bottles rather than litter. The bill was defeated in 1976 referendum by a narrow majority and has been brought up for consideration again.

Massachusetts bottling companies are against the bill, claiming it will harm their profits and cost jobs.

"I don't favor the bill but the people do," said Rep. Carey last night. Carey said he will vote in favor of the bill this year. "The econmic impact will be greater than the people think," said Carey.

Rep. Nagle of Northampton said he will also support the bill although he is "not excited about it." Nagle's constituents voted in favor of the bill on the referendum.

Nagle said officials at the Coca-Cola bottling company of Northampton, which employs two to three hundred in the area, told him the bill would cause the loss of job.

"I think hey (his constituents) have been sold on the concept of ecology," said Nagle," there has been talk of the bill creating new jobs but no one has shown concretely what those jobs would be."

Nagle said he favors ecological measures but is not sure the bottle bill "is going to be the panacea it is supposed to be."

Nagle also said he wouldn't be surprised if a hearing on the bill scheduled for today was "postponed if not cancelled." Nagle would not elaborate but did say he had met with House Speaker Thomas McGee yesterday.

Nagle denied that he and Rep. Carey are the swing votes on the bill.

Amherst Rep. James G. Collins is in support of the bill and is one of the 100 co-sponsors. Collins said he feels that having returnable bottles "makes sense" because they would result in a cleaner environment and would save taxes which go to road clean-up crews.

However, there are two areas where the bill could be stregthened, according to Collins. One would be to more clearly define what the state is going to do in terms of collection, transportation, and storage and the other is to make a provision for low cost loans to be offered to small bottling companies which may be hurt by the bill.

"Since 1975 any bill that hinted it might hurt industry was practically defeated automatically," said Collins. "The passage of this bill could symbolize that the state is heading in a more stabilized direction."

It is expected the legislature's Joint Energy Committee will hold a puble hearing in Gardner Auditorium at the state house on the bottle bill today.

A dedication of the Fanny Bangs Community Building and of Boltwood Walk will be celebrated in Amherst center the week of April 15-22, according to William Condo of the Amherst Redevelopment Authority.

The celebration, now being planned, is to be a week-long event consisting of various exhibits, contests, and arts and crafts shows, culminating on Saturday, March 22, with the Community Building dedication.

Music will also be offered, including presentations by the Amherst High School Band.

Town members are urged to attend and to participate in the planning of and within the actual celebration, according to Condo.

"We're trying to involve as much as possible the total Amherst community," he said in a telephone interview Friday. "We'd like to see people with some sort of talent participating in the exhibits, arts and crafts, and with music."

The Boltwood Walk Project is a state and town-refunded revitalization project for downtown Amherst. It is centered within some 9¼ acres in the Main St., Pleasant St., Kellog Ave. area, and is an effort to enliven the center.

"We hope to start a growing trend to attract people into the town," said Condo.

The project includes the development of residential apartments, additional commercial space, office buildings, a major park and the Community Building.

The Community Building is to provide space for approximately 30 different groups, including town agencies such as the Amherst Council on Aging and the Veteran's Counseling Service.

An entire floor of the building is to be used by the Community Health Center, and its services are to be available for those people not using the University infirmary and-or unable to afford the Amherst Medical Associates.

"This building is unique in that it has been a true community effort, as opposed to other parts of the project being done by private contractors," said Condo. "We are very proud of it."

Town authorities urge all Amherst citizens to attend the celebration and hope for general community participation. For further information citizens should contact the Amherst Redevelopment Authority.

Center opens in Sylvan

By PATRICIA KEEFE
Collegian Staff

From out of the mass of self-interest groups comes a unique plan for support and cooperation from the newly-formed Sylvan Men's-Women's Center.

The center, located in B-1 Cashin, is actually two centers which share the same space. As described by Stephen Cawley of the men's center staff, "the centers are unique in that they are separate, but together. When and if the centers get off the ground, the potential exists for interplay between the two. For example: is a woman comes in with a boyfriend problem, she can feel free to talk with someone at either center."

Jim LaMacchia, Cashin head of residence and one of the center's founders, said, "the centers are grounded on the premise that combatting sexism is a problem for both men and women. It is futile to have a women's center where women can exchange ideas and examine their roles and not have a place for men to do the same. Men share in the responsibility for dealing with sexism."

Both centers receive funding from the Program Support Fund ($500.00) and the Sylvan Area Government ($250.00). Funds are aplit evenly between the centers. They are hoping to obtain additional funds to secure a collection of short films, according to Bonnie Kates, sexism awareness training specialist.

Kates and LaMacchia co-teach a course, "Men and Women: An Inquiry into Roles," which is billed as "an interdisciplinary inquiry into the roles of men and women in our society." They have been "very gratified by the incredible response to the course and will offer the course again in the fall." The course raises appropriate issues for both men and women and supports the concept of a joint center.

Kates sees homophobia (fear of homosexuality) as a problem on campus, particularly in the dorms. LaMacchia said he feels that in Sylvan, "there isn't much support for men's-women's issues," and it it his hope as a head of residence in the Sylvan area and a teacher to "focus upon and alleviate this problem." He further said that "subtle sexism is rampant, especially in the dorms. During the weekdays, people interact as peers. On weekends, they revert to a stereotyped interaction of roleplaying and games." He feels that "there is a problem here in that if people can't get along in a co-ed dorm, we may go back to single-sex dorms and the perpetuation of sex role stereotypes." It is hoped that the creation of these centers will be the beginning of a long dialogue between area men and women.

Ideas for the center were first generated in Spring 77 between LaMacchia, Cawley and a third man. Cawley says that "people in the area, myself included, began to recognize a need in the area for men to get together and talk." He attributes this to the influence of a growing "men's movement" that has led men to begin to questioning their roles as men in society.

Cawley's involvement in the center stems from "a desire to do something with the center, an internship requirement and the need for someone to coordinate the setting up of the center." The center had planned to hire a workstudy-co-ordinator before workstudy funds were frozen. Through Cawley's internship, he will attempt to document whether the need for a center exists and if so, what form it should take.

Services offered by the center will include information on male sexual health issues, peer counseling, drop-in, library, workshops, and films on topics ranging from contraceptive responsibility to the "Male Rape Task Force." Cawley emphasized the versatility of the center where "we are open to talk to people about anything — from questions of sexual identity to girlfriend problems." Efforts will be made to coordinate an information network between the various men's centers.

Although the proposal was six months old when Kates stepped in, the Sylvan women's center hasn't quite gotten off the ground. Kates said an open house is in the works and she "expects the center to start moving once a workstudy coordinator is hired." When asked whether there was a need for a second women's center in the area, she replied that "Sylvan women don't go to the Northeast-Sylvan women's center. A complaint of the women in the Sylvan area has been that their needs are not being met by the center down the hill. They want something more localized that identifies with their living space," she added, "The women's center is presently looking for a peer sex educator-workstudy woman to coordinate the center. Interested women should contact Kates at 104 Johnson House. Services for the center will include a library, outreach, counseling and workshops. Kates was reluctant to elaborate on the center philosophy until after a coordinator is hired, and the first open house is held.

Spring music festival to be further discussed

Student government leaders will have a closed meeting with the Union Program Council and the Third World Senate Caucus tonight at 7:30 in the Campus Center to discuss the proposed Black American Music Festival.

The meeting will deal with the proposed budget for the concert, the admissions fee and the format of black music. Senate speaker Pat Whelan said the meeting was not "to work out an agreement to sell to the Senate" which meets on Wednesday and is scheduled to discuss the concert proposal.

The Senate passed a compromise plan last Wednesday night which called for a Black American Music Festival as the spring concert with a $3 admission fee. The plan was vetoed by the student government presidents last Thursday night.

Busing to be negotiated

Student leaders met with Director of Planning H.J. Littlefield on Friday to discuss funding the UMass bus system and agreed to have students try to rewrite their proposals of a funding split of 70 per cent students and 30 per cent parking office funds.

According to Littlefield the apartment did not require that administrative proposals be reworked. However, Student Government Association Co-president Jon A. Hite said "they have to respond to students re-evaluating their proposals with something in mind."

According to Hite, Littlefield said he "doesn't want to deal with it (the bus funding issue) anymore." He wants Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury to handle the bus negotiations.

Students have proposed a 70-30 split for funding. The administration proposal was originally 85 per cent students and 15 per cent parking funds. The administration later proposed a bus fee be added to students' semester bills. Students have rejected this proposal.

Exclusive dorm discussed

Southwest Master-Director James H. Matlack will speak to a meeting of Pierpont dormitory residents tonight and explain his plan to make Pierpont an exclusively freshman and sophomore house next semester.

The meeting will be at 9 p.m. in the Pierpont Main Lounge.

Matlack told the Pierpont resident assistants last Thursday night about the plan, which would not allow residents who are now sophomores and juniors to live in Pierpont next semester, according to David Barenberg, one of the dorm's student senators.

Barenberg said the reasons Matlack gave for the proposed change are: behavior in the house is not conducive to the maintenance of good order, the house has had four heads of residence in the past three years, extensive damage to the dorm, poor security, and its reputation for heavy drug traffic.

Evaluation committee will meet today

A recently-appointed committee evaluating practices and procedures of the Student Affairs Division today will be holding an open meeting welcoming public comments and criticism, from 3-5 p.m., in room 229 Whitmore.

In an effort to ensure no discrimination against the handicapped, the committee evaluates the following Student Affairs services: admissions (freshman and transfer), counseling, financial aid, handicapped student affairs, health services, housing (on and off campus), placement, programming (in dorms and off-campus), registrar records, and security public safety.

Further questions or comments should be directed to Ruth Green at 345 Whitmore.

Path proposal discussed

Bike path proposal to be explained

A proposal to develop a bike path along the east side of North Pleasant Street will be detailed at an Amherst Selectmen public hearing tonight at 7:30 in the Town Room of Town Hall.

Concern has been voiced by town citizens regarding hazardous conditions encountered by bicyclists along the street, between Eastman Lane and Pine Street. A tentative project for a bike path development will be outlined.

First contract needs work

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

News analysis

The UMass administration and the faculty union are bargaining on their first contract.

Big deal, some say.

Yet these talks, based on the major proposals of each side, could have a long-lasting and permanent effect on the entire University community.

Both sides in the talks appear to have "come out swinging" in their proposals. (See summary of contract proposals) Critics of the administration proposal have claimed that proposal could lead to the academic downfall of UMass. Critics of the faculty say they are trying to saddle the administration with a fat, unfair contract.

The proposals deserve closer examination.

The administration wants to eliminate tenure. Faculty response has been predictable.

"I cannot believe that the university would contemplate such wholesale violation of contractual rights," said former Chancellor botany Oswald Tippo in a letter to intern UMass President Franklin Patterson. "It would of course face hundreds of lawsuits."

But would the elimination of tenure pose a threat to so-called "academic freedom" — the right by faculty to examine varied and sometimes controversial issues in their classrooms? That freedom is considered paramount in quality education.

Maybe, maybe not. The administration's thinking is that the proposal will rid the University of "dead wood" in the faculty. But at the same time. would the chances of getting good, top notch professors be jeopardized if those professors knew they would not be tenured — thus facing possible sudden dismissal?

Evaluation is next. Faculty members are evaluated periodically for promotion, reappointment, and the like. Everyone agrees evaluation is necessary, but not everyone agrees what form it should take.

True to form, the administration and faculty here disagree. The administration, while wanting evaluation to be based on certain usual standards, such as classroom performance and the like, also wants many personal attributes to be considered as part of the evaluation process. In the words of Tippo, that requirement would make UMass "the laughing stock of the academic world."

Also included in the proposal by the administration is the elimination of faculty personnel committees. The committees, which review faculty members for reappointments and promotions, are composed of faculty members. Faculty members are also reviewed by academic chairpersons. The chairpersons could become part of the administration's side, since they recently voted to be just that. Presently, they are in the faculty union.

With the elimination of the personnel committees, together with the possible loss of the chairpersons, the faculty is concerned they may lose the ability to evaluate themselves.

The administration motives of the review proposals could not be learned.

Faculty members are requesting a salary increase averaging 36 percent. A 36 percent wage hike could mean a large increase in the portion of the UMass budget going to faculty. Most people know UMass is not known for receiving generous budgets from the state. If the salary portion of the budget increases, will the areas left over — academics, equipment, etc. — suffer a corresponding loss?

The faculty also seeks to reduce their in-classroom time from nine to four-and-a-half hours per week. If this happens, more faculty will obviously be needed to perform the same amount of work. Again, will this mean an increase in funds for faculty at the expense of other areas?

On the other hand, the faculty claims that since UMass prides itself on being a major research university, time devoted to research must be something substantial, also.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, who is also UMass senior vice president of faculty relations, has coined the phrase "industrial model" when talking about the negotiations. Since no real precedent exists for collective bargaining in higher education, he says, the type used by industry must be used.

The industrial model contains what Bromery calls a "perceived adversary" relationship — both sides see each other as adversaries. But perhaps something else Bromery said should be kept in mind by all during and after the negotiations:

"The contract is not for management. It has to be acceptable for the faculty, the administration through the board of trustees, and the students. After all, they're the ones we're here to serve."

The proposals made by each side will no doubt change through the art of compromise inherent in negotiations. But one thing is for sure — these negotiations will leave their mark long after a first contract is settled.

The bottom line

Faculty

- Salary increase — an increase in salary averaging 36 per cent.
- Work load — to reduced from the current nine hours per week spent in the classroom to four-and-one-half.
- Benefits — time off for maternity (both male and female), sick time, and other benefits.
- Other — various other proposals dealing with working conditions, academic personnel policies, grievance, and governance. Included are proposals to strengthen the role of the faculty senate without bringing its functions in conflict with those of the union.

Administration

- Elimination of tenure — to be replaced with a "rolling appointments" system. Faculty would work for five years and then be subject to reappointment for three year periods.
- Faculty evaluation — personal attibutes such as cooperation, congeniality, and punctuality will be basis for evaluation of faculty for promotion, reappointment, and salary increases. Faculty personnel committees will be eliminated.
- Transfer — the administration may transfer faculty between schools, departments, and colleges of each campus upon one semester's notice and among the Amherst and Boston campuses upon one year's notice.

Students declare SGA candidacies

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

A total of 16 candidates filed petitions last Friday for student government presidential elections.

Friday was the deadline for the Student Government Association election which will be held on March 15 and 16.

Friday was also the deadline for Board of Governor elections. Sixteen candidates filed for this election. There are 15 seats at large and seven residential.

There are no BOG candidates from Orchard Hill, Central or Northeast Areas or from the commuters. These seats will remain empty if no candidates run.

The elections for BOG and interim Senate elections, to fill Senate seats vacated since last semester, will also be held March 15 and 16 along with the presidential election.

There are 27 empty Senate seats. The deadline for filing is Monday, March 7 for the Senate elections.

Presidential candidates must attend a 4:00 meeting today to receive student government campaign funds. A candidate cannot use personal funds for the election. Each presidential candidate will get $136.36. The Senate Governmental Affairs committee, which runs the elections chose this figure by dividing the number of individual candidates and slates (11) by the amount of money allocated for election financing which was $1,500. Governmental Affairs Co-chairperson Marcy Levington said the Committee did not "want to ask the Senate for more money."

To win the election a candidate must get one-third of all votes cast. If one of the 11 candidates does not receive one-third of the vote, a re-election must be held in an electoral college set up along lines set down in the SGA Constitution.

Apartheid discussed at Amherst College

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

Members of the Amherst College Board of Trustees Friday told 400 people of the college's present decision not to divest its stock in corporations operating in South Africa represents the middle ground between the board's concern over the issue of apartheid and its duty to the college as a financial investor.

Five college students and faculty, Amherst alumni and area residents attended the session at the Johnson Chapel on the college campus. The meeting was not a formal meeting of the board, but was designed as a discussion of the college's investment policies in apartheid South Africa.

Amherst College holds $20 million worth of stock in 22 corporations in South Africa.

Ted Cross, the chairman of the investment committee of the trustees told the audience the college's present investment policy in South Africa stems from a decision made by the trustees in October, 1972 that rejected the notion the college should invest for maximum financial gain regardless of such moral issues such as apartheid.

Cross said the college's investment policies officially condemns apartheid, and apply pressure to American corporations in South Africa to adopt the principles of equal pay and desegregation. He also said the board has given the treasurer of Amherst College instructions to solicit responses from corporations in South Africa concerning the adoption of these principles.

Cross said 45 corporations have been contacted, but the number of responses had been "unsatisfactory." He did not give an exact number.

Students opposed to the college's financial presence in South Africa claimed the policy will not internally weaken the apartheid structure, but instead will help sustain the economy of the government of the white minority.

Harold Massey, of the Amherst College Afro-American Society, termed the college's investment policy a "shameful degradation which blatantly reneges on Amherst College's historical commitment to black people."

Trustee Willard Wirtz said he favored the present policy because it may be one of the few ways left of averting a violent civil war in South Africa. He said withdrawal of American corporations from South Africa may precipitate a bloodbath.

Fire claims life

LEVERETT — A fire which destroyed a single family house here early yesterday morning left one resident dead from smoke inhalation.

Thirty-year old Pierre Benoit, of North Leverett Road, was pronounced dead at the scene by Franklin County medical examiner Henry Rys.

Fire departments from here and Montague responded to the blaze at 1:15 a.m. and spent two hours extinguishing it.

Seven killed in gas fog from freight train pile up

YOUNGSTOWN, Fla. (AP) — A freight train piled up near this Florida Panhandle community early Sunday and a ruptured tank car, spewing a cloud of deadly chlorine across a busy highway. Authorities said seven persons were killed and at least 67 were hospitalized.

"It was instant death," said Al Smith, an emergency troubleshooter for the Environmental Protection Agency from Atlanta. "The kind of death we're talking about, it literally burns your lungs up."

Automobile engines apparently stalled as the chlorine cut off the oxygen needed for combustion. Cars careened into roadside ditches. Some motorists fled into a swamp near the tracks, only to be enveloped by the searing greenish-yellow cloud.

Some of the victims lived in nearby homes.

About 47 cars and five locomotives of the 140-car freight were derailed, police said.

Russell Gober of the National Transportation Safety Board said it appeared the derailment aas caused by a broken rail but added that was a tentative conclusion.

The dead were apparently all young adults or teen-agers, said officials at the three hospitals where victims were taken. An admitting officer at one hospital said some of the youths had been raccoon hunting in swamps near the track when the choking cloud swept over them.

Bay County Sheriff's Deputy Tom Loftin said he was driving to the scene before he knew what had happened, when he found people stumbling along the highway, vomiting and screaming for help.

"I didn't really feel it too much, but it had a punch to it," Loftin said. "It was like smelling Clorox, maybe a thousand times worse."

About 2,500 residents of an 80-square-mile area of rural North Florida were evacuated and told it would not be safe to return before Monday. The Florida Highway Patrol blocked U.S. 231 where it parallels the short railroad line betwen Dothan, Ala., and the popular Gulf of Mexico resorts at Panama City.

The highway was blanketed for hours after the 1:30 a.m. CST derailment by the cloud that escaped from the ruptured tank car about 200 yards away.

It was the second Southern disaster involving a derailed freight train in less than 48 hours. In Waverly, Tenn., nine persons died and scores were injured when a propane-loaded railroad car exploded Friday, one day after the train had derailed.

The crew of the Atlanta and St. Andrews Bay Railway train apparently escaped Sunday's wreck without serious injury. Engineer Ray Shores, 53, of Panama City, found a pocket of air in the swamp alongside the tracks and waited eight hours for a helicopter to bring him out.

At Calhoun County Hospital in Blountstown, where 10 persons were treated for lung injuries, Dr. E.B. White said all of them were motorists who ran into the gas and found their cars stalled in the chlorine-filled air.

"The first ones to get here had tried to get out of their car when it first stalled, and realized they wouldn't get far enough on foot," White said. "So they got back in, managed to restart the car, and drove on through it. It stalled a couple of times and they restarted it.

"They drove on, and the driver passed out and had to be replaced. When they got out of the fog they got out and took some deep breaths, then drove on here to the hospital."

Bay County sheriff's Lt. O.J. Gilbert said the evacuees were being housed in emergency shelters in Panama City and other nearby communities.

UMW bosses begin campaign to push contract

WASHINGTON [AP] — United Mine Workers officials began an extensive campaign Sunday to sell their proposed contract, sending 200,000 copies of the controversial agreement to the coalfields.

"We're sending the copies by trucks, airplaces, anyway we can get them to our members," said UMW President Arnold Miller. "I think the rank and file will accept this agreement once they see for themselves what's in it."

Despite vocal opposition from many miners since the tentative agreement was announced Friday night, Miller reiterated his belief that the contract would be accepted by a wide majority.

"I think our members understand that in collective bargaining you don't get everything you want," he said. "This is a contract we can live with. It guarantees our health and pension benefits and takes a step toward speeding up the grievance procedure."

The union's 160,000 striking miners won't vote on the contract until early next week.

While Miller said he does not plan to go to the coalfields and stump for the pact, hundreds of district and local union officials will be attempting to sell the agreement to the miners who will work under its provisions for the next three years.

In addition, the union's public relations firm also plans to promote the proposal with a series of radio and television ads. This media campaign is expected to focus especially upon UMW Districts 29 and 17, in southern West Virginia, the home of nearly 50,000 miners.

The union's educational blitz begins here Monday, when some 400 representatives from the 21 UMW districts, plus a bevy of rank and file members invited by Miller will congregate at a downtown hotel and hear the terms of the contract spelled out. The district representatives will go back home and relay the information — emphasizing the positive aspects — to officers of the local unions within their respective districts.

These local officers then will carry the news to the rank and file which, by then, presumably will have received copies of the proposed agreement. Following this, a 48-hour waiting period ensues before the miners can vote. A bare majority is needed for ratification.

The 130-member Bituminous Coal Operators Association, meanwhile, has its own ratification process. Although the BCOA apparently will not announce its vote until the miners have cast their secret ballots, the coal operators are expected to approve the contract.

The contract provides for a 37 per cent wage increase over the next three years, with an immediate $1-an-hour raise. This would leave most miners' salaries at about $80 a day by 1980, not counting overtime.

The two most controversial areas are the health and pension package and the section which deals with wildcat strikes. During the final hours of last week's negotiations, the coal operators accepted the union demand that the health and pension plans be guaranteed and that the companies' stance be softened in regard to the work stoppages.

In the proposal rejected two weeks ago, the companies wanted to jettison the multi-million-dollar health and pension trust funds and provide their own pension and health plans. The funds now are operated independently and tied to the amount of coal mines. The operators wanted to tie them directly to hours worked, thereby using them as a weapon against wildcat strikes.

Ecological quality needs help

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Americans have done a good job of balancing environmental goals against other national needs, but better ways are needed to judge the value of improved air and water quality, says the chairman of the president's Council on Environmental Quality.

Charles Warren says environmental laws are working well and U.S. life styles are changing in response to "the most crucial elements in defining policy in a democracy — comprehension and concern."

He says, however, that the environment still suffers because of difficulties in comparing economic and environmental costs on a common scale.

"We are engaged in a national search for balance between the environment and the economy, to which energy production is essential," Warren told a recent meeting of the Environmental Industry Council.

"Virtually every criticism of environmental initiatives is, at bottom, economic in nature — the desire to develop and sell energy, a resistance to the cost of power plant stack scrubbers or catalytic converters, the unemployment and loss of income caused by... regulations that close down polluting plants.

"I think our national search for balance is progressing rather well. The development of a national environmental conscienceness has proceeded with astonishing speed. A decade ago, environmental matters were a peripheral issue in political campaigns if they were mentioned at all. These days they tend to crop up in elections at every level."

Some pollution costs are easy to measure, Warren said, citing the kepone incident at Hopewell, Va., that damaged the health of workers, banned fishermen from parts of the James River and Chesapeake Bay and required costly cleanup operations.

But most costs of pollution, he said, defy precise measurement because:

—They involve value judgments that do not translate easily into dollars and cents, such as the historic American love of natural beauty.

—Methods of calculating environmental impact are very crude. Damage may not appear for years, making it difficult to demonstrate the need of preventive measures that may cause an immediate economic impact, Warren said.

Tourists' 'outside scoop'; look but don't leave bus

We Visited San Clemente

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (UPI) — Tour buses rolled past former President Richard Nixon's seaside estate Sunday but visitors only got a quick glimpse of the walls of the home that has been his refuge since he resigned the presidency.

The 20-minute tour spent about 10 minutes on the Coast Guard grounds adjacent to the Nixon compound and two minutes and 15 seconds creeping by La Casa Pacifica itself.

Tourists could see only through an open doorway into a colorfully paved passageway leading into the courtyard.

"It was very interesting but it wasn't long enough," said Agnes Wightman of Cardiff, Calif. "I thought we would see more."

Mrs. Wightman, like many others of the 8,000 tourists said she harbored a hope that she would see Nixon or his wife, Pat.

"We never wanted anyone to think that (they would see Nixon)," said Gale Howe, chairman of the Nixon tour for the sponsoring San Clemente Chamber of Commerce. Howe said, however, "Some people may see him in the afternoon.

"He's really a nice guy. We really like him. He's gotten so much bad publicity. We'd vote for him if he ran again."

Each tour bus had a tape recorded description of the compound describing the Coast Guard grounds, several building including Nixon's office, another office where some 2.5 million letters have been received and guest houses where many foreign dignitaries have stayed.

"History has been made here and you, as the first public tour, are part of that history," said a tape-recorded message played on each bus. "Hasta la vista."

"And we got out of bed at 5:30 for this," one woman, not identified, grumbled.

Another voice added: "You can see more on a picture postcard."

WATCH YOUR STEP

A secret service agent accompanies the tour bus which rolls past the estate of former President Richard Nixon yesterday. This is the first day of tours celebrating San Clemente's 50th Birthday. (UPI)

Like other visitors, these two only got a quick glimpse of the walls of the home that has been the refuge of Nixon since he resigned the presidency. (UPI)

Most of the people seemed impressed, however, but disappointed the tour was so short.

Shirley Wright of San Clemente said, "It was interesting. It's nice to be a part of this history." She said she would have liked to have seen Nixon but didn't expect it.

"I wouldn't show up if I were in his shoes," she said.

Each bus carried a San Clemente police officer and a Secret Service agent to enforce security rules.

The tour was arranged by the San Clemente Chamber of Commerce to highlight a twoday celebration of the town's 50th birthday. Tickets, $2.50 each, went on sale Oct. 3 and sold out within 11 days.

"I don't think there's any question that Nixon's the No. 1 tourist draw here," said Alex Goodman, chamber executive manager. "No matter what they think about Nixon, a lot of history was made here and people want to see it."

Most of the tourists were from commercial tours. About 20 percent traveled on buses rented by the chamber. Buses left in groups of three from San Clemente High School every 10 minutes, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The first four buses were filled mostly with reporters and camera crews.

The 20 minute tour included other points in San Clemente, but the highlight was a peek at the Nixon home with the front door left open.

Other sights included offices of what was once the Western White House, the quarters where dignitaries stayed while visiting Nixon and the Coast Guard station at one entrance to the compound of elegant homes.

Mrs. Nixon provided information used on a tape recording, carried by each bus driver, describing the home and she also helped design a tour program that has color photographs of the Nixons and the entrance to their home.

San Clemente Mayor Donna Wilkinson, who came up with the tour idea last June, said she wanted something special for the anniversary and wrote Nixon about her idea.

Within a week, she said, a Nixon aide said the former chief executive was "honored and delighted" with the idea.

"What Mr. Nixon did is a really nice gesture," Mrs. Wilkinson said. "He may be introverted, but this is quite a nice thing."

Nixon does not receive any money from the tour, she said. Proceeds from the ticket sales will be used to promote San Clemente as a vacation spot and also pay for an all-day birthday party Saturday.

Research may occur in Kittery

CONCORD, N.H. [AP] — U.S. Sen. John Durkin, D-N.H., has asked President Carter to enter the controversy over the potential dangers of working on nuclear submarines at the Portsmouth Naval Shipyard.

Durkin has asked Carter to appoint a panel of experts to coodinate and review a study of possibly higher cancer rates among nuclear employees at the Kittery, Maine yard and eight other shipyards in the country.

A recent report in the Boston Globe said nuclear employees at the shipyard have cancer rates twice the national average.

The national Center for Disease Control will begin a study of the medical histories of nuclear worker, but Durkin says that the president should appoint an independent panel of experts to guide and study the problem.

In a letter to President Carter, Durkin said the possibility that there is a danger in nine shipyards makes the problem a national one which is why he asked for Carter's personal involvement.

Durkin and Sen. William Hathaway, D-Maine, visited the Portsmouth yard last week after the report was published.

Employees of the shipyard want a non-goverment study of the situation. Some have said that they would not trust the results of a government survey of the problem.

Durkin agreed with that assessment in his letter. "I agree a totally independent study is necessary. The previous actions of the Department of Energy, which are certainly open to question, indicate it should not be involved in the selection of the experts."

The Department of Energy conducted a study of medical records of naval personnel, who were connected with nuclear work and concluded that the effect of low level radiation was minimal.

The Democratic senator also urged Carter to direct the Department of Defense and the Department of the Navy to cooperate fully with the CDC and the panel of experts in the investigation.

Late Oswald suspected as Soviet agent

NEW YORK [UPI] — Lee Harvey Oswald may have been a Soviet secret agent while he was doing classified work for a Dallas typesetting firm during the early 1960s, according to an interview in New York magazine.

Author Edward Jay Epstein said Oswald maintained contacts with Soviet officials while he worked during the Cuban missile crisis for the Dallas firm of Jaffar-Chiles-Stovall.

Epstein said the Dallas company "received long lists of names of cities in the Soviet Union, China and Cuba which were typeset and then returned to the Army Map Service."

"Oswald thus had accesss to cities that were U.S. intelligence targets," said Epstein, author of the upcoming book "Legend: The Secret World of Lee Harvey Oswald."

Epstein said Oswald contacted Vitaliy A. Gerasimov at the Soviet embassy in Washington after leaving the Dallas firm. Gerasimov was under surveillance by the FBI at the time for suspected espionage activities.

The writer said Oswald talked to Vladimirovich Kostikov, described by the FBI as a Soviet intelligence officer, during a trip to Mexico in 1963.

He said one of the names found in Oswald's address book was Pavel Voloshin, described by the CIA as a Soviet secret police officer who had been stationed in Asia, Western Europe and Moscow at the same time as Oswald.

Park to testify tomorrow

Tongson Park

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House opens its doors this week to Tongsun Park. The Senate may close its doors on some of the Panama debate. And a committee opens its books on an investigation into drug trafficking.

Park, the South Korean rice dealer who is a central figure in an influence-buying scandal, will testify Tuesday to the House Ethics Committee. At first, the session is to be secret, perhaps for 10 days of questioning of the 42-year-old millionaire. Later, there are to be public sessions.

Leon Jaworski, the former Watergate prosecutor who heads the committee's investigators, said he expects the committee to get information on approximately two dozen current congressmen suspected of violating House rules on acceptance of gifts.

Justice Department officials, meanwhile, say they think they got the full story of Park's role from their interrogation of him in Korea last month. They do not expect his committee testimony to be startingly new.

The Senate appears almost certain to hold a second secret session this week in its debate on the Panama Canal treaties.

Sens. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo., planned to introduce an amendment to block the eventual turning over of a secret Navy communications station to Panama. They said they would ask for a closed session to consider the matter.

Senate Democratic leader Robert Byrd said there is no way to keep the proceedings public. It takes only two senators to set a secret session — one to make the motion and another to second it.

Byrd said he opposes the Helms-Wallop amendment because it is another "killer" clause designed to make the treaties unacceptable to Panama.

The Senate already has one "killer" amendment pending, by Sen. James Allen, D-Ala., to give the president the power to keep U.S. troops in Panama beyond the year 2000. A vote on that is expected Tuesday.

The Senate Intelligence Committee, which probed allegations that friends and relatives of Panamanian leader Omar Torrijos were involved in drug trade, is scheduled Tuesday to release an edited version of secret testimony.

Byrd told reporters any revelations in the edited transcript are likely to have little effect on the treaties' chances for ratification.

The Senate Judiciary Committee will consider the nomination of Justice Department official Benjamin Civiletti as deputy attorney general.

What might otherwise have been routine is being used by Republicans to try to determine whether administration officials knew if Rep. Joshua Eilberg, D-Pa., was the target of an investigation by U.S. Attorney David W. Marston of Philadelphia when Marston was fired earlier this year.

Civiletti testified that he had no reason to believe Eilberg was being investigated. But Russell Baker Jr., an aide to Civiletti, said earlier in sworn testimony that he had told his boss that Eilberg phoned the White House to ask for Marston's dismissal.

Miller to accept post at Federal Reserve

PROVIDENCE [AP] — G. William Miller, now chairman of Textron Corp., has no intention of declining President Carter's nomination to head the Federal Reserve Board, a Textron spokesman said yesterday.

Robert S. Eisenhauer made his comment in response to an editorial in the New York Times asking Miller to step aside because of questions concerning his firm's dealings with Iran.

Miller will appear before the Senate Banking Committee as scheduled tomorrow and will answer all questions posed to him, Eisenhauer said.

The newspaper said "A cloud hangs over Mr. Miller's head that cannot be blown away by telephone calls from the White House urging senators to speed the nomination."

Cancer x-ray treatment may cause epidemic

[HERSAY NEWS SERVICE] — A quarter of a million women who underwent X-ray screening for breast cancer may in 15 or 20 years fall victim to the worst epidemic of the disease in medical history.

This is the warning from Doctor Irwin Ross, who also told a House subcommittee that millions of Americans being treated by radiologists for minor conditions have already ended up with thyroid cancer, breast cancer and other diseases.

Ross's findings were disputed, however, by National Cancer Institute director Doctor Arthur Upton.

Upton claimed that some women might get breast cancer as a result of the mass screening program of the American Cancer Society, but, he added, the benefits outweigh risks by (quote) "five or six to one."

Brooke anti-Canal pact

BOSTON [UPI] — Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass., says if the vote on ratification of the Panama Canal treaties was held today, he would vote against the agreements.

Brooke said, in an interview published yesterday in the Boston Herald American, that he was concerned about financial aspects of the treaties, including a guarantee that the United States would assume the Canal's deficit.

The pact also would allow the Panama Canal Commission to borrow power more than $40 million, might provide for a $345 million foreign aid package and would waive the United States' right to collect $18 million in interest the nation now collects.

"The loss of $18 million interest can affect the economy," Brooke said.

He graded the Carter Administration a C-minus and complained that the public lacks confidence in Carter's ability to govern.

Nursing home workers stage demonstration

NEWTON [UPI] — A nursing home chain that owes nine Massachusetts communities $580,000 in back taxes was the target of a weekend demonstration by about 100 hospital workers and members of Massachusetts Fair Share.

Protestors gathered Saturday outside headquarters of the chain, Idak, which the attorney general's office has named as one of a number of nursing home operators under investigation for allegedly violating state laws.

A special unit in the office has been checking records of Idak and the other corporations since last year, Assistant Attorney General Thomas Kiley said.

"It's apparent that tax delinquency and other problems with tax liabilities is no more unusual in the nursing home business than in any other industry," Kiley said.

Representatives of Fair Share said Idak, which owns 27 nursing homes across the state, has three-year-old tax bills in eight towns and cities.

Journalist scores well

PAWTUCKET, R.I. [UPI] — Robert McNamee has found the secret to scoring well on the standardized college test in English composition. Wait until you are out of college to take it.

As a bit of fun last December, the 4-year veteran reporter of the Evening Times in Pawtucket took the English exam prepared by the College Board for high school students.

Last week, McNamee, 25, found out he scored a 720 on a 200 to 800 scale. It meant he had done better than about 94 per cent of those taking the test.

"A few reporters said they were going to ask for a recount," McNamee said Sunday. "Let's just say I'm not known as the best speller around here. They didn't think I'd be able to get through the essay.

In an unprecedented move, the U.S. Department of Labor, has decided to implement an employment training program for women.

The Labor Department, for the first time in its 57-year history, says it will design, develop and monitor several pilot projects to improve the training and employment of women.

Medic's loss of license sets precedent

BOSTON [AP] — The Massachusetts medical licensing board has revoked the license of a Lynn physician for negligence, the first time in history the state has taken such action for malpractice.

In an unconnected action, the state's Board of Registration in Dentistry suspended the license of Hyannis dentist, Dr. Raymond V. Martin, after finding him guilty of "deceit, malpractice and gross misconduct" in his practice.

Another Hyannis medical practitioner, Dr. Paul Foraste, an ophthalmologist, has been cleared by the state Board of Registration and Discipline in Medicine of a charge he refused to treat the serious eye infection of a child on Medicaid.

The medical licensing board revoked the license of Dr. Robert Thomson Breed after the 62-year-old physician was found guilty of performing unnecessary and hazardous gynecological surgery, improper prescription of antibiotics and poor diagnosis and treatment.

George Annas, a licensing board member and consumer lawyer, said Breed's revocation is one of only three or four instances nationally in which physicians have lost their licenses for malpractice.

In his recommendations to the full board last October, Annas, serving as hearing officer, charged that "Breed views surgery on the reproductive organs as an appropriate response to teenage promiscuity and middle-aged depression and alcoholism."

The six board members made their unanimous vote an explicit warning to the state's 15,000-member medical profession.

In detailing instances of unnecessary surgery by Breed, particularly hysterectomies, the board spelled out for the first time what it considers proper medical care.

"This case begins to set up guidelines on what kinds of things we expect doctors to do in such cases," said Annas in an interview. "It gives doctors a lot more guidance than ever before about gynecological surgery."

In his recommendations, Annas, director of the Boston University for Law and Health Sciences, said Breed's surgery was "most universally explained not by medical indications — but by the social problems of his patients.

"Almost all were branded as promiscuous, alcoholic, drug addicts or severely depressed. Their reproductive organs were described as useless."

The revocation was based on an examination of the histories of 12 Medicaid patients treated by Breed while he was the most active surgeon at Revere Memorial Hospital.

His lawyer, Peter F. Brady of Lynn said Saturday that he would appeal the board's decision to the Superior Court. Brady said "the government failed to prove their case," and challenged the board's jurisdiction.

from our perspective

Concert veto justified

Every year the Student Senate seems to confirm its collective incompetence with its handling of the spring concert. Last year students were unsure there would be any concert at all, as no performers had been signed with only six weeks before the concert was scheduled to be held.

This year the concert issue has offered yet another example of the senate's slightly warped form of logic. In the same night the senate rejected a proposed five dollar fee to subsidize the campus bus service, it passed a spring concert that would cost students three dollars to attend. See, you come out two dollars ahead...?

Student Government Association Co-presidents Marion Batiste and Jon Hite were quite justified in their recent veto of the senate's concert plans, which will require the body to reconsider the funding plan for the event. At this time it is difficult to defend a three dollar charge when no talent has been secured.

The proposed format, a Black American Music Festival, has met with some opposition, but is actually one of the few bright spots in the senate's effort. The idea of having a concert with a theme is a good one, and Black American music is a particularly good theme to start with. It is difficult to buy the argments of those insisting that the concert have music for "everyone". Black American music is an extremely diverse music-form which carries appeal for most people.

One factor which apparently encouraged the senate to accept a concert with a fee was the possibility of Stevie Wonder's presence at the event. It seems unlikely that many students would have objected to paying three or more dollars to hear Wonder perform.

Last fall the senate spent $450 to send a representative to Los Angeles in the hopes of securing Stevie Wonder for the concert. Not only did that move raise false expectations in the minds of the senators, but it ended up in the total loss of that money. Considering how long it has been since Wonder appeared in concert, and some serious doubts over whether the stadium could be used for a Wonder concert (which the senate apparently never considered until i'ts representative returned), that expenditure was rather a folly.

Perhaps the senate will now arrive at a way of funding the Black Music Festival without charging students, or at least offer a more complete justification for the fee.

Graphics grotesque

To the Editor:

Today, I was in a Men's Room. On the walls of that Men's Room, there was much written and drawn. Most of it was the usual assortment of sexist male fantasies and 'humour': there was the woman with legs spread apart, her tongue lolling out of her mouth spastically; there were life-sized portraits of engorged, multi-veined penises, all in various stages of stimulation. You had your tits-and-ass, your names and numbers. But one drawing especially caught my attention. It was a particularly graphic account of a woman, on all fours, assumably offering herself and all her apertures to any man who so desired. I swear to God, it was so disgusting, I do not think I will ever be able to rid myself of that image.

Yet, the thing that bothers me the most, is that I know that if I were to walk into almost any Men's Room in the U.S.A. be it the University of Massachusetts or Joes' Diner, I would probably come across equally, if not more lurid, sexist, sick acts.

Approaching quickly is International Women's Week, shortly thereafter, the Second Annual Men's Conference will be held here, at the University of Massachusetts. I look forward to both events [being a man, particularly the latter] for it is during events such as these, that people can begin to deal with phenomena such as the aforementioned, and all that they represent.

Bob Kadar

Actions, not laws

To the Editor:

This is in response to Mark Alper's letter to the Editor, which appeared on Thursday and was subtitled Nazis Pose Real Threats.

Mr. Alper seems in favor of some sort of federal legislation which would prohibit Nazi organizations their freedom of speech because their politics are "very dangerous".

My question to Mr. Alper is what will keep the government from using this law to attack groups on the left [Young Socialist Alliance, Revolutionary Student Brigade, N.O.W., N.A.A.C.P., Revolutionary Communist Youth Brigade, etc.] who the government decides is, in their opinion, "very dangerous"?

This type of legislation does not eliminate what Nazis represent. It is in reality a step towards them, that is a step towards fascism! It allows the government to pick and choose who shall be silenced. The government can label any group that is criticizing them as "very dangerous" and clamp down on them.

The way to deal with Nazis and derelict fanatics of their kind is through massive countermobilization of the enemies of fascism — trade unions, Blacks, Jewish organizations, and other oppressed and persecuted groups.

In the case of a Nazi march in Skokie, Illinois, this would mean organizing a broad, united counter-demonstration. The Nazis can be set back by showing in action that the streets belong not to them but to the people of this country.

Lee Martindale
Young Socialist Alliance

Reconsider concert

To the Editor:

It was brought to our attention, in the Collegian of February 23, that the Spring Concert will be a Black American Music Festival, as so voted by the Student Senate. We feel that this type of concert is very limited in its representation of musical tastes on campus. Why cater to only a small minority of those whom the concert is supposed to be staged for?

Isn't it more logical to put on a concert that would be well attended by all groups on campus rather than risking a financial disaster by turning many people off to the idea of going? One case in point is last year's spring concert which appeared to be a huge success, while at the same time presenting varied types of music.

We feel confident that our views represent the feeling of the majority of the student body.

In view of the above statements we call on the Student Senate to reconsider their decision on the content of the Spring Concert.

Ed Hudson
and 20 others

Exposure good

To the Editor:

The University of Massachusetts will be cheating itself if the proposed Black American Music Festival is not held this Spring. The theme of the concert would surely be appreciated by a great, but often unrepresented part of the community. The concert will also give exposure of this music to many who would otherwise remain ignorant of its beauty.

Linda Goldsten

Concert should represent all

To the Editor:

We are writing with regard to the Student Senate's decision that the spring concert would this year be a Black American Music Festival. We were under the impression that the conception of a University Spring Concert was for the entire University. To limit the concert performers to one certain racial group and, or musical interest is certainly not to appeal to the entire student body. Why is it that the Student Senate has deemed that the format for previous concerts is no longer acceptable? In past years representatives from several musical fields, including Black American music, played and we would venture to say that this is the best way that the concert could be presented. To allocate general student funds for a concert which will only appeal to an isolated group of musical tastes is certainly unfair and inconsiderate. The idea of a Black American Music Festival is not a bad one but, to put it on the level of the University Concert is certainly to put it out of perspective.

We feel that the Student Senate should seriously reconsider their plans for the University Concert, as it is their responsibility to represent the desires of the entire student body.

Mitch Favreau
Rick Foster
Jim Legg

Bob Melia

Self-government has always meant exactly that, governing ourselves. But some think that the student government is in the process of rendering self-government obsolete. This undermining of participation and accountability is occurring through the increasing bureaucratization and centralization of student government. This stratification creates a self-recruiting and self-perpetuating elite, which dominates the informational flow and the decision-making process.

In this context, Senator Adam Auster's resignation speech is important for Auster resigned in protest of this bureaucratization. Auster offers some insightful criticism of student government, and much of what follows is taken from Auster's speech.

Adam resigned because he believed that the SGA-SOP style of organizing is fundamentally defective, because it is "top-down" organizing, bureaucratic organizing, which has as its first principle that change must be envisioned, organized and implemented by the few "experts" who manipulate the bureaucratic structure. Adam adheres to "grassroots" organizing; the idea that change must move from the bottom up, and begin outside the SGA bureaucracy. In an oversimplified form, the differences are between bureaucracy as master and bureaucracy as servant. With this introduction out of the way, here is Adam's speech, as edited by me. He begins with a prediction about what bureaucratic organization will give us in the near future:

"First, there will be a brand new package of legislative promises for the Student Senate to vote on. This package will include proposals to change the SGA's name, its structure, and very little else.

"Second, we can expect to see a series of high-exposure, media-intensive campaigns around various economic issues on campus, such as tuition, rents and fees. These campaigns will have so much money and expertise poured into them by the SGA-SOP complex that the campus will appear to be covered with their posters, emersed in their catchy slogans, and deluged by their press releases. But it is precisely because these campaigns will be so professionally designed and heirarchy orchestrated that they will fail to include and involve the students on this campus.

"Finally, in May, we will be able to watch the SGA-SOP activists hire themselves to

Confessions of a Professional Eater

By MARK LECCESE

Paul Provost didn't want his picture to appear with this story. "I don't think they should know what I look like," he explained.

Provost isn't a CIA agent. He isn't a Mafia informer. He isn't even an eccentric billionaire.

He's the restaurant critic for Springfield and Four Counties West magazine, and when he works, he likes to remain anonymous.

"The restaurant shouldn't make special preparations for me because I'm a critic," he says. "It wouldn't be fair to my readers."

Unlike some restaurant critics, Provost pays for all his meals and makes his reservation under an alias. "One time I made reservations under the name "Rosewall.' I thought I should go in wearing my tennis shoes," he said, referring to tennis star Ken Rosewall.

Springfield magazine is a four-year-old publication that resembles other big city magazines (such as Boston and New York) in its format.

Provost started writing for Springfield about a year ago, and he had no previous magazine writing experience. He still considers restaurant reviewing an avocation. Full-time, Provost is an associate professor of philosophy at American International College in Springfield.

"It was living in New York that started my interest in restaurants," he says. "Variety and quality levels there are hard to match. No other city in the country comes close to it — except maybe for San Francisco."

Springfield Area

Well, we probably could have guessed that New York was a center of good cuisine. But that's four hours away. Are the local restaurants any good?

Yes. When it comes to quality restaurants, the greater Springfield area "fares pretty well," according to Provost. (Provost notes that in Springfield, Amherst is considered part of the greater Springfield area.)

Provost asserts there are some good restaurants between Amherst and Springfield, although he declined to name his favorites. And if one is willing to venture out into the Berkshires, Provost says there are some very good restaurants there, mostly in Inns.

There are over 200 hundred restaurants that Provost lists in his run down of the local eating places in the listings of the Dining-out section in Springfield magazine.

Choosing

We all know that there is no thrill like discovering a restaurant that is simply wonderful — and no frustration like spending good money at one that is simply awful.

First of all, reputation is not that important. Good restaurants may not have made a name for themselves yet, and restaurants with long-standing reputations may not be as good as they used to be. "After all, reputation is not what one eats," says Provost.

Finding a place with a quiet atmosphere will help you enjoy your meal much more. Crowd scenes may be all right at basketball games, but not in a restaurant. "I think restaurants have a responsibility to the customer not to be overbooked. They should limit their reservations to what that can handle," says Provost.

Service should be attentive, but not fawning, Provost feels. "I don't like the waiter peering over my shoulder seeing if he can anticipate my desire for the salt shaker."

And money? Well, price should be no object if you're looking for unique, quality food. "That kind of price can be justified when the quality is high enough," says Provost. "I'm willing to pay a high price to be insured quality, fresh or hard-to-find ingredients, and a good atmosphere."

Getting the Most

"When I'm dining out, I'm very tempted by any dish I can't easily prepare at home. I usually stay away from steak and potatoes," says Provost.

Like a chain, a meal is only as strong as its weakest part. The entree is not the entire meal, according to Provost, and a truly good dinner has all quality ingredients: well-made soup, fresh salad, interesting appetizers, and crisp (not steamed) vegetables. And if the after-dinner coffee is lousy, it can spoil the meal.

To enjoy a meal fully, says Provost, you must "eat attentively. At a leisurely pace. Eating food or drinking wine is not something you do with a single sense. You filter them through all your modalities of perception."

But eating too fast to fully enjoy a meal is a problem that is "inescapable, given the kind of society we are," says Provost. "Monday through Friday, the face of our days require that we eat quickly. Quite a lot of people go out for weekend dinners, or special event dinners, like anniversaries. This is a mushrooming phenomenom."

The Critic

"I try to inform my reader on what they can expect," says Provost. While a concert review tells you what you missed, a restaurant review tells you what you may be missing; and you don't have to wait a year for the restaurant to come back to town.

Provost tries to visit each restaurant he writes about at least twice: under calm weekday conditions, and under the hectic conditions of weekend nights and Sunday afternoons, when the staff is under pressure.

"Some critics would write a biography of a single meal. But you can't judge on a single meal." Provost consolidates his experiences at a restaurant into a single, clearly written review. His prose is lucid and straightforward. "I detest the Time magazine style. You could call it 'cavalier,'" he says.

On Having Class

So there you are, you've got a new girl friend, and her parents are taking you out to dinner. The trouble is, you've never been any place the waiters wear ties except for Friendly's. But you've got to conduct yourself with class. So you put on your shirt with the button-down collar, pull a crew neck sweater over it, and ready yesterday's New York Times. Here are a few rules to follow when you get to the restaurant:

1) Pull out the chair for your girl friend — but don't yank it out from under her as she starts to sit down. Some malcontents in your dorm may think that's funny, but your girl friend won't.

2) Don't put your elbows on the table — Or your knees. Or ankles. Or any other major joints.

3) Read the menu to yourself — And don't move your lips when you read.

4) Unfold the napkin and spread it on your lap — Don't stick it under your collar like the Three Stooges. Don't blow your nose in it. And don't steal it.

5) Eat your salad with the outside fork — Eating salad with a spoon is not considered acceptable.

6) Chew with your mouth closed — You may open it to insert food. It is considered in poor taste to talk with your mouth full, especially when you're eating.

7) What to do when the wine comes — The waiter will show you the label. Don't say, "Yeah. So?" If it is the wine you ordered, nod your head. The waiter will then offer you the cork. Sniff it to see if the wine is bad, and test to see that it is moist. Do not bite it. Dinner is coming. When the waiter pours a mouthful of wine into your glass, do not say, "C'mon ya pansy. I can hold more than that."

8) Don't drag the fork across your teeth — Also, don't drag your fork across anyone else's teeth.

9) Raise one finger to call your waiter — Raise to eye level. Any lower, and people will think you're pointing at that fat lady next to you. Any higher and they'll think you're calling a cab.

10) Tip 15 per cent — Don't yell, "Hey, buddy," and press your tip into the waiter's hand. And don't leave it under an upside-down water glass.

Provost On Wine

Wine, whether with a meal or by itself, should be enjoyed leisurely. When drinking critically, it is important to concentrate, evaluate each wine, and ask yourself questions while you drink.

Comparative tasting is the first step to understanding the differences in wines. "You can't really begin until you start comparative testing," Provost says. "Start by tasting maybe five wines of the same type, and taste them one after another. Your perceptual memory is very short. You can't do it over five days."

It is no longer true that the best wines are French wines. According to Provost, "California is where the action is now." They lead the world in quality white wines. The best red wines, however, still come from the French vineyards. Upper New York State, Provost says, is doing "some very interesting experiments."

To taste and compare wines critically, follow these guidelines:

1) Hold the wine up to the light and examine it. Good wines will have a brilliance in color. They should be very clear; a cloudy wine is a bad wine.

2) Swirl the wine in the glass. Do not hold the glass by the bowl, but by the stem of the base: Holding it by the bowl warms the wine, and releases too much of the aroma and bouquet. The proper way to release the bouquet is to swirl the wine against the sides of the glass. Smell the wine carefully. The aroma is the character of the grape, and the bouquet is the smell the wine gains as it matures. The bouquet should remind you of the odor of flowers, fruits or berries. This is the way you can make distinctions between the wines.

3) Take a sip of the wine. Swirl it along your palate. Taste is a subjective sense, and you make your own decision on the wine.

Contrary to the current trend, there are "natural food and wine affinities," says Provost. For example, red wine goes best with meat, and white wine with fish.

Certain dishes, however, fall in between these categories. For example, chicken goes well with either wine.

ng the SGA 'junta'

work over the summer analyzing the failures of the past semester and planning for the failures of the next....

"I originally involved myself in student unionization because I want to work for the students on this campus. As time went on, I even became willing to work for the Student Senate, because it seemed that doing that was a realistic if roundabout way to work for the whole student community. But I have discovered that this is not possible, and that what masquerades as work for the student body or the Student Senate is actually work to maintain and support a third group, often at the expense of the Student Senate and of students in general. This feels dishonest to me because this third group, which only holds its privileged position by its ability to pretend that it respects you, serves you, and is responsible to you, actually feels disdain and scorn for you and for the average student. I call this group the SGA junta.

"I would like to describe this group to you further in case anyone is confused about who I am referring to. But before I do that, I would like to note that over the years the student unionization movement has attracted some of the most intelligent, talented, and caring people on this campus. Most of them quit after one or two semesters. But a few do not, and the Student Senate still employs several people who I feel privileged to have worked with. I hope that these people — and the very new recruits to the movement — will not feel hurt by what I am about to say."

Here Adam describes how a few people control all the important positions. He continues by saying that this handful centralizes power and manipulates other senators for their own ego-gratification. He says that these people:

"wield power and who hold you and most of the other students on this campus in deep cynical contempt.

"You really should hear the way your "leaders" talk about you when you are not around. If you should happen to agree with them, you are called a "sheep". If you should happen to disagree with them, you are called a "pig" or a "pussy". The Student Senate has often been referred to as a zoo. The SGA junta makes it sound more like a barnyard.

As a member of the Student Senate, I am ashamed that some of the people are Senate leaders. As a member of the SOP Board I am ashamed that some of them work for the Organizing Project".

Adam then told people that if they felt they wanted to use the SGA-SOP complex to effect change, that they should first clean it up by a wholesale change to staff and leadership. He ended with the claim that "student apathy" is caused by "student government and a call that senators "initiate a genuine dialogue with the students on this campus. Not a dialogue to sell them a slick, pre-packaged "year of the union" plan, but a dialogue to discover what your fellow students want, and what they are ready for.

Some of you may be surprised to find that what you call their "apathy" is actually a justifiable boredom with student government politics, and that the students on this campus are as open to change and as ready to try new things as any other group of good people anywhere."

Pierpont residents are being presented with an edict, commanding them to live in their dormitory for a maximum of four semesters (in their freshman and sophomore years) by the "humanistic programmers" of the Community Development Center. The reasons for this action still remain somewhat unclear. Students became aware of this decision through a quirk of fate, someone overheard a meeting of staff people. One might guess that if the news of the policy change hadn't leaked out, it would probably have been implemented without any official explanation, over the summer months, when residents are at home and are dispersed, incapable of direct collective response.

Once again an area of service that is for students, and paid for by students, is initiating a policy change without even the consideration of consulting those directly involved. This is clearly against the spirit and written text of the Board of Trustees Statement On University Governance (T73-093) about policy formation in areas of primary student concern, where it is written that proper consultation should occur on campus issues with those primarily responsible; in this case the residents of Pierpont.

CDC, or in case acronyms and alphabet soup labels for administrative agencies prove confusing, the Community Development Center, recently received criticism in the Collegian concerning their role in the fiasco of the opening day festivities. Their response was to lambaste the criticizer with strong accusations questioning his honesty and motives in laying blame on their organization. Fortunately, I am in a position to document some of the charges concerning heads of residence incompetency and lack of concern for incoming students and parents. Heads of residences, on the whole, were fairly cooperative and did not obstruct the opening process. But some heads of residences did hold spaces for people who "deserved their singles," keeping counselors on their floors in spaces which could hold two persons (keeping designated singles for upper class people), and who lied to protect those spaces. Some heads of residences took their staff to an amusement park on the weekend preceding opening day, and did not service those students whose parents work during the week, and could only bring them up on the weekend. One head of resident tried to refuse people from out-of-state, entrance into their dorm (even to drop off clothes, etc.) until Tuesday at high noon, the official opening time. When hundreds of students and parents were waiting several hours for room assignments after the dorms were filled, not one C.D.C. representative was present to help counsel or answer questions at the area housing office in Southwest, leaving student workers to bear the brunt of the crisis. Resolving disputes with heads of residences who were clearly holding back spaces was like pulling teeth, where it should have been C.D.C.'s job to see a smooth assignment process within the individual dormitories. C.D.C. shouldn't claim total responsibility for the housing crisis of September 1977, but they should accept what is proper criticism and not immaturely accuse people of total dishonesty and ignorance.

The Community Development Center, was created to add a level of programing to the dormitories that will be conducive of an atmosphere for greater educational experience and where possible, to create positive social interaction and a sense of community. Pierpont has always been a thorn in the side of the administration. Since the university is no longer supposed to act as our surrogate parents (called en loco parentis), Pierpont with its non-traditional mores and attitudes and strong community spirit represents an extreme that perhaps is too much a progressive reversal of the previously patriarchal structure. In the late sixties and early seventies student activism was full of vitality throughout most of the university, and any attempts to encroach upon an activist dorm, such as Pierpont, would not have been well received. As attitudes among students have somewhat swung back toward the Wally Cleaver mind set, Pierpont becomes an easier target for regressive tactics. To C.D.C., Pierpont is a symbol of the recent past, and worse than that, the accused center of drug traffic on campus (apologies to Baker, you're next!). C.D.C. will not admit that their major purpose is to break up this symbol of what was, and what still is, and is covering their action in the cloak of "housing option reform." Other dormitories have had far fewer returning students and when housing options were suggested by students for these dorms in the past, it was C.D.C. who opposed them, respecting the rights of the returning students.

Pierpont is also a place where many student radicals have been nutured. This fall, when residents found beds being put in their lounges, without prior consultation with the students, they acted to protect their interest in maintaining the expected standard of having common space, an integral part of their community experience. Perhaps, C.D.C. is acting to put an end to this bastion of resistance to deteriorating standards of residence, for some political reasons.

George Orwell in his 1984 concept of doublespeak could appropriately use the name "Community Development Center" to illustrate his idea. One might think that the purpose of such an organization was to develop centers of community. After a closer examination, one sees a contradiction between their stated purpose and their actions.

Aerospace conglomerate head traces aggressiveness to youth

HARTFORD [AP] — The chairman of United Technologies Corp. says his aggressive business approach probably dates back to his youth when he was envious of those who had their own bedroom to sleep in.

Harry Jack Gray, head of the multi-billion dollar aerospace conglomerate, lost his parents before he was 10 years old.

"My sister took over raising me. She had the option to put me in an orphan home...She let me live in her house.

"A lot of people have something other than private quarters. I had a little closet which was mine and I had a rolling bed. I'd roll it out in the dining room every night and that's where I'd sleep. Then, in the morning, I'd roll it up and put it back.

"I guess the aggressiveness started there. I talked to other people and they all had bedrooms. I didn't have a bedroom," Gray said in a recent interview.

But later other factors helped mold his future.

"You can't really say adversity is a reason why you develop. A lot of people have had adversity and have done nothing," he said.

Gray, who turned UTC from a $2 billion aerospace company to a $5.5 billion industrial conglomerate, now lives in a big white colonial home in nearby Farmington that is full of bedrooms.

The farmer's son from Milledgeville Crossings, Ga., who worked his way through college and then held a series of sales jobs, now has a mahogany paneled office on the top floor of UTC headquarters in Hartford. The office tea service is silver, the tops of tables are leather inlaid with gold stampings.

He is one of the nation's best paid executives. Last year, Gray's salary and bonus from UTC came to $667,500. He has enough company stock to make its biggest stockholder. The company itself is Connecticut's largest private employer.

Since joining the company he has realigned its organization, brought it into new businesses and reduced its dependence on the military. He also renamed it from the firm's former title, United Aircraft. In some corners of Wall Street, however, the new name is "Harry Gray's company."

From age 8, Gray grew up in the suburbs of Chicago. He had no particular ambition then, he says. It wasn't until Gray's college days that his ambitions became galvanized in a specific direction.

"There's got to be a better way to get through the system," he told himself midway through the University of Illinois. At the time he was unloading groceries in a Chicago store for $10 a week.

Impressed with his speed, his employer promoted him to the wrapping department where customers tipped when they got good service.

"You had to have a little salesmanship. You didn't just drop it in in a big," he said.

Recommended elective operations not confirmed by second opinions

NEW YORK (UPI) — The need for one of four elective operations could not be confirmed when patients in a "second opinion" experiment asued another doctor's advice, Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Greater New York reported Sunday.

Simply put, in four of four cases, Doctor A said, "Operate"; in one of four cases, Doctor B said, "Don't."

Elective surgery is any operation that is non-emergency and not done to correct a life-threatening abnormality.

The report, based on a program launched in 1976, covered 1,500 cases in which patients took advantage of an option to get a second doctor's opinion free. New York's pioneer program is part of the "second opinion" movement taking aim at the nation's operating rooms for a dual purpose: reduce costs and improve the quality of medical care by curbing unnecessary elective operations.

A congressional subcommittee in 1976 said 2.4 million unnecessary operations added more than $4 billion a year to the healthcare bill.

The figure would be bigger now, fattened by inflation and the higher cost of hospital care, up about 17 per cent a year.

The removal of tonsils and gynecological procedures, notably hysterectomies, are considered by authoritative surgical critics to be among the most frequent unnecessary elective operations.

In the New York study, second opinion showed the first doctor's recommendation for surgery was not confirmed in 27 percent of the cases.

In the obstetrical-gynecological cases, recommendations were not confirmed in 28.6 percent of the cases; in orthopedic cases, 33.2 per cent; in ear, nose and throat (tonsil), 26.6 percent.

D. Eugene Sibery, executive vice president of the New York's Blue Cross-Blue Shield, the nation's largest "Blue," said each elective operation not performed saved $1,500 in hospital fees.

He regrets, however, that so few subscribers availed themselves of the free surgical consultation.

This is a trouble with second opinion programs across the country. Healthcare consumers, reports show, are reluctant in many places to question a doctor who looks at them and says, "That ought to come out."

But some state governments and the federal government are betting on the second opinion strategem to reduce unnecessary surgery — and ballooning hospital bills — for Medicaid and Medicare recipients.

Some evidence:

1. Second opinions now are mandatory for Medicaid recipients in Massachusetts for certain elective operations.

The United States Department of Health, Education and Welfare, in the biggest test of second opinion as a cost cutting tactic, has awarded grants in New York and Michigan to push "second opinion" on elective operations among millions of Medicare beneficiaries over the next three years.

Trampolining labelled most dangerous sport

DALLAS (UPI) — According to an Indiana orthopedic surgeon, one of the most dangerous sports in the world is being practiced in the nation's schools, recreation centers and even backyards without adequate safety precautions.

The sport is trampolining, and Dr. George Rapp called it "a disaster to the family and the state."

In a speech before the American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons Saturday, Dr. Rapp said the trouble with the trampoline was "that anyone can get on them and bounce and flip and turn somersaults — but they may break their necks in the process."

Rapp reported on 34 cases of paralysis and three deaths and said most of the injuries occurred when the trampolinists were attempting somersaults or were using the wrong equipment for more complicated tricks.

"American's No. 1 all-around gymnast was killed a few years ago when he was attempting a double somersault at a camp on mini-tramp," the Indianapolis doctor said. "Certainly he had the skill."

Rapp said he became interested in trampoline-related injuries when a son's friend was paralyzed in a trampoline accident at a neighborhood gym. Since that time he has successfully banned competitive trampoline events at 35 high schools in Indiana.

"When I first started looking into trampoline injuries, the manufacturers claimed the sport was no more dangerous than basketball," he said. "Well there are very few basketball players who break their necks on the court."

News from home aids Cosmonauts attempting to break space flight record

MOSCOW (UPI) — Psychologists are helping to keep the Soyuz 26 cosmonauts in shape to challenge the U.S.-held manned spaceflight record by feeding them news from earth.

Lt. Gen. Georgy Beregovoi, head of the cosmonauts' training center, said in a weekend interview with the official Tass news agency the crew's continued efficiency depended on "how successfully (work) loads alternate with rest hours."

Beregovoi said cosmonauts Yuri Romanenko, 33, and Georgy Grechko, 46, refuse any form of rest except sleep aboard the orbiting Salyut 6 laboratory so psychologists had to find other ways to "relieve tension."

"One such method, checked in previous long flights in Salyut stations, is that several times within the day the crew receive different news from earth which remove from them the feeling of separation from home," Beregovoi said.

Romanenko and Grechko already have broken the Soviet record of 63 days in space and next Saturday, if all goes well, will equal the U.S. record of 84 days set Feb. 8, 1974 by three astronauts aboard Skylab 4.

Psychologists apparently are trying to avoid the problems that beset the Soyuz 21 cosmonauts, who cut short what was expected to be an attempt at a record space stay after 49 days in August 1976.

The Soviet press reported shortly before the end of their mission that they were suffering from "sensory deprivation" and ground control was trying to help them overcome this with increased news from home.

"Psychologists believe that most important for the cosmonauts' high spirits is different news from scientific laboratories, which already process the materials of experiments carried out by Romanenko and Grechko," Beregovoi said.

But, he said, "news from home, from relatives and friends," also was considered important.

"Once a week," he said, ' the cosmonauts' families come to the room of the group of communication with the crew. Having learned the latest news (from home), having slightly reprimanded their children for accidental threes in school, having praised them for successes on a ski trail, the cosmonauts' spirits grow higher."

Under the grading system in Soviet schools, five is excellent and three is passing.

Author Elie Wiesel speaks in SUB

Author Elie Wiesel, survivor of the holocaust in Germany in the 1940's, speaks tonight in the Student Union Ballroom at 8.

Wiesel's parents and other members of his family were killed in Nazi concentration camps, which he describes in Night, an autobiography of his year in Auschwitz.

Wiesel's novels deal with Jewish religious history, and in particular, man's struggle for faith in an absurd world.

Wiesel has also translated hidden diaries of Jewish prisoners who carried corpses to the crematoria before their own deaths.

The lecture is co-sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program and Resources Judaica.

Rangers continue attempts to recapture hippopotamus

SANTA ANA, Calif. (UPI) — Five tired rangers from a wild animal park remained hidden around a lake in the green Luguna Hills of Orange County Sunday hoping a hippopotamus named Bubbles would surface.

They have been there off and on for a week since the two-ton Bubbles escaped from a corral at Lion Country Safari, waddled through two fences and headed for the hills.

When she found the lake, she sound sanctuary.

The rangers, three of them armed with tranquilizer dart guns, were hiding in the reeds around the lake hoping she would come out to graze. But hippos spend the daylight hours under water and feed at night.

"Bubbles was very active in the lake last night," Mrs. Jo Schetter, the park's public relations officer, said. "But she didn't come out of the water."

Bubbles broke away from the park for the third time last Sunday. The first two times, in the company of her calf, she was caught, tranquilized and taken back — once carried back in the scoop of a bulldozer.

"The rangers are staying out there for 24 hours as long as there's no ftg and no danger to themselves.

"They're getting tired and very much overworked at this point. There's only a limited number of people trained in this situation. It's not as though we could call out the National Guard," Mrs. Schetter said.

On a couple of occasions the rangers, with their four-wheel drive vehicles and dart guns, had to leave when fog rolled in at night. They don't want Bubbles getting behind them when they can't see her.

Hippos have been known to bite small boats in half.

Since Bubbles' escape through the fences, one of them made of barbed wire on the Irvine Ranch property, the park's other hippos have been confined indoors.

Mrs. Schetter said they would like to get Bubbles back to her herd and her female calf.

"But we don't want her to go home by way of an inhabited area or a busy road," she said.

ATTENTION SCIENCE AND ENGINEERING MAJORS!

The Air Force has openings for young men and women majoring in selected science and engineering fields. Like Aeronautical. Aerospace. General and Electrical Engineering. Mathematics. Physics and Computer Technology.

To help prepare for one of these. Air Force ROTC offers two and four year programs of study which will defray some of your college costs.

After completion of the AFROTC requirement, and upon your graduation, you'll be commissioned an officer in the Air Force. Then comes responsibility, experience in your specialty with some of the best people and facilities in the world, and a mission with a purpose. You'll get excellent starting salary, medical and dental care, 30 days of paid vacation beginning your first year, and more.

Look into the Air Force ROTC program right away. See what's in it for you. See how you can serve your country in return. You'll be glad you put your major to work on a job that really counts.

Your Birthday

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 27

Born today, you are luxury-loving but practical and careful. You enjoy the better things of life – fine clothes, jewelry, etc. – but you are in no danger of sacrificing essentials for what is beautiful, expensive, and enviable. You will first protect your security and that of your family, and then indulge a love for opulence.

You believe in the democratic process. At home, even the youngest family member is given his say. You find in children a wisdom that is often superior to that of the adults who guide them. You are not tempted to turn over all authority to the very young, but you will certainly listen carefully to them.

You are not likely to have many friends, but those you have will be loyal and affectionate. You don't easily show your feelings, but those who know you well know you as honest, determined, straightforward and just in your dealings with all.

Also born on this date: Lawrence Durrell, novelist; Joan Bennetti, actress.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 28

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Realize a small ambition early. Opportunity makes demands as it promises longed-for gains.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Several surprises close on each others' heels may keep you hopping this morning.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Overlooked correspondence brings an old project to your attention. See carefully to details.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Don't follow intuition without relying on knowledge. Books figure in the day's success.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Personal problems must be kept to yourself for now. Questions can be answered diplomatically.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Creative instincts will not lead you astray today. Try to follow artistic inclinations.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Those who offer help may cause more problems than they solve. Tactfully decline the offer.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Accept another's offer of information on new methods. Work improves with innovation.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Older relatives bring new order into the home. See that children look to them for inspiration.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Seek information that will help solve difficulties at home. Problems at work can wait.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Shun that which yields no return. Make profits now while the making is good!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Time-consuming enterprises may have to be postponed. You are needed at home today.

Pucksters' playoff chances slim

By MICHAEL McHUGH
Collegian Staff

The UMass hockey team's dream of a Cinderella season transformed into a pumpkin this past weekend at Orr rink, as the Minutemen closed out the season by losing 6-4 to Williams College on Friday night and by succumbing 3-0 to Salem State on Saturday night before sparse crowds.

It was not a storybook finish to a season that had once upon a time looked like the Minutemen had a shot at the playoffs. UMass had a rocky 3-6 start in the first half of the season, but managed to turn it around in the second half of the season, knocking off talented Holy Cross (3-2) and the defending Division II champs, Merrimack (7-6 in OT) enroute to a glittering 5-1-1 start that had all the makings of a playoff berth. The disastrous flu bug hit the team hard prior to the Williams game on February 15 (rescheduled to last Friday) and the team never fully recovered, as they lost to Boston State (9-3), North Adams (6-3), Williams and Salem State in succession.

The weekend losses gave the Minutemen a final record of 8-11-1 (the same Division II record as last year) and all but extinguished the flame of a playoff berth. The weekend also marked the last time seniors Bob and Bill White (co-captains), Brian Kittredge, John Riley, Paul McCann and Lincoln Flagg skated in UMass uniforms.

"After the way we started with a 1-5 record, I began to wonder if we would ever turn around," said UMass hockey coach Jack Canniff in reference to a question concerning his summation of the 1977-78 UMass hockey season.

"But we did turn around and played well. But when you lose players (Dean Liacos-hernia, Joey Milan-torn ligaments, right knee, Barry Milan, one game suspension, Bob White-one game suspension, and Lincoln Flagg skating with a virus) it hurts. When you start juggling lines it hurts. We were struck by adversity (the flu and injuries to key players) and didn't quit. We got better gradually, game by game after the adversity hit us and skated right up until the final buzzer", added Canniff.

For the record, the UMass-Salem State game on Saturday night was never really in doubt, as the quicker Vikings enjoyed a territorial advantage all night and took advantage of three powerplay opportunities to hand the Iceman their shutout, ironically, in the last game of the year, 3-0.

The Vikings who own a sparkling 20-6 record and are playoff bound, swarmed in the UMass zone like bees to honey for most of the first period but came away empty-handed, as the period ended scoreless.

Somehow, one got the feeling it was only a matter of time before Salem State would score and it finally happened in the opening minutes of the middle stanza.

UMass' Brian Kittredge had been whistled for hooking at 18:58 of the first period, which meant his penalty carried over into the second period and it was on the second leg of the penalty that Salem scored. Vikes Mike Ciasby was the recipient of a goal mouth pass from Ed Sousa, which he promptly flipped over UMass goaltender John Riley's left shoulder just as Kittredge's penalty had expired at :58.

The Vikes increased their lead to 2-0 in the middle part of the period on a powerplay goal. Larry Goldberg zipped the puck past Riley just 20 seconds after UMass' Mark Ferragamo had been sent to the sin bin for elbowing at 11:14.

An interesting tussle between Jamie Benelli of UMass and the Vikes' Ray Ferguson at 13:10 of the middle period, resulted in a mass march to the penalty box by ten, yes count them, ten players to serve time. Benelli and Ferguson were sent for roughing while the other eight (four from each side) were sent for "refusal to go to the bench after an altercation".

Larry Goldberg knocked in his own rebound at 6:02 of the third period, which was his second goal, the team's second powerplay goal and the third goal overall for the Vikings. Goalie Jay Palladino, the number one goaltender in Division II, played like a 5 by 5 foot block of cement to nail down the 3-0 win.

"Our goalie played as well as usual," said Salem State hockey coach Mike Gilligan.

"I thought we had the game pretty much under control territorially. It seemed that UMass was down because of the past couple of losses," added Gilligan.

In the Williams contest on Friday night, the Minutemen matched the Ephmen's goal production in the first and third period, but forgot the second period ever existed, as the Ephmen poked home two unanswered goals enroute to a 6-4 win.

The critical second period belonged totally to Williams, as they outshot the Minutemen by a whopping 18-6 margin and drove home two goals that provided them with the margin of victory.

Jeff Daly slammed a 40 foot slap shot past a ducking Riley, who appeared screened on the shot, at 9:05 of the second period, snapping a 1-1 tie.

Peter Gonye made it 3-1 at 16:17 when he deflected a Tom Reisor blueline slap shot past Riley just as Ron Valicenti's boarding penalty had expired.

The Minutemen and Ephmen traded goals in a quiet first period that Williams hockey coach Bill McCormick termed as "two guys fishing".

Chris Egini lifted a soft wrist shot over Riley's left shoulder that gave the Ephmen a shortlived 1-0 lead.

Bill Estes tied matters at 1, twenty eight seconds later when he blasted a 50 foot slap shot past Mike Moulton at 8:26. Estes' goal appeared to have deflected off the stick of a Williams defenseman.

UMass outplayed Williams in the final stanza, as they outshot them by an 18-10 margin, but it seemed everytime the pucksters scored, Williams countered with a score of their own.

Chick Johnson slipped an unassistsd goal past Riley at 1:30 of the final period to give the Ephmen a 4-1 lead that seemed insurmountable. However, UMass countered with two quick goals to cut the lead to 4-3.

Chris Lowey, unherald defenseman for UMass, made a spectacular rush along the left side and blasted a 10 foot slap shot past Moulton at 2:02.

Rough, tough, and strong Nick Carney flipped in a rebound off the stick of Brian Kittredge at 4:56 that cut the Williams lead to one.

Undaunted by the UMass comeback attempt, Williams kept plugging and Barney Walsh knocked the puck past Riley to give the Ephmen some breathing room.

Mr. Carney went into his scoring act once again at 13:47 when he drilled a 25 foot slap shot past Moulton that brought the Minutemen back to within one.

.... But Pete Gonye tapped in a crazy rebound into a wide open net at 14:57 that snapped the UMass resistance and Williams went on to win 6-4.

Hoopwomen seeded in EAIAW tourney

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's basketball team has been seeded fifth in the Eastern Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (EAIAW) regional playoffs, it was announced yesterday.

The Minutewomen, 13-6 and runners-up in the state championship, will play unseeded Northeastern Friday night at 6 in Portland, Maine, in their first round game.

A new format for both the Easterns and the National tourney has been worked out this season by the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (AIAW), the governing body of national collegiate women's sports.

Unlike last year, when 16 teams competed at one site for the right to represent the East in the Nationals, the qualifying for the Nationals has been split into two consecutive weekends of action.

Four teams will vie at four different sites this weekend. The four winners will then advance to the Eastern championships, to be held March 10-11 at Queens College. The two best teams from that championship will then advance to a sectional satellite championship.

After the Northeastern-UMass game at 6 p.m., Providence (fourth seed) will meet Maine (unseeded) at 8 p.m. The two winners will then meet at 3 p.m. Saturday for the right to go to the Eastern finals.

The other three sites, with their competitors, are as follows:

Queens: Queens College (first seed) vs. Central Connecticut.

Boston University (eighth seed) vs. Brooklyn College.

Southern Connecticut: Southern Connecticut (third seed) vs. UConn.

New Hampshire (sixth seed) vs. Rhode Island.

Vermont: St. John's (second seed) vs. Vermont. Cortland State (seventh seed) vs. Syracuse.

As was the case a year ago, only the top eight teams in the 16-team field were seeded.

The Minutewomen sport a 1-4 record against the top seeds they have played. UMass winds up its regular season tomorrow night with a game at Southern Connecticut, a slump-ridden team of late.

"I want to meet BU, Providence and St. John's in the tourney," UMass coach Mary Ann Ozdarski said after Saturday night's loss to BU in the state title game.

She will have it her way if UMass and Providence both win their first round games. The Friars, who defeated Southern Connecticut 63-62 Friday night, beat the Minutewomen in overtime in early February.

UMass lost in the quarterfinals of last year's Easterns to Springfield, 66-64, in a major upset.

The top Eastern finisher will travel to Rutgers University for the Eastern sectional, while the second place team moves on to Delta State (Miss.) for the South sectional. Both satellite tourneys will be played the weekend of March 17.

The four satellite champions will meet on March 24 for the national championship at UCLA's Pauley Pavilion.

Cagers fall to Rams in 4th straight loss

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I. — The saying goes, "There's a silver lining to every cloud," and despite losing its fourth straight and dropping its record to 14-11, the clouds seem to be clearing for Jack Leaman's squad.

Even while losing to ECAC bound Rhode Island, 82-75, before 5,109 who gathered to pay its respects to the Ram seniors (Percy Davis, Randy Wilds, Jiggy Williamson, and Stan Wright), the Minutemen regained respect again, fighting back from a 15 point deficit, only to lose by seven.

The Ram seniors responded to their last home appearance as Wright (15), Williamson (10), and Davis (12) gave URI a 41-30 halftime lead and withstood a Minutemen comeback late in the second half.

For the Minutemen, Mike Pyatt (24) continued his fine shooting (20 pt average in last four games) while Eric Williams (15), and Len Kohlhaas (16), came out of shooting slumping to aid in the UMass comeback efforts.

Despite playing strong, aggressive defense and rebounding well in the late stages of the game, the contest was lost for the Minutemen in the early going and in the opening stages of the second half.

Minus senior guard Alex Eldridge (sprained knee ligaments), the Minutemen traded baskets with the Rams early in the first half, before falling behind by as much as 15 and ending the half down by 11, 41-30.

In the second half, with UMass trailing by 11, Len Kohlhaas playing in place of the foul plagued and injured Haymore (ankle), decided that enough was enough on the boards and started rebounding with authority.

He scored the first four UMass points with jump shots at the top of the key and after Pyatt scored on a three point play, the Minutemen had pulled within eight.

The lead further decreased to six, with 16:16 left, as Pyatt and Kohlhaas tipped in offensive rebounds.

However Sly Williams then scored five points (two on a goaltending call against Kohlhaas) and after the Rams' Irv Chatmas and John Nelson connected on jump shots, the Ram lead had gone up again to 15.

UMass got the deficit to nine as Kohlhaas continued to be authoritative on offense with four points but the Rams' Williams and Williamson brought URI back to a 66-52 advantage with 6:30 left.

But UMass did not play dead. Brad Johnson, regaining some of his offensive game after a horrendous slump, started things going with an offensive tap-in. "E-Man" Williams drove to the basket four a three point play and another drive for two points and, with 3:55, Johnson hit a 12" jumper to pull the Lea-men to within eight 69-61.

Davis was fouled and proceeded to hit two foul shots but Derick Claiborne responded with a long range jumper and UMass trailed by six with 1:15 on the clock.

But Davis beat the UMass full-court zone press with a layup and Wright sent a football pass to Williamson for two and UMass now trailed by nine. Pyatt would then score the final four UMass points.

"I'm extremely happy with the play of Pyatt, Johnson, Kohlhaas, and Williams. We started rebounding real well and just ran out of gas. A big improvement over the New Hampshire game," said Leaman.

URI (82) — Chatman 5-0-10, Nelson 2-0-4, Williamson 5-0-10, Wright 6-3-15, Davis 3-6-12, Williams 12-7-31. Totals 41-41-82.

UMass (75) — Johnson 3-0-6, Claiborne 3-0-6, Morrison 2-0-4, Pyatt 9-6-24, Williams 7-1-15, Haymore 2-0-4, Kohlhaas 7-2-16. Totals 33-9-75. Halftime URI 41-30.

Gymnasts win

By STEVEN MARKS
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA — The UMass men's gymnastics team surprisingly defeated the Owls of Temple, handing them their first defeat by a Minutemen team in three years. It was as much of an upset victory last week in Springfield, when the gymmen also defeated the Chieftains for the first time in three years. The gymmen had a little help as Temple's star all-arounder Mike Silverstein was temporarily out of action with the flu.

Floor exercise found the gymmen behind 33.60-32.70, despite a very well executed set by senior John Forshay. A surprisingly low score placed him in third overall. The pommel horse again turned the tide as co-captain Dave Kulakoff led a romp over the Owls with his 9.4 as UMass took command of the competition, 56.70-61.45. The still rings were the gymmen's weak point as many routines were missed and poorly executed, allowing Temple a chance to catch up, 90.65-90.45.

Long horse vauling was a disaster as most vaults were missed with the exception of Forshay, who placed second with his 9.15 score. Here is where the gymmen lost the lead to Temple, giving them the ultimate advantage going into the last two events. Parallel bars dropped the gymmen even further behind despite two beautiful sets by Kulakoff and Bob Donahue, who placed second and third respectively.

The horizontal bar was the last straw on the camel's back for Temple as the Owls blew their two point lead and finally lost the competition by two points to the gymmen. UMass swept the first three places as Donahue and John Nelson led the upset while the Owls cracked under the pressure. The meet's final results were 186.95-184.50, with Donahue winning the all-around competition with a very impressive 47.70 total.

Swimwomen end 6-7-1

UMass' Deb Schwartz smashed two of her own collegiate records in the 200 and 500 freestyle enroute to a defeat inflicted by Southern Connecticut State College in swimwomen's action on Saturday.

In the final meet of the year, Schwartz placed second in the 500 freestyle with a new UMass time of 5:25.4, while teammate Lynn Lutz captured third with 6:02.1. Visiting So. Conn.'s Janice Drew took first with 5:23.6.

Schwartz continued her record performance pace with 2:03.5 in the 200 freestyle by breaking her previous time of 2:04.0. The Owls' Janet Zebora clinched first with 2:01.0. The Minutewomen's Rachel Mack finished third.

Another highlight of the 73-58 loss, were two first place finishes by Kathy Jurcik in the 50 and 100 yard backstroke. Jurcik was the only UMass swimmer to accomplish this feat against the Owls. In the 50 and 100 yard backstroke Jurcik had 30.3 and 1:05.5 respectively. The UMies surrendered second and third position in both races.

In the 200 yard medley, the Owls were front runners with 1:59.1. The UMass team of Meegan Primavera, Celia Walsh, Lise Hembrough and Jurcik took second with 2:02.8.

Only one UMie managed to crack UConn's tough first, second and third lineup in the 100 yard Fly. Celia Walsh, sandwiched between opponents, held second with a 104.4 mark. UConn's Quinn had a time of 103.2 for first and Siebold timed 108.1 for third.

In the 50 yard freestyle there was a tie. Both Mack and So. Conn's Kelly McCabe had 26.8. However, the judge's decision boosted Mack to the number one slot. Hembrough's 27.0 secured third.

In the diving events the Owl's petite Sally McCann captured first in the required the optional. UMass' Kris Bullard and Suzy Strobel trailed for second and third.

McCann won optional with a 187.45 output. Bullard snared second with 159.80, while Strobel attained third with 1:32.25.

The 50 yard butterfly saw Quinn edge out UMass' Walsh, who had 29.1. Jurcik's third place time was 29.8.

In the last race of the season UMass' Mack, Walsh, Schwartz and Hembrough performed their best 200 freestyle relay of the year to beat the Owls.

UMass completed the year with a 6-7-1 record.

Swimmer Yarworth aims for the top

By BILL TARTER

There is an old New England saying, "If you don't like the weather, just wait."

With a little variation, a similar adage could be applied to UMass's premier swimmer, Russ Yarworth: "If you haven't seen Yarworth break a record lately, just wait." His incredible talent for accumulating records has become as predictable as New England's confusing climate.

Keeping track of his performances is like examining a portion of the New York Stock Exchange report. A few Saturdays ago, the 200 yard individual medley school record went down 1.2 seconds to 1:59:8. A couple of weeks ago the 200 yard butterfly record was reduced by 1.6 seconds to 2:00:1. The week before that the 400 yard medley relay record fell .8 seconds to 3:44:7. Depending on how you look at it, Yarworth's stock is doing very well.

There is a list of all the men's records from each event hanging above Boyden Pool. After seeing it for the first time, you are forced to rub your eyes to make sure you're not suffering blurred vision.

The name Yarworth monopolizes half the board. He currently has six individual records and two other relay records to his credit. (His time for the 200 I.M. was the fastest recorded in all of New England this season.) Had he devoted himself to other events the number would be even higher.

After seeing him in action you realize it is no accident that his name commands so much attention. His fluent style is extremely deceptive. The only indication of his power is the ever increasing margin between he and his opponents. You quickly reach one inescapable conclusion — Russ Yarworth is an exceptional swimmer.

The senior bio-chemistry major, originally from the distant shores of Grimsby, England, has come a long way in his four years here at the University of Massachusetts.

After achieving moderate success at Attleboro High School, Yarworth has developed into one of the finest swimmers in the region. Yarworth attributes much of his improvement to coach Bei Melamed.

"He knows so much, especially the little things which can make such a difference," Yarworth said.

Melamed's Olympic experience is without a doubt an invaluable aid, but Yarworth's road to success came mostly as a result of good old fashioned hard work and devotion.

Becoming an excellent swimmer requires a tremendous commitment, and Yarworth was willing to make that sacrifice. Translated, this means three to four hours of swimming a day, seven days a week. Every day the same monotonous routine, the countless number of laps where all you see is that black line at the bottom of the pool. Keeping those arms turning and legs kicking long after the point of exhaustion.

Most people would accuse him of being crazy, but if it means capturing first in this year's New England Championships, it will all be worth it. "That's what I'm shooting for," said Yarworth enthusiastically.

In the back of his mind is the hope of qualifying for the Nationals. "That would be fantastic; I think it is possible, but I won't make predictions." His best shot will be in the 200 I.M. where he has continually been improving his time all year.

Yarworth has a realistic attitude towards his records. "I expect they will all be broken in time. Actually it doesn't look good for the program if they have one person dominating so many different events."

How much better Yarworth can get will probably remain a question mark. Unlike other sports such as football and basketball, there is little future in swimming beyond college. Few continue to devote the time and energy necessary to improve, plus there is the absence of expert coaching available."

Yarworth said his future plans are tentative. He is not ready to rush into anything just yet concerning his degree in bio-chem. He hopes to pursue swimming competively in AAU meets or even go out West and possibly join a water polo club, among other things.

By next year Russ Yarworth will be gone, but his achievements and records will long be remembered. It is liable to be a long time before a swimmer of his caliber returns.

Minutewomen upset; BU takes title, 93-73

BOSTON — It was the classic case of a complete turnaround.

The UMass women's basketball team saw its dream of a second straight state championship go down the drain Saturday night as Boston University thrashed the Minutewomen, 93-73, in the title game at Cage Center here at Boston University.

The Terriers' win avenged a 91-67 UMass triumph back in December in the Southern Connecticut Christmas Tourney.

"They definitely won the psychological battle," UMass Coach Mary Ann Ozdarski said. "BU was flying sky-high, and if they were playing the Celtics tonight I don't think they would have lost."

That may have been a slight exaggeration, but BU played almost picture-perfect basketball in the first half while rolling up a 55-25 midway lead.

The Minutewomen ran into a whirlwind in the form of the Terriers' Debra Miller. The 5-11 freshman forward glided to a 20-point first half scoring binge with a deadly 15-foot jump shot. She wound up with 24 points.

"Miller played a super ballgame," Ozdarski said. "She was outstanding tonight. It was too bad it happened to be for the states."

It was all Miller, Terry Shinkwin (19 points), and April Goodwin (13 points) as BU rolled up a 37-8 lead with six and a half minutes to go in the first half. Of the 37 points, Miller scored 16, Shinkwin nine, and Goodwin six as the Terriers could do little wrong.

BU shot 58 per cent in the the first half and limited UMass to only one shot at the hoop for much of the time. The Terriers also held top scorer Sue Peters scoreless until 5:20 remained in the half. Peters wound up with nine first half points and 20 for the game before fouling out with 6:58 to play.

A team facing a 30-point deficit may have easily given up the ghost, but such was not the case with the Minutewomen. They played tenacious defense in the second half and outscored BU, 48-38.

Fine performances were authored by Peters, Cheryl Carey (14 points and the only UMass scorer for the first nine and a half minutes of the game), and Jen Parker (13 points on a nice job coming off the bench.)

Debbie McCulloch added eight points and along with Mary Hallaren played a pesky brand of defense.

"I thought my kids played outstanding," Ozdarski said. "They were under tremendous psychological and physical pressure playing at BU, and they have nothing to hang their heads about. I have nothing but praise for my club."

The Minutewomen advanced to the finals with a 67-54 win over Bridgewater State in their first-round game on Friday night. BU qualified with a 62-52 win over Northeastern.

On Friday night, both UMass and Bridgewater State got off to slow starts, combining for nine total points the first five minutes of the game.

The Minutewomen proceeded to score 11 unanswered points, led by Peters, who paced the UMass attack with 16. The spurt gave UMass a 18-6 lead with 8:30 remaining in the first half.

The combination of Julie Ready (11 points) and McCulloch (7 points) scored the last six points of the half, increasing the UMass lead to 33-17.

The Minutewomen's speed took its toll on the slower Bridgewater State as they scored many fast break baskets in the first half.

"We just couldn't put the ball in the basket our offense was very sputtery," Bridgewater coach Regira Grass said.

In the second half of play, the Minutewomen maintained a 13-17 point margin throughout the first 10 minutes of play until three consecutive baskets by Ginny Peebles, Julie McHugh, and Kathy Harrington balloned the lead to 58-38 with eight minutes left.

Ozdarski freely substituted, saving her regulars for the championship game. The Bridgewater squad never gave up as the duo of Rose Griffin-Hayden (14 points) and Kristen Anderson (14 points) led their squad back into contention, trailing by nine with 1:30 left, but their effort went for naught with the Minutewomen closing out the scoring for the 67-64 victory.

UMass closes its regular season by traveling to New Haven, Conn. to battle the always competitive Southern Connecticut Owls tomorrow night. This weekend, the Minutewomen will compete in the first round of Eastern Regionals in Portland, Me.

Canisius overwhelmed by UMass gymwomen

The women's gymnastics team put together a strong overall performance on Saturday to soundly defeat Canisius 137.65-103.80, before a small crowd at Boyden Auxiliary Gym. The Minutewomen swept the top three all around places and won three of the four events in the victory.

All around competitors Karen Hemberger, Susan Cantwell, Karen Clemente and Debbie Smith all finished with totals above 30 points and contributed to most of the top four scores in each event.

Hemberger took top honors in vaulting with a 9.25 for her Sukahara vault. Cantwell was second with an 8.7 followed by Karen Clemente, who tied with Canisius' Valerie Roe with scores of 8.55. Debbie Smith finished fourth with a score of 8.45. Smith only took two warmup vaults as she was designated an all around performer only fifteen minutes before the competition began.

Valerie Roe came through again for Canisius and won the bars with a score of 8.60. Cantwell was second with an 8.5 followed by Hemberger and Clemente with marks of 8.4 and 8.35 respectively. Bars specialist Jean Anderson and Debbie Law continued to come through with identical 8.05 scores.

The balance beam, which is usually the weak link for the gymwomen turned out to be one of the strongest events against Canisius. Cantwell was first with an 8.85, Laurie Knapp was second with an 8.80, Hemberger was third with an 8.65 and Diane Laurenson was fourth with an 8:30 after a six week absence from competition.

Canisius ran into serious problems on the beam. No competitors scored higher than a 6.45 and UMass took the event 34.60 to 22.35.

Cantwell won the floor exercise with a 9.20 performance. Hemberger was second with a 9.05. "I don't think I've ever seen Karen work as well on the floor," UMass Coach Virginia Evans said of Hemberger. Clemente was third with an 8.45 and showed improvement in her tumbling passes. Smith finished fifth with an 8.10 followed by Julie Myers who received an 8.05.

The Minutewomen were still without the services of Stephanie Jones, Cheryl Morrier and Coleen Thorton. Jones missed Saturday's meet because of GRE exams, while Thorton is still recuperating from a pulled muscle. Morrier is still recovering, from the flu. All three are expected to be ready to go against UNH tomorrow.

The last home meet of the season will be against UNH tomorrow in the Cage at 7 p.m. UNH should be one of the strongest teams UMass has yet to face. Tuesday will also be senior night as it will be the last time Cantwell and Jones will compete at home for the Minutewomen.

The UMass gymwomen have regained their balance after a bout with the flu. Most of the team has recovered from the campuswide epidemic and are ready to face UNH tomorrow in their final home meet. (Staff photo by Kathy Schmarson)

Senior Night

It'll be Senior Night in Curry Hicks Cage tonight at 7:30 when UMass says farewell to Alex Eldridge, Captain Derick Claiborne, Mike Pyatt, Chuck Stevesky and manager Skip Alford. Pittsburgh, an EAA foe, will be the opponent.

Pittsburgh is led by 6'6", 205 lb. forward and All-American candidate Larry Harris. Harris has averaged over 22 points a game over the last two seasons, and is again among EAA leaders in scoring.

The UMass wrestling team will host the Wildcats of New Hampshire tonight at Boyden Auxiliary Gym in what will be the team's final meet before next week's New England championships in Rhode Island. The first match is scheduled to begin at 7:00.

Tonight's action should be interesting for two reasons (1) Coach Dave Amato has announced that tonight's lineup will be the same one that participates in the New Englands, and (2) Minuteman co-captain Tim Fallon will make his final UMass appearance.

"I'm not exactly sure what I'm going to do in the 158 and 167 pound weight classes for the New England's," said coach Amato yesterday, "but aside from that, tonight's lineup is going to the New Englands."

Mike Carroll will grapple at 158 pounds tonight, and Bob Smith will go at 167 pounds. Monty Payette, the regular wrestler in the 158 pound class, is still out of the lineup. If Payette is able to return to action he will wrestle at one of these weights. In the meantime, Carroll, who is generally a 150 pound performer, will compete in the heavier weight class.

As far as Timmy Fallon is concerned, the UMass co-captain will compete in his customary 150 pound slot in his final Boyden encounter. Fallon, a graduate of Lowell High School, joined the UMass matmen as a freshman in 1974. He finished third in the New Englands last year.

Dana Rasmussen will start the action as the UMies' 118 pound grappler. In the 126 pound class Keith Dixon will be the performer.

Co-captain Larry Otsuka, out of the UMass lineup for several weeks with a broken rib, is back and will be the 134 pound wrestler.

NE track star

CAMBRIDGE — UMass sophomore trackman Steve MacDougall gained All-New England recognition yesterday as he placed second in the 1,000 yard run at the New England Indoor Track and Field Championships at Harvard. Northeastern's Tom Mortimer won the event in 2:10.5, while MacDougall ran 2:11.6.

South Africa Enacts Law to Eject Urban Blacks Without Jobs

Special to the Guardian

Luanda, Angola

Racist South Africa has come up with a new law to help shove blacks out of their homes in urban areas.

The new law will supplement existing plans for relocating blacks from urban homes into the countryside in the repressive, unproductive bantustans where they are not specifically required to provide slave labor for the South African economy.

All unemployed Africans, under the new law, who have been unemployed for more than 122 days in the year, are to be declared "idle" and forcibly uprooted from their city homes to new rural forced labor camps. These are being described as "rehabilitation centers for idle bantus."

The legislation came days after the new ultrarightist Vorster government cynically announced "economic measures to help agricultural development." The new rural scheme allows racist authorities to herd "idle" Africans to whatever area they wish and declare the scene a "rural development project" or "rehabilitation center." Others are to be "repatriated" to bantustans they've never seen.

Under previous laws, it was difficult enough for the jobless to find new employment in urban areas because of the barrage of racist . apartheid legislation. Currently, there are more than two million blacks unemployed in South Africa. One young South African worker described the old system to the Guardian:

"When you are out looking for a job you go to the pass office and get a special stamp valid for two weeks. If two weeks expire and you are still looking you go back and get a second special stamp, and you can get a third. At the end of that period you can be arrested and charged with "vagrancy" under Section 29. If you are unfortunate, you can go to prison for two years and be endorsed out of urban areas. This means you can only settle in the bantustans."

Now the special stamps system has been swept aside in favor of this even more repressive law. As a first example of the kind of policies the new Vorster government is espousing to "make apartheid work" and to carry out its election promise of being more "competent," it exhibits all the old contridictions of previously discarded apartheid schemes.

And the new government seems to have overlooked an important consequence of its new "rural development" policy. By forcibly uprooting thousands of militant city unemployed and setting them down in the countryside, the regime is helping spread the political and revolutionary consciousness of the South African working class all across the country.

S.R.

MARIETTA, Ga. — J. B. Stoner, a self-styled racist who claims an FBI undercover agent once offered him $25,000 to kill Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., says the House Assassinations Committee plans to subpeona him for questioning.

Stoner said a member of the House panel, which is investigating King's murder, contacted his lawyer recently about subpoenaing Stoner and at least one other member of the National States Rights Party, Edward Field, editor of the party newspaper.

"I understand they (the panel) know I have knowledge of the FBIs attempts to kill King," Stoner said.

The white supremacist claims an undercover agent for the FBI, posing as a Ku Klux Klan leader, approached him in Montgomergy in the late 1950s and offered him $25,000 to kill King who then was living in the Alabama capital.

Stoner, an attorney who currently is fighting extradition to Alabama where he has been indicted on charges of bombing an empty black church in Birmingham in 1958, said he feared a plot and rejected the alleged undercover agent's offer.

L.S. Cobb, Stoner's lawyer, said a member of the House committee is expected to come to Marietta soon to discuss the subpoenas with Stoner and Fields.

"We will have a brief Conference at that time and accept the subpoenas," Cobb said.

Widespread support

Labor leaders and public figures have joined the call for the immediate release of the remaining four Puerto Rican nationalist prisoners held in U.S. jails since the 1950s.

The union leaders include: Patrick Gorman, president of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters of America, AFL-CIO; Henry Foner, president of the Fur, Leather and Machine Workers Joint Board, AFL-CIO; Jack Spiegel, director of the Chicago United Shoe Workers, AFL-CIO, and Russell Woodnick, business representative of District 134 of the International Assn. of Machinist.

Among other supporters are Black Congressmen Ronald Dellums (D-Calif.) and Ralph Metcalfe (D-Ill.), actress Jane Fonda, and Nobel Laureates Linus Pauling and Harold Urey.

Puerto Rico escalates Labor Repression

by Cam Duncan
Special to the Guardian

St. Juste, Puerto Rico

The Puerto Rican government escalated its assault on the island's labor movement last week as it filed a $3.5 million damage suit against the Electrical Power Workers Union (UTIER) and its leadership for alleged acts of sabotage.

The 6000 members of UTIER walked off their jobs Dec. 27 after wage negotiations with the government-owned Water Resources Authority (WRA) broke down.

Electrical union president Luis Lausell, who is also a member of the Puerto Rican Socialist Party (PSP) Central Committee, countered that the suit is merely a publicity stunt. "All they are trying to do is convince the public that they have evidence linking the union to the sabotage," he said.

The union has responded to the government offensive by actively building community support on behalf of its demands. The workers have asked the public to refuse to pay light bills and to join mass picketlines at WRA stations across the island.

The Federation of University Students for Independence (FUPI) and UTIER recently co-sponsored a march and rally of some 3000 supporters in San Juan. And some 2000 protesters last week picketed Governor Carlos Romero Barcelo's "state of the commonwealth" message. The demonstration, sponsored by the PSP and the strike support committee, expressed solidarity with UTIER workers and with the striking bus drivers of the Transportation Workers Union (TUAMA). The bus drivers are entering the fourth week of their walkout.

U. S. Support

In New York City meanwhile, some 300 people gathered Feb. 3 to hear representatives of the Trade Union Against Repression in Puerto Rico (TUCAR) as they launched a tour of several U.S. cities to increase support for the electric and transportation workers.

"The significance of this strike is recognized not only by the progressive and revolutionary elements on the island, but also by those who are attempting to eliminate that progressive struggle," explained Gil Rios, president of the UTIER San Juan chapter. UTIER is one of the strongest and most militant unions in Puerto Rico.

The Puerto Rican government's sabotage suit is part of an organized campaign to discredit the UTIER leadership and to create divisions among the rank and file. WRA head Pedro Vasquez has taken out full page newspaper advertisements and purchased TV and radio spots, at an estimated cost of more than $200,000 to WRA customers, to convince the public that the electrical workers' wage demands are exorbitant.

Vasquez also threatened last week to break the current contract with the union by hiring scabs if the strike continues more than another two weeks. UTIER president Lausell responded that any attempt to fire striking workers could result in a "civil war."

"Such an anti-labor action would unite all the working people of Puerto Rico against the government," Lausell added.

While the government accuses UTIER of sabotage, terrorism is emanating from the right wing of Governor Romero's New Progressive Party (NPP). In recent weeks, bombs have ripped the law offices of PSP leader Carlos Gallisa and the home of PSP General Secretary Juan Mari Bras. Shots have also been fired at Lausell's home and at the offices of the Puerto Rico Workers Union. An organization called the Anti-Communist Alliance has claimed responsibility for two of the incidents.

Meanwhile, former Governor Roberto Sanchez Vilella, who chaired a fact-finding panel investigating the economic aspects of the strike, reaffirmed his contention that the WRA could make a more generous wage offer.

"Although it (WRA) belongs to the Puerto Rican people in theory, majority control is held by U. S. bondholders such as First Boston Corp.," Sanchez pointed out. "The Puerto Rican people are minority stockholders in the WRA."

South Africa Transkei critic jailed

An opposition leader in the Transkei, a so-called independent homeland for blacks in South Africa, has been jailed and faces the death penalty for saying that Transkei was cursed "with the worst government in the history of mankind."

Police in Transkei admitted Jan. 23 they are holding Hector Mcokazi for violating the Public Security Act, which is modeled on the South Africa security laws. The law imposes a penalty of five years to death for a broad range of statements that displease the government. When the bill establishing the law was introduced in May 1977, Minister of Justice Chief George Mantanzima said that it was tantamount to treason to deny that Transkei was independent.

Transkei was the first bantustan to be granted a fictional independence by South Africa. Mcokazi is a firm opponent of the bantustan policy and opposed to the independence scheme.

Prisoners

Inmates, struggle:

Secures heat restoration

The 800 inmates in the West Wing of the Maryland State Prison in Jessup have forced authorities there to restore the heating which had been deliberately shut off in a recent near-zero degree cold spell.

The Maryland Prisoners Coalition (MPC) organized the predominantly Black inmate population and secured more than 800 signatures on a protest petition addressed to a federal judge. Supporters on the outside deluged the warden with complaints.

The inmates carried out another protest when a prison officer stole the petitions. Authorities restored the heat after the MPC threatened to convey to a lawyer word of the theft.

The cutoff of heat to the 800 inmates in the West Wing (the prison holds 1700) was only the latest instance of official harassment. Last October, the prisoners led a successful sit-down strike against racist and brutal treatment.

Demand conjugal visits

Some 1000 male inmates at federal prisons in Terre Haute, Inc., and Atlanta, Ga., have petitioned Congress, the Congressional Black Caucus, the White House and the U. S. Bureau of Prisons to permit "private visitations, including sexual relations with wives and consenting female adults."

Such visitations are granted to inmates of state prisons in California, New York and Mississippi, but they are denied in all federal prisons.

Republic of New Africa (RNA) president Imari Obadele, an inmate at Terre Haute prison, wrote in a letter to the Congressional Black Caucus that the prevention of such visitations fosters "the destruction of the Black family."

Obadele pointed out that some 150,000 Black men and several thousand Black women currently are doing time in U.S. prisons. Approximately 250,000 Black men pass through the jail process every three years.

"Not even our people," said Obadele, "can long survive such a genocidal rate in converting...Black men into dehumanized beings."

Student Defines Consciousness

UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. — The most important decision of a black person's life is whether to make the conversion from a passive "Negro" consciousness to a "black" consciousness, according to a psychology doctoral candidate at Pennsylvania State University.

Carmen F. Williams, whose master's thesis investigated factors which determine the evolution of black consciousness, says that blacks initially make the psychic leap from a Negro consciousness by totally rejecting the values of white society and replacing them with black ideals.

"Rejection of white values is a realistic beginning of black consciousness," she says, "but there's something basically unhealthy about being stuck there. It's not self-enhancing to build your identity on the rejections of other — people's values. It's more important for blacks to stress the positive things they feel and do."

After a rejection of white values, the next step in the development of black consciousness is a total immersion in things that are black — writing, art, music and black history, she says.

She recommends Claude Brown's autobiography, "Manchild I the Promised Land," as a good starting point for young people in search of their black consciousness.

The idea of replacing the Negro consciousness with a more active state of mind has gained a great deal of acceptance over the past 10 years, Mrs. Williams says.

"Families are teaching black values and history to their children now, whereas in the past the attitude was, 'don't rock the boat'."

Teenager Draws Life Sentence

ATLANTA — An 18-year-old youth has been sentenced to life in prison for taking part in the slaying of a young service station attendant who was shot in the back of the head.

The jury of six men and six women took 15 minutes to reach a decision on the life prison term for Michael Anthony Booker, who will turn 19 in March.

Booker never took the stand, either in the trial or in the hearing on his punishment, to tell his version of how Danny Earl Cotton, 19, was shot on Sept. 28, 1977 in the Bankhead Court section of Atlanta.

Assistant District Attorney Russel Parker did not ask the jury to send Booker to the electric chair, the only alternate penalty under Georgia law for murder. He said that was a decision which rested solely with the jurors.

A 15-year-old juvenile who cannot be identified under Georgia law, has already pleaded guilty to murder and will receive a life sentence.

Terri Jean Jones and Raymond Burgess are also scheduled to stand trial for the murder of Cotton.

Cotton and Michael Perry Echols, 18, of Smyrna, were abducted from a service station after four persons had robbed it. They were driven to the Bankhead Highway where they were told to get out of the car and run.

Pen Killings bring 2 Death Sentences

CARSON CITY, Nev. — A jury has convicted and sentenced two white prisoners to death for killing two black inmates during a race riot in the state prison mess hall.

The 11-woman, one-man district court panel deliberated about 40 minutes before deciding the penalty for James Taylor and Claude Theriault who had been charged with capital murder.

The charges stemmed from a 1976 prison battle with whites and American-Indians against blacks. Taylor, 32, was also convicted of six counts of attempted murder in the wounding of six black inmates.

A third inmate, Danny Ross, was found guilty of two counts first-degree murder and will face life in prison.

District Judge Frank Gregory set March 6 for the formal sentencing of the three. Gregory said an appeal to the Nevada Supreme Court will be automatic.

Black inmates Ralph Alfonzo and Harold Wilson were stabbed to death in the mess hall fight and six others were wounded in the attack, which prosecutors said was planned as revenge for a prior assault on whites by blacks.

Sipho Buthelezi

Vukani Magubane

Sipho Buthelezi, associate of Steven Biko, spoke at the Unitarian Church in Amherst on the black consciousness movement in South Africa today.

According to Buthelezi, the struggle in South Africa is an anti-colonial struggle, that has advanced to being an anti imperialist struggle. "We are fighting to liberate ourselves, as well as free South Africa from foreign imperialists he said. "We are not against white people but, we are against colonial oppression and U.S. imperialism." He went on to say that, "the theory of driving whites to the sea is an old theory that should be thrown out, for we are struggling to eliminate racisim."

Buthelezi called on the people of the U.S. to think very seriously about participating in the support movement that is going on in South Africa. He $sked that the same support that was given to the people of Vietnam be given to the people struggling in South Africa. "The Vietnam situation is closely related to the South African situation."

He also related the racism that exists in America, and the struggles of the working class in America, against the corporations with the struggle in South Africa. "The success in South Africa will enhance the struggle here," he said. Americans cannot say that they are free people as long as their government oppresses other people in third world countries". Buthelezi cited U.S. imperialism as, the principal enemy and main exploiter of South African blacks.

"The resistance movement in South Africa is in a difficult situation having been forced to go underground," Buthelezi said. People have come to realize that freedom can only come through armed struggle. "We will take up arms not only to defend ourselves but, to achieve political goals." Whether a repressive system has major weapons it can never defeat the will of people determined to gain independence.

NAACP Backtracks on Energy Position

The NAACP is reportedly attempting to backtrack somewhat from its controversial energy policy opposing President Jimmy Carter's plan for regulation of gas prices (Guardian, Feb. 8).

The stand, widely hailed by the Wall St. Journal as "turning the corner" to support "free-marketers instead of the interventionists," was attacked by many liberal and progressive observers both inside and outside the organization.

In a weekly syndicated column published in many of the nation's Black newspapers, NAACP executive director Benjamin Hooks wrote last week, "The current debate over the NAACP energy policy statement is centered around one principal aspect of the revolutionary document — deregulation. Nowhere in the statement is the word deregulation or regulation used."

In an interview with the New York Black weekly Amsterdam News, Hooks charged that the NAACP position had been misrepresented in the press. He did not deny, however, that the NAACP had originally called for an end to price controls.

Doomed Youth Warns Others Against Dope

MIAMI — "To all the other kids in America: 'Don't mess with drugs. They ruined my life,' " says Frank A. Ross Jr., a 16-year-old youth awaiting death in the electric chair at the Florida State Penitentiary.

Ross was convicted of first degree murder of Mrs. Helen Dixon.

He was charged with another youth, James E. Wells, who was sentenced to life inprisonment.

Both youths testified that they had gone to Mrs. Dixon's to look at a car she was selling. Wells said Ross knocked the woman down, kicked her and ripped out her phone.

Ross testified he did not know why he had attacked Mrs. Dixon.

He said: "I don't remember doing the lady. I was sniffing on cocaine. I was out of my head. I didn't know what was happening."

Ross said he left home at age 15 after having fights with his stepfather. At this same age he also started taking cocaine.

He said he managed to stay out of trouble until he became involved in drugs.

While in school he was a promising athlete. His ambition was to finish school and possibly become a "topflight" running back.

Now, he said, he does not think about the future.

He is the second-youngest youth in American to receive the death sentence.

He says, "I don't want to be executed. I want to live. I got a long time to live. I'm afraid of death. I'm not ready to die yet."

"This would never have happened but for drugs. If I can ever get out of this place and walk with my friends again, I ain't never going to mess with drugs no more," said Ross.

For My People

Margaret Walker

For my people everywhere singing their slave songs repeatedly:
their dirges and their ditties and their blues and jubilees, praying their prayers nightly to an unknowing god, bending their knees humbly to an unseen power.

For my people lending their strength to the years: to the gone years and the now years and the maybe years, washing ironing cooking scrubbing sewing mending hoeing plowing digging planting pruning patching dragging along never gaining never reaping never knowing and never understanding;

For my playmates in the clay and dust and sand of Alabama backyards playing baptizing and preaching, and doctor and jail and soldier and school and mama and cooking and playhouse and concert and store and Miss Choomby and hair and company;

For the cramped bewildered years we went to school to learn to know the reasons why and the answers to and the people who and the places where and the days when, in memory of the bitter hours when we discovered we were black and poor and small and different and nobody wondered and nobody understood;

For the boys and girls who grew in spite of these things to be MAN and WOMAN, to laugh and dance and sing and play and drink their wine and religion and success, to marry their playmates and bear children and then die of consumption and anemia and lynching;...

For my people standing staring trying to fashion a better way from confusion from hypocrisy and misunderstanding, trying to fashion a world that will hold all the people all the faces all the adams and eves and their countless generations;

LET A NEW EARTH RISE. Let another world be born. Let a bloody peace be written in the sky. Let a second generation full of courage issue forth, let a people loving freedom come to growth, let a beautyfull of healing and a strength of final clenching be the pulsing in our spirits and our blood. Let the martial songs be written, let the dirges disappear. LET a race of men now rise and take control.

Our 'Roots, Achievements, Projections

By J. Rupert Picott

The 1978 theme for the National Afro-American History Month is particularly appropriate. It is "Roots, Achievements and Projections."

In 1915, the history scholar Carter G. Woodson founded the Association for the Study of Afro-American Life and History, then Negro Life and History, for the expressed purpose of getting:

(1) Blacks proud of Afro-American and African heritage, and

(2) All Americans to recognize, understand and appreciate the contributions of Afro-Americans to the totality of the nation.

One of the means which Dr. Woodson used to focus attention on these goals was the institution in 1926 of Afro-American History Month, then Negro History Week.

The observance has been expanded to one month because of demand by thousands of persons that "so much needs to be done in the process of teaching and learning of Afro-American contributions, that an entire month is needed.

Indeed, we count this as a logical step toward the ultimate achievement of placing Black History properly in all books and other media throughout the year.

Since the history of the Afro-American has been relatively obscured, it is necessary not only to emphasize the existence of that history, but also to examine it carefully in order that accurate interpretations may be rendered.

Early scholars in this field, such as Carter G. Woodson, viewed black history not simply as an academic pursuit; but rather felt that this knowledge was itself a combatant against a black negative self-image and the racist notions used to rationalize segregation and discrimination.

An appreciation and understanding of the value of the African heritage may well be imparted to young children through their pre-school experiences. Pre-school children are perceptually oriented.

Therefore, it would be meaningful to them if concepts of African heritage, slavery, and contemporary affairs were concretely introduced through the use of materials that stimulate interests.

Pre-school children should be guided to the understanding that Africa, the second largest continent in the world, has a rich history and culture dating back many hundreds of years.

The shape of the continent should be easy for a pre-schooler to remember because its shape is quite different from all the other continents except South America. The diversity of the continent should also be noted. Nonetheless, the common underlying condition of closeknit communities and extended kinships was common to all.

Ancient Africa, the home of mankind, was the mainstream of world history. Africa had the world's best architects, surveyors, and engineers. One famous physician and architect, Imhotep of Egypt, built the first step pyramid. Pyramids were monuments built of stone in the shape of a three dimensional triangle.

Arts and crafts reached a high level in ancient Africa and have maintained their excellence through present times. Carved objects of ivory and wood, bronze, clay, gold, iron, and copper were functional as well as beautiful. Even the ancient art form, rock painting, had explicit significance, the telling of the people's daily life and history.

All of these art forms attest to the great craftsmanship of the African. It is important to note that the iron industry had its foundation in ancient Africa, where Africans mined and smelted iron for the making of tools, crafts, and ornaments.

Children can be shown the connection between the iron products of their world and the discovery of the iron industry in Africa Modern technology has its foundation in Black Africa.

Another aspect of appreciating the African heritage is in realizing that many of the animals which so captivate children's interest at the zoo live in Africa. In relating this it is important NOT to use the improper term, "jungle," which was given to imply a dark, twisted place where evil lurks.

Though Africa has densely forested areas with thick vegetation, "jungle" gives a negative connotation to the African environment. Furthermore, zebras, giraffes, elephants, buffalos, and big cats (with the exception of the tiger) are distributed in Africa's grassy flatlands.

The red, black and green flag has come to be another representational symbol of African heritage. These are among the oldest national colors known to man. The colors were used by the Zinj Empire which flourished during the 1000 A.D. period on the coast of East Africa. It was of the Zinj seas that Sinbad the Sailor recorded his fabulous adventures.

Marcus Garvey, father of African Nationalism, revived the colors during his movement to inspire black people and to symbolize the redeeming of Africa and liberating of the black race.

Since the late 1950's, when the independence struggle began to reap results, variations of the colors have been adopted by many independent black nations on the African continent, on the Islands, and in South America.

The red symbolizes life, the red blood that runs warm giving life to the body. Green symbolizes African land, the rich soil that sustains us through vegetation and other resources. Black symbolizes the particular race of people, the Afro-American.

The black experience in America is grounded in slavery. Snatched from his African homeland and thrust into the horrors of the middle passage, the African was reduced to a status of chattel property.

By separating families, dividing tribal groups, and imposing alien norms and values, the process of slave acculturation stripped the black man of his land and language and denied him the memory of his traditional heritage.

Slaves were never content with their lot as slaves. Open revolts took place in South Carolina, 1711, in N.Y., 1712 and 1741, Boston, Mass., 1723, and Va., 1730.

Not only were they given the "scraps" of the food and clothing, but they were beaten and killed brutally for almost any "offense."

It was only when slavery became less profitable that the North began talk about ending slavery.

Africans first came as explorers to the Americas. Africans arrived many years before whites. Balboa, a portuguese explorer, found a race of black men in the Darien district of South America.

Early burial caves have been found in Bahamas like those of Africa. Since 1501 African explorers accompanied the Spaniards in exploring Guatemala, Chile, Peru and Venezuela with Ponce de Leon, Cabezo de Vaca, Fray Marcos de Niza, and DeSoto.

First Africans as indentured servants arrived in Jamestown, Va., in 1619. Africans transported to colonies as slaves 16th-19th century captured from various cultures.

The laws that permitted brutality of slaves became known as slave codes. Without passes slaves were caught and whipped. Situation similar to passes Africans in South Africa must carry today. Runaways were killed as punishment. Free Africans were not really free.

Some were patriotic and fought in American Revolution. Crispus Attucks was the first to die, March 5, 1770 in Boston, Massacre, 3000 Black soldiers fought.

Africans consistently resisted slavery: a proud legacy for people of African heritage. Many jumped overboard on middle passage to America. Runaways fled to the North. In Jamaica, there were many runaways called "maroons" who were very independent, ferocious, and clever fighters. In Brazil, the maroons formed special villages called "quilombas" such as Palmares in the Province of Pernambuco. Palmares shows the sacrifices people will make for liberty. The leaders chose death rather than to surrender and be slaves when the Portuguese placed it in a state of siege.

This is only a miniscule reference to the glorious history of a proud, courageous people that most of America has been deprived. This is the neglected history that we seek to tell, for we see this history as "The Torch to the Future." There is no chance for a bright future without this nation's recognition of the tremendous worth of the black man. That worth is undercored in our history.

KING???

(Rev. Gilbert H. Caldwell
Room 309 New African House
Room 428 Student Union

I awaited the television drama "King" with curiosity and anticipation. I left Amherst on Sunday afternoon in order to be in New Haven to view the first segment with my wife and my 17 and 14 year old sons. As we watched and discussed the presentation, I realized again, that the myth called racial progress and integration had come close to depriving my sons of an understanding of the struggle and strength of Black people. My experience that first night convinced me that I must renew my efforts to "tell the story" to my sons and to all the Black sons and daughters I meet. I must also share the story with others, young and old, who are courageous enough to listen and learn.

I viewed the three segments with mixed emotions. I was pleased that the powerful medium of television was taking strong Black men and women into the living rooms of the nation. I was disappointed because it was obvious that the demands of commercialism influenced the presentation. I was pleased that in "King" the nation saw again America's ethical schizophrenia on the issue of racial justice. I thought Paul Winfields words as he so effectively portrayed Martin King were appropriate when just before a major demonstration he said; "television will show to all America the horrors that Black people see all of their lives." I was disappointed that some of the strong colleagues of Dr. King were invisible or miserably camouflaged. Where were Wyatt Walker, Hosea Williams, C.T. Vivian, Jesse Jackson and James Bevel? In order to portray one strong Black man, is it necessary to deny the existence of other strong men? I was disappointed that one or two characters depicted in the film had roles that I could not remember, believe or comprehend.

Seeing the film made me live again the summer I spent in Mississippi doing voter registration with the constant companionship of police and F.B.I. surveillance. I was there when Chaney, Goodman and Schwerner were killed and their bodies were found buried in a dam. I was reminded of the White students who worked with us and I wonder if their experience in Mississippi is shaping the way they practice law, medicine, ministry, teaching, government, today?

As I watched I remembered for the first time in a long time the fear I felt in Selma, in Birmingham and in Montgomery. The deaths of Viola Liuzzo and Rev. James Reeb took place during times when I too had been where they were killed. James Reeb, a Unitarian minister from Boston stood with me on the steps of the Brown's Chapel A.M.E. Church in Selma just before he went off to eat and then be killed. The memories of the deaths of these two committed White persons makes me raise again the question that haunted me throughout the sixties. Does the struggle of Black people take on meaning, only when White lives are lost? Do we remember the millions of African/ Americans who were killed in transit, in slavery, in segregation? In the American mind, are their deaths less significant than the more publicized deaths?

I am a Black man who was born and grew up "down south" but who has lived his adult life "up south". My experiences in both of these places forces me to ask what difference the showing of "King" will make? "Roots" stimulated all kinds of people to research their history, but too few people have been motivated to deal with the legacy of slavery that "Roots" portrays.

Will our nation understand Black anger and impatience any better because of "King"? Will the white intellectuals who oppose affirmative action, reverse themselves? Will Black young people who do not understand Black religion, Black community and Black survival techniques make their efforts to understand? Will Black professionals who sell their souls and their people for a crumb of recognition, check themselves out? Will the business/ governmental combine that leads this nation make renewed efforts to make us the nation we started out to be, but have not yet become?

"King" raised for me and for others the old questions we have been living with for all of our lives. They are the questions our mothers and fathers and all of the mothers and fathers that make up our history have asked silently and openly. "Why?" "How long?"

But I must say that the televised depiction of the struggle of the sixties rekindles my hope. Hope in myself, hope in young men and women who draw inspiration from the Martin Kings, the Rosa Parks and the Malcolm X's. I have already, in the short time I have been on this campus, been inspired by my colleagues, who were moulded by the 60's and now through their teaching, counseling and nuturing are moulding those who will shape the 80's and the 90's. Their dedication nourished my hope.

Finally I must declare that I continue to hope in my God who is about liberation and not oppression; justice with love, rather than love without justice. This was the God of Martin and Malcolm, this is my God!

BLACK MUST LEARN THEIR HISTORY

Militant blacks and right-thinking whites all over America are expressing their dis-satisfaction with America's corrupt system by screaming "I AM SOMEBODY. I MAY BE POOR, BUT I AM SOMEBODY!"

IS IT NEW?

WHEN? — 1943

WHY? Rev. Borders was trying to awaken blacks out of their dying bed of apathy and complacency. He was trying to teach his Sisters and Brothers it was no use to run from the South to the North or from the slums to the suburbs; but, as the late Booker T. Washington tried to teach blacks, "to cast your buckets down where you are." Rev. Borders was trying to teach blacks self-respect, self-reliance, do it yourself and to love thy self.

Carter G. Woodson

Dr. Woodson was the Father of Black History.

This Harvard-educated man sensed early in his career the neglect of black History and spent his lifetime working to change the Afro-American concept of himself and the acceptance of blacks by non-blacks.

The place of his birth, New Canton, Buckingham County, Va., one of the poorest in the state, profoundly shaped his career. His parents, former slaves, needed his help as well as that of eight other children to eke out a living.

Young Carter attended the local school during only a part of its five-month term. The fact that he was largely self-taught until the age of 17 helped develop the study habits which characterized his later studies.

Buckingham County had no secondary school for blacks. This forced Woodson to go to Huntington, W. Va. and the Douglass High School there. Despite the handicaps of his earlier education, he completed the course in a year and a half in 1896, and he was admitted to Berea College, Kentucky, shortly thereafter.

As at Berea and, perhaps, the University of Chicago, none of his courses at Harvard was in black history. This neglect, typical of other institutions of higher learning in the United States, prevailed also at the Sorbonne in Paris, where Woodson studied for one semester during his trip around the world 1906-1907.

Dr. Woodson established the goals for the Association for the Study of Afro-American Life and History.

Dr. Woodson's career encompassed teaching in the Philippines, the "M" Street High School and at the Armstrong Manual Training School and the Miner Teachers College, all in Washington, D.C. He taught history at Howard University and served as dean of the School of Liberal Arts and head of the Graduate Faculty from 1919-1920. He was dean at West Virginia Collegiate Institute, but retired from teaching in 1922 to devote full time attention to the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History and to research and writing. He founded the Journal of Negro History, Jan. 1, 1916, and the Associated Publishers, Inc., to handle the publication or research and writing in 1920.

Dr. Woodson founded the observance of Negro History Week in 1926, which has now been expanded to Afro-American History Month.

On Black Classical Music 'Tom—Tom', Ms. DuBois Last Opera

By Dominique-Rene de Lerma

Shirley Lola Graham Du Bois, who died last year in China, is perhaps remembered more as the wife of W.E.B. Du Bois than as a composer, yet she was an important figure in Afro-American musical life.

She was born in 1904, the daughter of a AME minister, then serving in Indianapolis. His work took him to Africa for four of her young years and these contacts doubtless contributed to those stimulae which guided her later in her life.

In 1934 she graduated from Oberlin College and followed additional studies at Harvard University, the Institute of Musical Art (now known as the Juilliard School of Music) and in Paris at the Sorbonne.

For three years, she was head of the music department at Morgan State University, then known as Morgan College.

While a student at Oberlin, she produced a three-act opera, "Tom-Tom," at the Cleveland Stadium.

This extravagantly staged work, which called for 500 singers and dancers, plus orchestra, was given its premiere on July 3, 1933. In the original cast were Jules Bledsoe and Luther King.

The story of "Tom-Tom," which she also created, showed the evolution of oppression from before 1619 to recent times.

The first act takes place in Africa, just before the diaspora to North America. Ironically, it is the arrival of the slave hunters which saves the hero and heroine from sacrificial deaths.

Like Eva Jessye before her, Ms. Shirley Graham moved from Morgan to New York, and here she was supervisor of the Black Unit of the Federal Theatre, from which came the Broadway success, "Swing Mikado."

In the second act, the separation of the lovers comes about because of the arrival of the Union army, thereby preventing the sale of the heroine as a slave.

The final act takes place in Harlem. As in Offenbach's "Tales of Hoffman," we meet the same couple again, as well as the same villian. In this act the latter is attempting to encourage the hero (now a preacher) and the heroine (now a popular blues singer) to return to Africa. The ship which is to carry them back explodes and, before the final curtain comes down, a member of the crowd leaps forth and stabs the villian.

Efforts to locate the manuscript of this opera have thus far not been fruitful.

It is unfortunate that a copy was not deposited with a major library, one which sought to preserve a work which made a major impression of the critics of the time and may have been the first opera by an Afro-American woman.

Savior of Lives Charles R. Drew

Charles Drew was born in Washington, June 3, 1904.

In 1933 McGill University awarded Dr. Drew a medical degree and a M. degree, which stands for Master in Surgery. He spent the next two years as intern and resident in medicine at the Royal Victoria and Montreal General hospitals.

During his student Career at McGill, he became a close friend of Dr. John Beattie, a British instructor. It was after one of Dr. Beattie's lectures on the structure of blood and the blood groups that Drew began to think more and more about blood transfusions.

Immediately Drew started reading every book on the subject he could find.

Drew noticed that whenever operations were scheduled or when a serious illness occurred which required blood transfusions, there was tension and anxiety in the laboratory. Donors had to be located, and blood types had to be matched. All of this took time; meanwhile a life might be slipping away for the want of a pint of blood.

Charles Drew began to think that there must be a way to collect and store blood for emergencies.

Charles Drew had read that a doctor in Chicago had tried to preserve blood in ice, but found that the red cells were fragile and broke down. Drew read every report on preserved blood again and again. In 1937, he read that Cook County Hospital in Chicago had opened a Blood Bank under the direction of Dr. Bernard Fantus. This seemed to be a good plan: to borrow blood like a person borrowing money from a bank, and then repay it so that others might borrow. Charles was concerned about the chemical changes that occurred in the stored blood, and how long it could be preserved. Scientific research in the preservation of blood became his consuming interest.

Dr. Drew observed in his controlled experiments that red blood cells did not break down if they were refrigerated immediately at a certain temperature and handled carefully. Special containers were designed to store blood in huge refrigerators. The containers kept the heavy red cells separate from the liquid part of the blood, the plasma.

Dr. Drew instructed his staff to discard unused blood when it was seven days old. One morning Dr. Drew noticed one of the bottles to be discarded. He looked at the layer of red cells and the plasma. As he examined the bottle, he reasoned that plasma contained every substance of whole blood except red cells, and that the red cells were what made blood preservation so troublesome. Anxiously he went into the laboratory to run tests with the clear fluid.

Dr. Drew set out to prove that plasma might be more useful than whole blood. When patients were brought into the emergency ward, a blood transfusion from the blood bank was by-passed because plasma did not have to be blood-typed.

In February, 1941, the Army and Navy requested 15,000 units of dried plasma. A small unit for the armed services was established at the Presbyterian Hospital in New York. It was under the auspices of the New York Chapter of the American Red Cross. Dr. Drew was appointed the director of the first American Red Cross Plasma Bank.

As Medical Director, Dr. Drew was faced with a new kind of problem. Whereas Dr. Drew and his associates were preoccupied with saving lives, some Americans demanded that blood taken from Blacks be collected, stored, and administered separately from Caucasians. Dr. Drew and his associates could do nothing to stop the demands. The issue caused a widespread controversy. Newspaper reporters sought a statement from the Medical Director about the issue. Dr. Drew said in part, "The fact is that test by race does not stand up in the laboratory."

After making his comment, Dr. Drew was quietly dropped from the program. When Pearl Harbor was bombed on December 7, 1941, 750 pints of plasma were flown to Hawaii. That one shipment alone saved hundreds of lives. And the man who made it possible was asked to resign because of his stand on racial separation of blood.

On April 1, 1950, Dr. Drew and a party of three other doctors left Washington, D.C. for a doctors' conference held annually at Tuskegee Institute in Alabama. On route to the conference, Dr. Drew's car overturned near Burlington, North Carolina. He was the only passenger who received fatal injuries and he died for lack of blood due to racial segregation.

'Gentile Genius of the Guitar'

Elizabeth 'Libba' Cotten

WASHINGTON — While others of her age have quietly settled into retirement, Elizabeth "Libba" Cotten appeared in 20 cities last year and is currently working on her third folk album. This 84-year-old great-grandmother, who never took a formal music lesson in her life, but is acclaimed by folk music critics as the "gentle genius fo the guitar," was profiled on CBS-TV's "February Magazine" on Thursday.

Born near Chapel Hill, N.C., Elizabeth Cotten coaxed her brother into giving her guitar lessons. Teaching left-handed playing on a right-handed guitar was so frustrating for her brother that she wound up instructing herself.

Mrs. Cotten married at 15 and gave birth to a daughter. Divorced, she moved to Maryland where she found work with the musically famous Seeger family. She later put down her ironing board and picked up her guitar again. Libba made her first appearance in 1959 with Mike Seeger.

Her simple songs and distinct style of guitar playing has won her recognition in the folkfore archives of the Library of Congress. Today, Mrs. Cotten lives in a modest apartment in Washington where she still composes.

The "Hirohito Case": The Last Round

"The petition for a writ of certiorari is denied." With these words the Supreme Court of the United States denied a request for review by Elizabeth J. Young and Kenneth R. Chin last January 9th. Ken, a UMass Science student, was not allowed the dignity of an explanation as to why an innocent man must bear the lifetime brand of a convicted felon.

Wade H. McCree, Jr., Solicitor General for the United States had stated in a brief submitted by the Justice Department in Washington D.C. that "a review of the record compels us to agree with petitioner that the evidence was insuffiencient." An Everywomen's Center Newsletter article reported last November that Liz and Ken believed they were used as scapegoats and their convictions were actually a coverup to justify their illegal arrests.

Before returning to UMass for spring classes, Ken made a final request to the U.S. Attorney's office, in the lower court where he was convicted, to also agree with the Solicitor General. He is hoping that the 2nd Circuit Court of Appeals, which previously upheld his convictions will, in light of the agreement of innocence, order a judgement of acquittal. Ken was convicted of conspiring with Liz Young to transport a firearm (hunting rifle) into New York and receiving the gun. Liz was convicted of doing the actual transporting but was acquitted of conspiring with Ken. No evidence was presented against Ken other than the fact that he was living in the same apartment and that he was a male. He faced up to 10 years in prison and-or $10,000 fine while Liz faced half those amounts. Both were placed on 3 years probation after an impassioned outcry for mercy came from the Asian-American community.

Liz and Ken, both licensed hunters, were initially arrested on suspicion of involvement in a plot to kill the Emperor of Japan, who was in the U.S. on a Royal tour in October of 1975. Only the previous month, two unsuccessful attempts upon the life of then President Ford, by Lynette "Squeaky" Fromme and by Sara Jane Moore had made the Secret Service look leadfooted. Senator Church's Intelligence Committee was looking into the Service as other Senators made noises about its efficiency and Treasury Secretary William Simon had less than two weeks before announced an "intensified" evaluation of the Service.

After finally getting positive front page headlines in the New York Times and Daily News, and around the world, the Secret Service withdrew from the case, handing it over to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms. The plot to kill a foreign dignitary was quietly forgotten, and the defendents were prosecuted on unrelated charges.

The case has gone through two trials, guilty findings, an appeal, a motion to the Supreme Court for review and now back down to the 2nd Circuit Court of Appeals. Along the way, material misstatements by the F.B.I., misreadings of the law, questionable courtroom procedures, the disappearance of an important record and the failure of a tape recorder at a crucial point provide the case with all the markings of a political frame-up.

"It's nothing new that Asian-Americans, the minority of minorities, are used as scapegoats during times of mass hysteria and public reaction," Ken explained as to the reason for his arrest. "We have learned that when the government attacks we must resist. Human rights are for the right time, the right place and the right humans, as the Government sees fit."

Ken's request to the U.S. Attorney's office represents the last attempt by him to gain an acquittal. Resistance on the part of the Young-Chin Legal Aid Committee will be suspended indefinitely because of the developing health problems of Liz Young who has been leading the Committee's efforts. If you or your organization wishes to join in this last ditch effort, the Committee asks that you send a Western Union Mailgram to the U.S. Attorney's Office urging him to agree with the request made by Ken's lawyer, Ira London.

For more information call Ken Chin at 546-9266.

War, Super-Power Rivalry And Revolution In The Horn Of Africa. Part Two

The February 1974 movement is a mass movement that resulted from the contradictions that was inherent in the semi-feudal, semi-colonial Ethiopian state. The February upserge resulted in the over throwal of Haile Selassie, and also marked the beginning of the new democratic revolution in Ethiopia.

What makes the February Movement Particular?

(1) It was a result of the wide participation of the popular masses, a participation that was never seen before in such intensity (workers, poor peasants-rural proletariat, students-teachers and other section of the urban petty bourgeoise, poor soldiers and democratic lower officers, women as women, moslems as moslems, all joined hand to hand in this popular upraisal.

(2) The political nature of the demands which exhibited an attack on the system as a system.

(3) The apparent solidarity of action that was existing among the popular masses, a solidarity that was manifested in joint actions or inter-class demands (workers calling for land to the tiller etc.)

(4) The contribution it made to the development of the consciousness of the masses who learned from their own activities and the growing awareness of the masses that their alliance was stronger than the repressive machinery of the ruling class.

The February movement, even though it had grounds that made it 'special' had, nevertheless, factors that made it similar to all other mass movements that had occurred in Ethiopia. The most important of which is that there was still no proletarian party that had made its appearance. Even though the popular masses evolved in a relatively coherent united front during the course of the struggle and revolutionaries (belonging to secret organization or not) did a non-negligible work of mobilizing the masses and intensifying the struggle, the movement was affected by the absence of a combative vanguard organization. Herein lies the main weakness of the movement. This weakness benefitted the enemies of the people in their attempt to salvage the situation and to seize the state apparatus.

The Military, its Subversive Intervention and the Intensification of the Struggle of the Popular Masses:

The intervention of the military into the political scene of the country is not novel. (It has been one of the main and barbarically effective arms of the state apparatus.)

In Ethiopia, the military movement started in February as a just struggle against the oppression of the soldiers and lower officers by the military's high brass.

What characterizes this movement at that time?

(1) It was animated essentially by soldiers and lower-grade officers;

(2) Its demands were strictly sectoral; i.e. pay increase and better living condition.

(3) It was spontaneous and did not start as a nationwide organized mutiny.

The sectoral demands of the soldiers showed clearly that they were not as yet conscious of their ties with the workers and poor peasants. Moreover, their sectoral demands also manifested certain obvious lack of democratic principles.

How can we characterize the Military's dramatic intervention as a whole?

We can say that it was a preventive and substitutive action, the ruling class and the system was in a great danger of, if not destroyed at least of being irredeemably thrown off-balance. The alarmingly growing combativity of the masses, the demands for fundamental change, the paralysis of the state apparatus, the leading role being assumed by the proletariat, the growing unity between the proletariat, the revolutionary wing of the petty bourgeoise (students, democratic army-men, teachers) and the poor peasants, the radical actions of the peasants-rural proletariat against landowners and foreign capitalist farmers, the demand for a setting-up of a popular provisional government, the regular apparition of revolutionary journals like DEMOCRACIA, the rejection of half-hearted reforms by the masses, etc. were all loud and clear signals that unless the imperialists and the bourgeoise launched a fast "operation save the system" Ethiopia will be hell for them.

After the top feudal strong-man Haile Selassie collapsed, the petty-bourgeoise military elite no more wanted to rely on the support of the turbulent mass movement. Between the worker-peasant masses and imperialism it chose the latter and began to request for arms form its retainers in order to supress the popular masses and more over rejected the popular demand for the setting up of a popular provisional government even in the capital city. The cities and larger towns are filled with

The Junta's anti-people special penal code decrees or laws are enough proof of this. What is evident is that the junta soon moved to totally demobilize the masses (either through violence or demagogy or a combination of the two) and to make them unable to launch a massive assault against the system as they did in February.

Seen in this light (i.e. in its substitutive and preventive role) the aims and perspectives of the junta's reforms will become clear. Thus,

a) The military is not a third force. It is part and parcel of the state apparatus, the bourgeoise state apparatus.

b) Its intervention is not neutral but in the service of the bourgeoise and the system.

c) Its intervention "substitutes" the bourgeoise insofar as the latter is incapable of recuperating the situation and consolidating its power.

Another important point that must not escape any attention is that the military regimes 'reforms' benefit, on the whole, the bourgeoise and international capitalism and at the same time are destined to short-circuit the revolutionary struggle of the masses.

Moreover the Junta's inability to solve the economic, social and political problems forced it to intensify its repression measures which lead to its isolation.

MILITARY RULE IN ETHIOPIA, — ISOLATION, FRUSTRATION & REPRESSION

Ethiopia is ruled by a bloody military dictatorship with no popular support or social base to speak of. For the vast majority of the Ethiopian people, the rule of this bloody military gangs has been a reign of terror, wide scale torture, rampant execution and mass murder. However, this brutal rule and atrocious condition has gone largely unknown (or rather distortedly known) in the outside world, partly due to the saturated propaganda mills of the regime and partly due to the support the regime has from its foreign retainers. It is, therefore, not surprising that many progressives organizations and individuals are not clear about the true color of the Ethiopian junta.

Ethiopia at present is in a situation where the old problems of poverty, ignorance, disease and rampant repression persists. The country continues to be ravaged by famine. The people suffer from want of basic necessities. Such basic food items as bread are rare starving peasants and other declassed social groups. Prostitution has reached incredible proportions. Abject misery and squalor weigh down heavily on the people at an accelerated rate. Workers have frozen wages, but the price of basic items and other necessities have shot up 400 per cent and more. Grain production has sharply declined as a result of the government's war and the drafting of hundreds of thousands of peasants into its so called people militia.

On the other hand, like in the days of Haile Selassie, the privilege of the few is protected. The ruling officers and the bureaucratic class is still engaged in the wasteful and excessive consumption typical of the old style. Nevertheless, this fact of wild extravaganza and jamboree for the dictators and their colors and abject squalor for the vast majority has been diligently denied by the propagandists of the military junta.

The inability of the ruling junta to come out with a correct revolutionary program, the sharpening of the contradiction and the intensification of the class struggle, has forced the junta to resort to the most blatant rule of repression.

As a result, today there is a virtual reign of terror, with hundreds of workers, peasants, young people, members of the oppressed nationalities and other sectors of the society being slaughtered on mass. It was estimated that since the junta came to power over 30,000 workers, students, peasants and other democratic forces were executed. This, of course, does not include the tens of thousands of Eritreans and Ogaden Somalia nationalities that are bombed and viciously exterminated every day. In the cities, and particularly in Addis Abeba, the E.P.R.P. has become the junta's main target.

To show the true color of the junta, one has to give a brief highlight of the major killings that have been committed in the last three and a half years:

—In January 1975, 103 NCO's and officers were executed in secret.

—In July-August 1975, in the towns of Assayta and of mass rapes of young girls in the presence of their families, forcefully pulling earrings from women, raging to the ground of entire villages with bombs and murdering hundreds of people was known.

—In July-August, the airforce bombed an entire village in Eritrea with an estimated death toll running to 5000 people.

—In May 1, 1975 (International Workers Day) many workers, students and others were murdered with machine gun fire in Addis Abeba, Dire Dawa and Gondor.

—In May-June 1976, hundreds of thousands of peasants were beaten, wounded and killed because of their refusal to participate in the so-called peasant march on Eritrea.

—In September 24-25, 1976, 28 political prisoners were shot to death for alleged participation in distributing anti-junta leaflets of the EPRP.

—In the same period the bodies of students, teachers and workers were found thrown in Jarri district.

—In November 2, 1976, the junta officially announced the execution of 23 members of EPRP.

—In November 18, of the same year the junta executed 27 more alleged members of EPRP, including Bablie Haile Selassie, a 13-year-old juvenile.

—In this same period the so-called 'Flame Brigade' and other government death squad killed a total of 32 boys and girls in the different parts of Addis Abba.

—In February 1977, eight intellectuals were secretly executed.

—In February 26, 1977, 44 of the 470 political prisoners were executed in police stations in the Addis Abba area. All aged 15 to 25.

—In the same day 25 workers of the Addis Abba cement factory were killed.

—The latest move of the junta was the establishment of the so-called 'Supreme Military Strategic Committee'. This committee composed of six junta officers, seven Russian and three Cuban, among other things were responsible for unleashing the so-called "Red Terror". This same committee was also responsible for the planning and execution of the December massacre, where 200 revolutionaries and democrats were killed. This committee was also responsible for the so-called "3rd. House to House Search", the outcome of which was the cold blooded murder of over 700 young boys and girls (aged 11-13) in a week.

—During the same period the junta imprisoned over 20,000 political prisoners in the most deplorable conditions. The method of torture used in the interrogation of this political prisoner include, nail pulling, biting, forcing to eat ones own excretia, rape, electric shock, isolating in cold rooms etc.

—The junta was also directly responsible for the mass exodus of over a quarter of a million Ethiopian, Eritrean and Ogaden-Somali.

In the Sudan alone there are over 100,000 refugees while the rest are divided between Kenya, Djibouti and other neighboring countries.

New CCEBS Counselor : Valerie Nii

Valerie Nii, a former University of Massachusetts undergraduate student recently became the new Committee for the Collegiate Education of black students (CCEBS) counselor for the sophomore class. "I am presently being trained and getting familiar with things around the place," she said.

Prior to this new appointment, Nii had been working for the comprehensive employment and training act (CETA), a federally funded program as a job counselor. Her work with CETA included developing career goals and putting people into perspective jobs. As the new sophomore counsel or she hopes to help students think about carer decisions and vocational interests. "Lots of B.A. students cannot find employment because students today graduate very idealistically in that they don't realize what the employment world is like. Something is happening in their college education whereas they come out with no job skills." Her advice to students is that they should get more outside work and job experiences. "So many of the courses offered at colleges and universities today deal with theory and not so much with reality," she said.

Nii hopes to combine her past experience while working with CETA to inform students on the employment world. UMass, she feels, has a lot to offer. "Students don't realize what is available to them. CCEBS can give a lot of support to students, counselors can do your running around; because of the bureaucracy that exists, students cannot get the answers that they need. It takes four years to learn the ropes."

Nii, though not a CCEBS student during her undergraduate years has a lot of praise for the program. "I was not a CCEBS student but I utilized the facilities of CCEBS because I was able to get answers and support." CCEBS has come a long way. The programs it has to offer have expanded and more and more students are now utilizing it than before.

La Orchestra Alegre

BILAL ABDUL-HAQQ

La Orchestra Alegre (photo by Miriam Carter)

Last Friday night, Feb. 24, 1978, a Latin cultural evening and dance was held, with events such as speakers, poetry and a drawing headed by the Taller Espiritu Libre.

Located at the Student Union Ballroom, it was a spectacular event that only the beholding-eyes could grasp.

A hispanic group out of New York who call themselves, "La Orquestra Alegre", exploded with sounds that captivated the audience good vibrations and profound effects that will not be forgotten for a long time to come.

As the night of the dance was culminating, as the climax was reaching its apex with poetry from Brenda Willcott, Roberto Lasanta and the powerfully explosive "Orquestra Alegre", the fire was preparing itself for the burning.

The timing and synchronization of the performers mentioned, lifted the people off their feet, like well-trained gorilla warriors preparing themselves for the battle. From the Caribbean to the Student Union Ballroom, there was music such as the Merengue, Guaguanco and Boleros that would pierce the minds of every single individual with their own story to tell.

We would like to thank everyone such as Masters of Ceremony, Miguel Contreras and Vikki Hernandez; conscious raising poetry on the part of Brenda Willcott and Roberto Lasanta; and of course "La Orquestra Alegre", whose music energized the motion of the audience and to all the organizations that made the event such a success and transformed on an idea into a reality.

Puerto Rican Solidarity

Puerto Rico continues to be the foremost United States colony in the world. Millions of dollars are taken out in profits every year by the corporations drawn to the island for tax free profits and a large unemployed working class which can be paid far below mainland wage standards. Throughout the history of this occupation of Puerto Rico the people have risen up against US control and demanded independence for their nation.

Today thousands of workers are on strike against the electrical and water resources authority in Puerto Rico. Workers have been shot, beaten on picket lines and jailed as they fight for a better way of life. At the same time more and more workers are connecting the fight for total independence with the struggle for workers' rights. This is an explosive combination. A militant workers' movement that sees the solution to their problems in independence is a force that can not long be resisted by Puerto Rico's colonial government and the forces that support them in the U.S.

Twenty-five years ago, on March 1, 1954 four Puerto Rican patiots, Lolita Lebron, Rafael Cancel Miranda, Andres Cordero and Irvin Flores, in a dramatic action raised the cry for Puerto Rican independence in the halls of the U.S. Congress. Unfurling Puerto Rican flags, shouting "Viva Puerto Rico Libre' and firing guns they directly challenged US rule on the island. Five Congressmen were wounded, none seriously. All four Puerto Ricans were tried and sentenced to long prison terms. Andres Cordero was recently released from prison; dying of cancer. The others are still in US prisons.

On Friday evening March 3 the Puerto Rico Solidarity Committee will hold an activity to commemorate this March 1 event. Ruth Reynolds, a long time activist in the fight to free the Nationalist prisoners and gain independence for Puerto Rico will speak at the Unitarian Church in Northampton starting at 7:30. Ms. Reynolds was in Puerto Rico in the early 50s writing a book on the student movement there when she was jailed for her support of the Nationalists. She spent 1¼ years in Puerto Rican prisons. She knew several members of the Nationalist Party of Puerto Rico and can share with us the rich history of struggle on the island. There will also be an update on recent events in Puerto Rico.

Pierpont hears residency limiting proposal

By MARK LECCESE
Collegian Staff

James Matlack spoke to Pierpont residents last night to announce his plans to change Pierpont into a limited residence dorm. He spoke to approximately 175 concerned students in the main lounge of Pierpont last night. (Staff photo by Patrick Dobbs)

Southwest Residential College Master-Director James H. Matlack last night told the residents of Pierpont dormitory about his plan to limit residence in Pierpont to freshmen and sophomores, starting this fall.

Under the proposed plan, the 34 juniors and 61 sophomores who are now living in Pierpont would not be allowed to return to live in the dorm next fall.

Matlack said the reason for his decision was to "bring good order into the house. I mean good order in a positive sense — not a simple-minded notion of regementation, and not an antipathy to political action, as such."

Matlack cited his responsibilities as master-director of Southwest, where Pierpont is located, as the main reason behind his decision. He listed his responsibilities as:

—Maintaining of the performance and morale of the heads of residences in Pierpont. The dorm has had three heads of residence in the past two years, and the present head of residence, Dusty Miller, is planning to leave in the fall, according to Matlack.

—The well-being of the students in the area.

—"The responsibility for reasonable enforcement of University policies and regulations.

About 175 students attended the meeting with Matlack, which was held in the Pierpont main lounge. After Matlack explained his plan to the students, the floor was opened for students to ask questions of Matlack.

Matlack, in a four-page explanation of his plan that was handed out to students at the meeting, also said:

"While I cannot detail all the relevant cases and sources, the following are areas in which improvement must be achieved:

"Pet policy, fire and safety procedures, security practices, persistent damage or disconnection of lights and other equipment, general breakage and property damage, noise level in the dorm, disruptive and destructive behaviors associated with drinking and partying, and the use and sale of drugs."

Matlack also noted the last two complaints came not only from university students and staff, but also from "townspeople including counselors in the Amherst schools."

"Pierpont is a victim of historical circumstances. No other dorm sets up so strong an expectation in people not living in the house," said Matlack.

Matlack said that "Pierpont people have been given the short shift by the Physical Plant and by other people who work in housing."

The proposed change would "not only persuade but hold these people to give the house the proper treatment that it deserves," Matlack said.

Student Government Association Co-president Jon Hite, who attended the meeting, said, "This is just an arbitrary decision, made because the University doesn't like Pierpont."

"The people in Pierpont have rights, and these rights go above the privilege of the University to block bust.

"The damage in Pierpont is not that high. I would say the grade point averages are high.

"Matlack has no idea what's going on down here. The reputation of Pierpont is stenciled in his mind, and he's just helping to exaggerate that reputation."

Asked about the rumor he would resign from his co-presidency if Matlack's plan was implemented, Hite said, "No comment."

Matlack also cited the Inquiry Program, an alternative academic program of freshmen and sophomores that has been housed in Pierpont since its inception, as another reason for his decision.

Administrators of the Inquiry Program came to Matlack and asked to have their offices moved out of Pierpont, according to Matlack.

Senate speaker says free concert probable

By LEO PELOQUIN
Collegian Staff

Undergraduate Student Senate Speaker Pat Whelan said last night he thinks the Senate would pass a proposal for free admission for undergraduate students to the Spring Concert but that he thinks the Senate will keep the concert as a Black American Music Festival.

"I would guess that the Senate would go for a proposal charging no admission fee," said Whelan.

He said pressure from students on their Senators would probably get the proposal brought up at Wednesday's Senate meeting.

At last Wednesday's meeting, the Senate passed a compromise motion to have a Black American Music Festival with a $3 admission fee. Student Government Association co-Presidents John Hite and Marion "Pinky" Batiste vetoed the motion on Thursday, meaning that the motion will be reconsidered at tomorrow's meeting.

Whelan commented about the concert after meeting with Stan Kinard, coordinator of the office of Third World affairs, Jack Albeck and Bob Humphreys, members of the Union Program Council (UPC), and other members of the Student Senate.

Whelan called the meeting to get the two groups, UPC and BAMF (Black Amer. Music Fest.) to combine their efforts on concert plans. Kinard represents the BAMF group, Albeck is co-chairman of UPC, and Humphreys is a public relations person for UPC.

Whelan said, "The only way the festival is going to come off smoothly is if they (UPC & BAMF) are both working together. I called the meeting in the hope that problems could be clarified and so both groups could get together and work out a real fine show."

He stressed the need for UPC input in the planning of the show.

"They have the knowledge and experience to make it work," said Whelan.

UPC has organized several concerts at UMass including last year's Spring Concert, Randy Newman's recent appparance at the FAC, and the upcoming (March 15) J. Geils concert at the FAC.

The budget for this year's concert is "around the $37,180 mark" according to Kinard. The tentative talent line-up would headline either Bob Marley and the Wailers or Herbie Hancock. The other acts would include the Ellington Orchestra, Al Jarreau, and the J.C. White Singers. The total cost of talent would be about $17,000, according to Kinard.

Kinard said it was important to have a number of groups specializing in different areas of black music in keeping with the concept of the Black American Music Festival.

Albeck said at the beginning of the meeting that he was concerned about the role the UPC would play in organizing the concert.

"Since the concert is passed and is a reality, what is the involvement of UPC?" he asked.

Kinard said, "If there is to be a concert, UPC will have to play an integral role. I don't see any problems. The UPC and the Concert Committee should be able to work together to put together a good show."

Humphreys said the main problem occured because the UPC wanted to put together their own Spring show.

"We were sort of feeling hurt. We had wanted to throw our own concert and we felt as though we were raising someone else's child," said Humphreys.

He said, however, if the Senate ratified the present concert format, the UPC would be ready and willing to work hard on plans for the Spring Concert.

Trustees asked to revise med school 'payback'

BOSTON [AP] — Legislative leaders have asked the University of Massachusetts trustees to go back to the drawing boards and come up with a better payback system for graduates of its medical school.

The legislature mandated last year that students entering the Worcester medical school next fall be required to repay the state either in money or in services for their education.

Sen. James A. Kelly Jr., D-Oxford, chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, met yesterday with university officials to discuss the payback proposal adopted by the trustees in December.

"I'm not pleased with their action," Kelly said of the trustees' vote, but I am pleased with the direction.

"I expect some adjustments," he added. "There are hundreds of ways of doing it."

The trustees are scheduled to meet again Wednesday at the university's Boston campus.

The trustees voted in December to require medical school graduates to either serve for one year in the state or pay back a total of $8,000. Kelly said he preferred a much larger monetary payback, which would encourage more students to opt for the service payback. He added that he would also like to see the trustees adopt an income trigger, so that doctors would not have to pay the state any money until their income hit a level of $40,000 or $50,000 a year, but Kelly said the actual cost of educating each student is about $30,000 a year.

Franklin Patterson, acting interim president of the university said the trustees are concerned that a larger monetary payback would be a financial burden. He said more than 60 per cent of students at the medical school come from families whose income is $20,000 a year or less.

Dr. Roger J. Bulger, chancellor of the medical school, agreed that the relatively low payback figure would result in most students rejecting the idea of state service.

He said the school was working on a system of satelite clinics similar to that being set up now in Uxbridge.

Gubernatorial candidate favors college reorg.

By MICHAEL SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

Gubernatorial candidate and State House minority leader Frank W. Hatch, R-Beverly, in a recent interview said there is "enormous waste and duplication" in the state public higher education system and that he would instigate a reorganization of state colleges if elected.

Hatch also said decriminalization for the possession of marijuana is inevitable but that legislation would not pass in this election year because the issue is still too controversial. Hatch has sponsored legislation to decriminalize the possession of small amounts of marijuana since 1972.

Hatch told the Collegian that public higher education has grown beyond the state's needs.

"Higher education is one area that just has to be reorganized," said Hatch. "The public sector is not only competing with the private sector, but the public sector is competing with itself."

Hatch said that a thorough assessment of the state's higher education must be made before he could decide whether any campuses should be closed down. However, he said his staff has determined that there are "all sorts of campuses in places where perhaps they shouldn't be located in order to serve the greatest number of people."

Hatch said he couldn't predict the end result of the effort to reorganize because the complexity of the public higher education system would make an evaluation a slow, somewhat "torturous" process.

"Higher education... (is) one area where just the sheer magnatude of it — the services that it provides and the personalities involved — make it one of the most difficult areas of government to deal with.

"I'd be kidding if I said it (reorganization) was a very easy thing. But its got to be faced. There is now enormous waste and duplication in higher education, and I think most people would agree," Hatch said.

State colleges were originally built to produce teachers, according to Hatch, but "the birth rate is dropping and they really don't need as many teachers. So (the colleges) are shifting, trying to get the same sort of student community colleges sought."

Hatch said that the committee to evaluate state educational institutions for his reorganization project "cannot be dominated by the present educators themselves" because they would lack objectivity.

Hatch singled out Boston State College as an institution that he said has expanded too much. He said the school's Worcester campus often duplicates opportunities offered by other schools in that area.

"They're doing this (expanding), I'm convinced, because there's a loophole that says any income derived from continuing education programs can be kept in a separate fund and (isn't returned) to the state. So the college presidents crank up all the outside education. Now what happens to the Worcester institutions that offer continuing education programs?"

Hatch also spoke at length about the status of legislation that would decriminalize possession of marijuana in Massachusetts. Hatch co-sponsored the original 1972 bill.

"My hunch is that this being an election year, the bill is going to go nowhere," he said. "It's always been a volatile issue, but I think this year more than most."

Compounding the problem of passing controversial legislation in an election year is the fact that the Massachusetts House of Representatives is undergoing redistricting and will shrink from 240 seats to 160. This is forcing many incumbents to run against each other and few, according to Hatch, are willing to take a stand favoring decriminalization.

"There's going to be some vicious primaries," Hatch said. "Everybody's going to be looking over each other's shoulder."

The major problem, as Hatch sees it, is the constituency's misinterpretation of the proposed decriminalization law.

"The road block that it runs into is a very realistic one. People can't — understandably — understand the difference between decriminalization and legalization," he said.

Hatch said that most constituents don't realize that a $50 or $100 fine — much like a traffic ticket — would be paid by people caught with small amounts of marijuana if his bill were passed. Violators would not carry criminal records for their arrests. Hatch said a means would still exist "to crack down on the pushers."

"The public's lack of knowledge about marijuana and the pending legislation still makes the stand for decriminalization politically hazardous for law makers," Hatch said.

"When you stop and talk to people rationally, what they don't believe is that liquor and cigaretts do more damage than marijuana," he said.

Last year the bill came before the House Judiciary Committee, and, after an initial positive reaction, the committee decided against the bill. The decision was a big set back for marijuana reformers because sizable resources were expended to get witnesses from around the country to testify and to inform legislators about marijuana.

Despite the current impasse, Hatch is "very confident that in the next couple of years it's (decriminalization) going to happen."

Hatch said President Jimmy Carter's endorsement of decriminalization legislation and the eventual acceptance of such legislation by Congress could only help efforts to reform state laws. But, he warned, Carter doesn't vote in Massachusetts.

Student dies in fire

Funeral services are being held today for Robert Benoit, a 29-year-old UMass Stockbridge student who died in an a fire at his home early Sunday morning.

He was pronounced dead of smoke inhalation by Franklin County Medical Examiner Henry Rys.

According to Leverett Fire Chief Gordon King, Benoit re-entered the burning wooden house after helping Brenda Carey escape the blaze.

When firefighters reached the scene the house was fully engulfed and Benoit was not found until the fire was under control, King said. Benoit's body was found near the front door but King said he could have been on the second floor when that floor collapsed.

King said the state fire marshall has determined the fire was started by faulty electrical wiring.

He leaves his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Benoit of Southbridge, and a brother Paul Benoit Jr, also of Southbridge, and a sister, Mrs. Noel Doyle of San Diego, California.

Services are being held at Sansoucy Funeral Home in Southbridge, followed by a mass at Notre Dame Church and burial at St. George Cemetery in Southbridge.

Roaches at Grayson

UMass Physical Plant should be checking into reports of cockroaches in Grayson dormitory on Orchard Hill, according to Grayson Head of Residence Joyce Chestnut.

Chestnut said she contacted Don Pelkey of the Residential Resource Management Office and he assured her the problem would be taken care of today.

Pelkey could not be reached last night.

Tower elevators unsafe

Vice Chancellor James L. McBee, Jr., of Administration and Finance, last week received a 68 signature petition from the Mathematics and Statistics Department "concerning the unsafe and unsatisfactory operation" of the Grad Research Tower elevators

The petition states that during the Department's two year residence in the Tower, "both staff and students have been plagued with elevators that, except for brief periods, have been unreliable and unsafe."

Elevator service, the statement continues, has in recent weeks been unusually unsatisfactory, and while the petition stressed that it did not look for individuals to blame, it did offer possible courses of action to rectify the situation, such as regular inspection and repairs.

"Lift insurance," against loss of life or injury, at the price of 1 cent per one round-trip policy was proposed in order to "relieve the University of any liability for loss caused by its negligence."

Other suggestions included the provision of desks, lamps, cots and blankets to accommodate those faculty and students forced to wait for elevators. A schedule of elevator arrival times was also proposed to cut down on the inconvenience to those effected by the poor quality service.

Rep. wants investigation

Amherst Rep. James G. Collins has again called for an investigation of the UMass Tillson farm's heating plant built by the Bureau of Building Construction.

The oil-fired heating plant, which cost $10 million, worked only eight months before it broke down in 1974.

Collins said any investigation of buildings built by the BBC for this campus should be separate from any investigation of the BBC scandal at UMass-Boston. Two state senators were convinced of extorting money from a New York engineering firm which was contracted to build the Boston campus under the BBC.

Earlier Collins had suggested the Amherst campus be included in a blue ribbon committee established to look into the bureau.

Board OK's check cashing plan; administration approval needed

By JOHN REESE
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center Board of Governors has approved a program to reopen a student check cashing facility in the Campus Center.

In addition, the Board of Governors has designated Campus Center room 155 for use as the check cashing office and agreed to allocate $4,000 for renovation.

The target date for the opening of the proposed check cashing service is September 1978.

A report by the Board of Governors cited the reasons the university closed the previous check cashing office as a result of bad check losses, plus other expenses such as full time non-student cashiers and security guards. The office was then located in the Student Union.

The previous check cashing service was closed last March. Since the closing, the Bursar's Office in the Whitmore Administration Building has handled the majority of check cashing done on campus.

According to Bursar Robert Mishol, check cashing at the Bursar's Office is an "inconvenience".

"We thought it was going to be a temporary situation," said Mishol. "We would handle it for a semester and then it would be reviewed. But we were stuck with it for a second semester and by stuck with it I mean, look at those lines."

A check cashing service on campus would relieve the burden placed on the Bursar's Office and allow them to deal with the processing of fee bills and scholarship awards, according to Mishol.

The Undergraduate Student Senate has passed a motion calling upon the Campus Center and University Administration to extend their fullest cooperation in the implementation of the Campus Center check cashing service.

Due to a lack of funds in this year's fiscal budget, the Undergraduate Student Senate tabled two motions involving loans for the initial implementation of the check cashing program.

Jewish writer talks to 500 on suffering

By DIANE BURAK
Collegian Staff

"As long as our memory is alive, it is a memory of suffering," said Jewish author Elie Wiesel, survivor of the holocaust in the 1940's. Wiesel spoke to a crowd of about 500 last night in the Student Union Ballroom.

Wiesel, currently a Carnegie-Mellon scholar at Boston University, stressed the need for "fire" and "fervor" both in Jewish life and in writing through a series of stories dealing with suffering Jews.

Wiesel was born in 1928 in Sighet, Hungary. He was 15 when he was shipped to Nazi concentration camps with half the population of his town during World War II. His autobiography Night describes his year as a prisoner, including such atrocities as seeing his father die before his eyes.

Wiesel's subsequent works reflect the setting of the war, and include The Accident, The Gates of the Forest, and Legends of Our Time. His most recent works include interpretations of Jewish religious history. Messengers of God: Biblical Portraits and Legends is a collection of Wiesel's impressions of some of the chief characters in the Bible.

Wiesel stressed the importance of identity as a Jew, saying, "To be Jewish is to give suffering a meaning...to take words and give them destiny."

Wiesel expressed concern that a Jewish man has, in the last few days, been officially charged with treason by the Russians. If convicted, he may face capital punishment, making the Jews living in Russia fearful of expressing their religion.

Wiesel spoke of his fear that the holocaust will become cheap, or that people will forget it. He says the more he studies about this period, the more secrets come up.

Wiesel cited the unusual silence of the Jews who were going to their mass graves during that time. He said they went with their rabbis, and "if they said anything, it was a prayer."

He said he has never understood the silence of the world and God during this time. He said the holocaust was a Christian responsibility in a Christian world.

Wiesel said he believes the world in in danger of a nuclear holocaust and urged his audience to learn from the 1940's holocaust what man is capable of, and what indifference can do.

In his remarks, Wiesel equated writing with having obsessions. He said, "Whatever happens to my people is of burning concern to me."

"If you deal with Jewish history, you cannot write fiction," "the purpose of literature is to correct injustices," he said.

Another obsession is madmen. Wiesel says he loves madmen, and has put one in every book he has written. He says he often gets letters from insane people, who ask for his advice. He quickly added that he loves "mystical madmen."

During the lecture, Wiesel read from Zalmen, a play describing the madness of a rabbi, adding that it will be performed in the Five College area soon. Speaking humorously about the characterizations in the play, Wiesel said, "Shakespeare had no problems. He killed everybody." "But," he added quickly, "he wasn't Jewish."

The lecture was co-sponsored by Resources Judaica and the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Selectmen hear reactions to bike paths

By DAVE GRAM
Collegian Staff

As a sure sign of approaching Springtime, Amherst selectmen had cyclists and bicycle safety on their minds last night.

The selectmen held a public hearing at their meeting to determine residents' reactions to proposed construction of bicycle paths along North Pleasant Street from the northern edge of the UMass campus to Pine Street in North Amherst Center.

The board also conducted what Town Manager A. Louis Hayward called "a preliminary hearing" on a proposed emergency water supply contract with the town of Hadley.

Two alternatives are being offered in a bikeway proposal submitted to the board by Hayward. According to Hayward's report, one alternative "would involve the widening of North Pleasant Street to provide for bike lanes on both sides of the street. These lanes would resemble paved shoulders three feet in width." The report calls for signs to be posted, and graphic symbols to be painted on the pavement to indicate the bikeways.

The second alternative in Hayward's report consists of "a bike path, with a minimum width of six feet, separated from the roadway by a grass strip."

Town public works department officials said the cost of the first alternative — widening the street to provide bike lanes — is estimated to be about $60,000. The construction cost of the second alternative — the bike path — is expected to run about $25,000.

The meeting was attended by about 20 local residents, several of whom expressed to the board the need for traffic regulations concerning right of way for cyclists and motorists.

Lynn Leab and Sam Butterfield represented the UMass Physical Plant's Office of Landscape Architecture at the meeting. Butterfield noted there are no bicycle paths serving the University and saying, "I think it would be really good if we could get something like this off the ground." He said the landscape architecture office wants to participate in the planning of the project.

Frederick Cook, President of the University Bicycle Club, last night said he favors the proposal calling for widening the road and constructing bike lanes on either side.

"The Bicycle Club has been trying to get something like this passed for a long time. I think it's a good idea," he said.

Cook said he supports bike lanes in the roadway, rather than a separate bike path because it would "be more convenient for people using it." He said lanes in the street would be easier to clear in the winter, "so you could use them nearly year-round."

Hayward said the proposed projects wouldn't be funded during the next fiscal year unless this May's Town Meeting approves them. He did say future capital outlay proposals for the town include $25,000 a year for bicycle safety projects beginning in fiscal year 1980.

Among other areas mentioned as possible sites for future bike-ways are East Pleasant Street, Belchertown Road, and Pine Street. A bicycle path already exists along South Pleasant Street from Snell Street to East Hadley Road.

Grads favor bus fee split; administration pays 30%

By ROB STEIN
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate last night supported the motion proposed by its Finance Committee that 70 per cent of the Student Senate Transit System budget be paid by the students and 30 per cent be paid by the administration.

These figures would replace the existing breakdown of 85 per cent student, 15 per cent administration, taking into consideration that the administration is paying its share with funds comprised primarily from student parking stickers and tickets.

Officials from the transit system were questioned by the Senate to aid their decision.

A similar proposal had been submitted earlier in the semester by the Undergraduate Student Senate but was rejected. There was disagreement on the "double assessment" claim. Student leaders claim that since students contribute largely to the parking budget by buying parking stickers and that the administration would be using these funds to pay for their share of the transit budget, the students are being "double assessed".

There was further discussion of the motion passed at the last Senate meeting which supported the proposal that the Senate fund the UMass bus system form its own budget rather than have a separate fee on student fee bills. This position is supported in the belief that keeping the funding in the Senate's budget would give the students more control over the system.

"Giving that (the funding) over to the university would be particularly silly," said Senate president Bob Phillips.

The Senate also heard a proposal for a resolution citing a source of potential funds which the administration could use to pay its share of the Transit budget. Currently the administration is using funds from the budget of the parking office to pay off interest on bonds sold to build the Campus Center Garage. These funds are comprised mostly of money paid by the students.

Senate Vice-president Monte Pearson referred to the garage as a "giant white elephant that we have to pay for" which was "something that was crammed down the students throats." The proposal would recommend that State funding take the place of the current parking budget funds.

A motion was passed by the Senate urging that the University expedite plans to improve pedestrian safety along the section of North Pleasant Street between the Newman Center and the Graduate Research Center.

The stretch has been the scene of two separate accidents earlier this month, one of which resulted in the death of a student and the other in an injury in a hit and run accident. According to the Senate the plans soon to be put into effect do not include North Pleasant Street.

Central OK's coordinator

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian STaff

Central Area Council last night unanimously appointed Van Meter North resident Paul Lesser as activities coordinator.

Lesser, the only applicant for the job, will aid in the planning of the area spring concert. His responsibilities involve trying to plan an activity once every two weeks for Central and Orchard Hill residential areas.

Lesser said, "I was interested because I have just planned a ski trip for my dormitory and was satisfied at how well it turned out." Lesser said he would like to continue planning various activities and felt central area could give him that challenge.

A movie guarantee of $350 was allotted for Wheeler dormitory to show "Inserts", an "X"-rated movie starring Richard Dreyfuss. A movie guarantee is a back-up of funds in case the dormitory loses money on the project.

The funds were allocated with a note saying the council does not support sexism, racism, or violence. The note was included because the film has sexual overtones, according to council President Mark Zinan.

In other business, the council announced that all dormitory constitutions are now considered invalid, and new constitutions must be submitted by the end of the semester or that dormitory's funds will be frozen. An amendment to some constitutions saying a resident who does not pay dues will not be allowed to use the dorm facilities has been called unconstitutional by the student Attorney General, Jeffrey Lutsky.

Elections for council president, vice-president and treasurer are scheduled for Franklin Dining Commons March 15 and 16, according to Zinan.

Budgeting of Central Area funds also takes place March 16 in the Duke's Room of the Student Union.

International Women's week was allocated $300 to help finance publicity and work shops.

The Committee for the Liberation of Southern Africa asked for $100 to defray costs of a regional conference which will take place at Yale University. The council referred the committee to the New World Center, which is part of Central Area.

Wheeler Representative Sarah Hamman asked for $179 for an Art Gallery scheduled for April 6-13 in the dormitory.

NEAG favors lease plan

By CAROL MORRIER
Collegian Staff

Northeast Area Government voted unanimously Sunday night in favor of the proposed Lease Policy, a plan endorsed by all university area governments.

"The policy is a legal contract which will establish the student as the tenant and the University as the landlord," says David Barenberg, speaker for the policy.

According to Barenberg, without a lease policy "We, as dorm residents, have no legal way to require the University to make needed repairs. The policy will protect residents' rights for their rooms, and will make it legal to take action if needed repairs aren't made."

"Good news for the area," said NEAG Treasurer Jeff Schapiro, "is that the Student Senate gave the area governments $5,700 of the $7,000 owed to them.

There are several vacancies in the area for senators. Anyone interested in running should contact area officers Diane Lauricella or Jeff Schapiro.

Andrea Polito, NEAG's new vice president, said there will be a Social Committee Meeting, Tuesday night at 7 in Knowlton's basement. The meeting is for anyone interested in making plans for the upcoming Quad day, a proposed Spring Festival, Semi-Formal, and any other ideas brought up. "We've got the money," says Schapiro, "but now we need people to make the plans."

Diplomacy expert teaches at UMass

By LEO PELOQUIN
Collegian Staff

William Dodd Brewer has been "on assignment" at the University of Massachusetts since Sept. 1, 1977.

There is no cause for alarm, however. He is not a foreign agent or a member of the C.I.A.

Brewer, 56, has been assigned by the United Stated Foreign Service to be a "diplomat in residence" at UMass for the 1977-78 academic year. Brewer, one of eleven officers assigned to academic institutions across the United States this year, is part of a program sponsored by the State Dept. that has placed over 100 diplomats in residence during the past twelve years.

Brewer, the second professional diplomat ever assigned to a Massachusetts institution of higher learning, has been acting as a "resource person" for students, faculty, and townspeople in the five college area interested in foreign policy issues.

Brewer says he is in the process of becoming re-Americanized (learning about the changes in the American culture and society that have taken place since he has been out of the country), while he teaches a UMass political science course called "The United States in World Affairs" and assists young people interested in international relations careers.

Brewer said the course, with an enrollment of 17, allows him to develop a closer contact with those students really interested in foreign affairs.

His office at UMass is located in Thompson 226 in the Political Science Dept. and he said he is eager to talk with anybody interested in the field of foreign diplomacy. He holds office hours at UMass on Tuesday and Thursday at 11 a.m., in addition to maintaining an office at Smith College.

"I'm anxious to do as much as I can," he said, as we talked in the living room of his temporary home, located about four blocks from Smith, on Friday afternoon. The house belongs to a Smith College faculty member who is on sabbatical.

Brewer said he is available for class discussions on foreign policy and diplomacy and is more than willing to address any group in the area on the subject.

Brewer, who has been in the foreign service since 1947, said that it had been a childhood goal.

"I just always wanted to be a foreign service officer," he said.

He has served in Saudia Arabia, Syria, Kuwait, Sudan, Afghanistan, Lebanon, and Mauritius. In his last assignment, he served as ambassador to the Sudan and Khartoum, where he lived during an unsuccessful coup d'etat. At one point during the uprising, bullets came through the windows of his office.

Many of his assignments have been "hardship posts." Such posts are characterized by harsh climates, high altitudes, isolation, and primitive living conditions.

He recalled that Jidda, Saudia Arabia had no municipal power when he was stationed there in 1949-51.

He considers his field of expertise to be the Middle East, where he served for 20 years, including a stay in parts of Africa. He has served in both the smallest (Mauritius) and largest (Sudan) countries in Africa.

Brewer said no course of study guarantees admission to the Foreign Service. Entrants must pass a rigorous series of exams in broad areas. There is a written exam, an oral exam, and a final screening. He said that of the 11,000 applicants that took the original exam last year, only about 100-to 150 were accepted into the agency.

Although anyone that passes the examination process can work for the Foreign Service, Brewer said those people with a liberal arts educational background are probably better suited to the work than those with a background in the sciences.

He said the Foreign Service does have people with degrees in Chemistry working overseas but that they are the exception, not the rule.

Brewer, who speaks Arabic, French, and Persian, and "traces" of Italian and Spanish said that an individual does have to be bilingual to be accepted into the Foreign Service.

"Basically, the Foreign Service is looking for a certain type of person who has high intelligence and an ability to learn," said Brewer.

The only permanent residence that he has in the United States is where he was born in Middletown, Connecticut, said Brewer. He went to Taft School, received a B.A. in Political Science from Williams College in 1944, and received an M.A. in Political Science from the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy in 1947.

Brewer said Fletcher, a school of 200 students located in Boston, is considered among the top two or three schools in international relations in the United States.

Brewer taught political science at Williams College in 1946 and at Bowdoin College in 1947, before his first assignment with the Foreign Service (Beirut, Lebanon) in 1947. He has found his years with the service, while not very financially rewarding, have given him great satisfaction.

"It is an opportunity to be of service to others in an area that is intellectually stimulating. You like to think you've made some positive contribution to improve relations with those countries where you've worked," said Brewer.

He said he was as proud of some of the situations that he prevented from happening as he was of those he caused to happen.

"Some of the things that could have occurred would have had very unfortunate effects," said Brewer.

He said he like the constant variety in the job although, as he got older, the moving got harder.

Brewer said he has met most of the U.S. Presidents and Secretary of States that have served in the past 25 years. He described Henry Kissinger as "an imaginative, energetic person very creative in the area of foreign affairs."

He has met Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev, Egypt's President Sadat, and a number of other prominent world figures. He said he has not met President Carter yet because he came straight to UMass from his overseas post.

He and his wife Alice have three children from their 29 years of marriage. John works for the U.S. Chamber of Commerce in the field of Middle East Affairs in Washington. Daniel is a third year law school student in Boston and Priscilla is a senior at Williams College.

Brewer enjoys swimming, photography, and stamp collecting but his main hobby is reading.

To keep up with world affairs, he reads The New York Times "very thoroughly", the Washington Post, and the London Economist, occasionally glancing at Time and Newsweek magazines.

He said he considers television to be "a wasteland" and only watches sports occasionally. He enjoys reading, especially biographies, much more.

"With t.v., you are always seeing what someone else wants you to see. With books, you are reading someone else's work but there is a much greater role of selection. There are hundreds of books to choose from," he said.

Pro-treaty forces defeat amendments

WAS INGTON (UPI) — Senate supporters of the Panama Canal treaties defeated the first in a series of "killer" amendments Monday with a show of force that would indicate they have the votes to turn back any proposed changes in the pacts.

In an acid test, the Senate killed an amendment which could have kept U.S. troops guarding the waterway a generation after the canal is turned over to Panama with a vote of 55-34.

The amendment, as well as all proposed changes to the twin treaties, requires a majority for approval. The treaties themselves, however, need a two-thirds vote for approval — 67 if all senators are voting.

Although 34 votes would be enough to kill the treaties in final balloting, the vote Monday on the amendment was not considered an accurate barometer of the ratification balloting. Some treaty backers were absent and some others sided with the opposition on the amendment, feeling that additional guarantees would be beneficial.

Sen. Aames Allen, D-Ala., a leading treaties' opponent and sponsor of the amendment, called the result "favorable" and showed senators were becoming more "independent" and concerned about strengthening the accords.

But Sen. Alan Cranston, DCalif., the No. 2 Democrat and a leading backer of the treaties, said, "We did better than expected and our confidence is shown by the fact we proceeded with the vote although several of our votes were absent."

Earlier, Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd said he didn't know if he had the votes to beat the amendment on an up-or-down vote because of normal Monday absenteeism.

"The amendment goes to the very heart of the treaties," Senate Democratic Leader Robert Byrd said before moving to table it. "There is no question it would require renegotiation of the treaties because it extends the date under which U.S. forces would be withdrawn."

Tabling a motion effectively kills it by putting it aside and requiring a two-thirds vote to reconsider it.

Under terms of the treaties as now before the Senate, the United States would turn over control of the canal to Panama in the year 2000.

Bottle bill discussion focuses on economy

BOSTON [UPI] — The question of whether throwaway beer and soft drink bottles and cans improve or hurt the state's economy was the main focus of a legislative hearing at the Statehouse yesterday.

At issue was a series of bills to ban disposable beverage containers by requiring nickle and dime deposits on bottles and cans.

Supporters told the Joint Energy Committee the legislation would reduce litter, save energy and even create new jobs. Opponents, however, said the legislation would result in job losses in the bottling industry.

Opponents favored proposed legislation to place a litter tax on several industries instead of banning throwaway bottles and cans. That legislation is slated for a Joint Taxation Committee hearing Wednesday.

The focal point of yesterday's day-long hearing was a bill co-sponsored by more than 100 legislators and several environmental groups. It is designed to replace a referendum, which was narrowly defeated in the 1976 Massachusetts election.

Proponents of a bottle bill, however, told the Joint Energy Committee the time is now ripe for banning throwaway bottles and cans.

Among the supporters of bottle legislation were several representatives of the administration of Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, including Economic Affairs Secretary Howard N. Smith.

Smith had opposed bottle legislation in 1975 on the grounds it might adversely affect the economy. Since then, however, Smith has said studies by the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston, the U.S. Department of Commerce, the federal Environmental Protection Agency and the Federal Energy Administration have changed his mind.

Opponents, including spokesmen for labor and industry, remained unconvinced. They said the legislation could result in the loss of hundreds of bottling industry jobs in Massachusetts.

Sen. John F. Parker, R-Taunton, said the displacement of bottling industry workers would be "one of the cruelest gimmicks I know."

He accused supporters of the legislation of being "elitists" who are driven by "egoism".

In a dramatic gesture, he flung out for display a roll of computer printouts of payrolls he said would be destroyed if the bottle bill is enacted. Passage of the measure, he said, would be a "major mistake."

The potential loss of jobs was disputed by testimony from a representative of the U.S. General Accounting Office, an investigative arm of Congress.

Dennis Dugan, associate GAO director, said a study by that federal agency had shown that under national bottle legislation there would be a net increase in jobs.

But despite the additional jobs that might be created by a bottle law, Dugan said the "net cost to industry would probably go down."

Supporters also contended a national disposable beverage container law would also mean savings of between 71,000 to 80,000 gallons of oil each year.

Industry, firms sought by Amherst task force

By PETER COX
Collegian Staff

The Town of Amherst must locate new potential areas of development rather than relying on University expansion, which in recent years has been halted, according to James Cope, director of the town Industrial Development Task Force.

The task force, appointed by town selectmen last fall, is looking into possible firms and industries to be attracted to the town. Three other task forces (Cost-Benefit, University Liaison and Commercial Development) also are focusing on the questions and problems of their specific areas.

"We do not have the facilities or adequate transportation, such as main highways and railroads, to create the type of development characteristic of Rte. 128," Cope said. Rte. 128 is a highway belt which passes through the suburban communities of Boston.

"Nor can we expect industry such as steel plants and nuclear power plants to be politically acceptable, even if such industries could settle here," said Cope. He said he felt the best idea was to "find out what we have here."

Donald Jacobs, director of the University Liaison Force, agreed with Cope. He pointed out there are two firms in town that utilize the University areas' vast academic resources: Amherst Associates, a computer firm, and a test evaluation firm that works in the production of test forms. Jacobs said other business projects are in the making.

One is an advanced computer that analyzes athletic film and focuses on the various stress areas of the body. This system, though in the embryonic stage, has been used increasingly by college coaches around the country. With the large UMass athletic program such a business could find the Amherst area an attractive site, Jacobs said.

The other project, Jacob continued, is an idea of Professor Norman C. Ford, Jr. member of the UMass Physics Department. Ford has developed a light ray measuring the composition of materials, and has set up the firm of Langley Ford Instruments. Jacobs said "the towns' experience in dealing businesses, layout, and other procedures could be of some assistance to Professor Ford."

He added, "this is just the kind of development Amherst needs."

He concluded that if the town's endeavors are to be successful the University and colleges in the area must be responsive to the towns' drive.

Tongsun Park pleads innocent to charges

WASHINGTON (UPI) — South Korean rice merchant Tongsun Park pleaded innocent to bribery and all related charges of influence-buying Monday in a tightly guarded federal courtroom on the eve of his first testimony to congressional investigators.

In an earlier interview, Park also defended his many campaign contributions to congressmen, suggesting that those who got donations were "friends" who asked him for money. "I didn't care what they did with it," he said.

The 42-year-old businessman huddled with his lawyer, William Hundley, to prepare for the start of secret testimony Tuesday to the House ethics committee and questioning by a special staff of investigators led by Leon Jaworski.

The investigators said their interrogation probably would run at least 10 days and that they were counting on Park to tell them the full truth — including the names of all congressmen who accepted payoffs from him or others in an alleged Korean plot to win U.S. military and economic aid over the last decade.

Park, who came back to Washington Sunday for the first time in about 18 months, was indicted last August on 36 counts of bribery, mail fraud, racketeering and conspiracy. He will be testifying under immunity from prosecution.

Staying at an undisclosed location and kept under heavy security by U.S. marshals, Park went into federal court in the early morning to be formally arraigned on the charges and enter his "not guilty" plea.

The session before U.S. District Judge June Green — considered a formality — took about five minutes and Park was released without bond.

"It was arranged quickly for security reasons," a Justice Department spokesman said, explaining why Park was brought into and out of the court building through an underground garage and kept away from the press.

Despite his innocent plea, Park told Justice Department investigators recently in Seoul that he gave out about $750,000 in payments and favors to congressmen while he was operating as the Korean government's exclusive rice agent and a prominent social figure in Washington.

In Hartford, Conn., Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., said Monday Senate investigators have learned that U.S. intelligence agencies and some White House staff members knew as long ago as 1970 that Park was trying to buy favors for Korea from Congress.

"Agencies of our government had this knowledge and didn't reveal it," Weicker said.

But in a video-taped interview aired Monday on ABCTV's "Good Morning America" program, Park insisted anew that he was never a Korean intelligence agent and had not asked for anything in return from those who got money.

"In fact, I never solicited anyone to receive my contributions," he said. "It was always at the request of friends and I did it merely as an expression of friendship. I didn't care what they did with it."

Asked if all the recipients sought money, he said, "that's correct."

The indictment of Park listed about two dozen congressmen whom he gave campaign contributions. All those lawmakers have denied any wrongdoing.

Governors demand more energy production

WASHINGTON — Gov. Michael Dukakis chats with Gov. Milton Shapp of Pennsylvania at the opening session of the winter meeting of the National Governors' Association yesterday (UPI)

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's governors met with President Carter Monday to press their demands for federal action to step-up energy production and for less Washington interference with state energy development plans.

The White House meeting, second in a two-day conference on energy production, followed a speech by Secretary of State Cyrus Vance which called for promotion of domestic energy to relieve the dependence on Arab oil.

The governors expressed the same concern to Carter, saying "It is essential that we develop all possible sources of domestic oil and gas consistent with our environmental goals, to protect ourselves against future embargoes and allow us to meet our fuel needs."

The governors, attending the winter meeting of the National Governors Association, also demanded more aggressive pursuit of alternative energy forms such as solar and nuclear power.

The White House sessions had been demanded by the governors for the past year in an effort to focus attention on energy production needs. The legislative energy package Carter submitted last year leans heavily toward conservation.

The preliminary reports issued by the governors questioned whether the administration's oil and gas production goals can actually be achieved under the Carter plan.

"The governors expressed concern that the finding rate for oil and gas, used in making the plan's supply forecasts, was overly optimistic," they said.

The demand for a more reliable future supply of fuel has been a sensitive issue among the governors, especially those in states that had to close schools and curtail industry because of the current coal strike.

The White House discussions have drawn demands for a bigger state role in the leasing of coal and oil reserves as well as for fewer federal regulations on energy concerns.

"States should be the focal point and final decision-maker on their energy development needs," the governors' papers contended.

Vance told the governors that all the initiatives being taken toward international trade improvements cannot solve this country's economic problems unless they are matched by an effective national energy policy — i,cluding the increased domestic production the governors are demanding.

"And we must have it soon," Vance said. "Unless we curb our unchecked appetite for foreign oil ... we will not begin to reverse the $30 billion U.S. trade deficit.

"We must take the difficult steps that are required to reduce our requirements for imported oil and to promote the development of other energy sources," Vance said.

Vance alsosaid the administration will not yield to protectionist demands from some elements of labor and industry being hurt by foreign competition.

Less Mideast involvement wanted

WASHINGTON (AP) — The American people say they want less U.S. involvment in the Middle East, whetfer in selling warplanes or in pressuring Isael or Egypt to make concessions, an Assocated PressNBC News poll shows.

And the survey found indications that the public is growing disenchanted with the Israeli negotiating stance in the current series of peace moves.

About 57 percent of those questioned opposed the proposed U.S. sale of warplanes to all three countries — Isrel, Egypt and Saudi Arabia.

Only one part of a $4.8 billion package proposed by President Carter earer this month — planes for Israel — is supported by as many as 24 percent of the 1,60 adults questioned by telephone last week.

Opinions about the sales to each country were asked as separate questions.

On the sale of 90 highly sophsticated F-15 and F-16 fighters to Israel, 63 percent of the American people were oppoed. Only 24 percent said they favored the eal. Thirteen percent were undecided.

Selling 50 less advanced F-E fighters to Israel's neighbor and sometine opponent, Egypt, drew support from 3 percent of those questioned. Sixty-six pecent opposed the sale, with 13 percent agairundecided.

And 17 percent were in favo of the sale of 60 F-15 fighters to Saudi Araba with 69 percent opposed. Fourteen perent were not sure.

Those who oppposed sales to one nation were likely to oppose sales toall of the countries. Those who answered no to each of the three questions on plane sales totaled 57 percent of those interviewed.

Only 14 percent were in favor of all the sales.

The desire for less involvment in the Middle East was also shown by the answers to a question on whether the United States should pressure Israel o Egypt into concessions in the current round of peace talks.

Only 6 percent said the United States should pressure Israel and only 2 percent agreed with pressure on Egypt.

Twenty-one percent said both countries should feel the weight of U.S. influence, while 62 percent thought the United States should avoid leaning on either side.

Disenchantment with the Israelis was found in three questions.

First, 55 percent said President Anwar Sadat of Egypt had made more concessions than Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin. Only 15 percent felt Begin had made more concessions. Eight percent thought both sides had yielded, while 22 percent were not sure.

This percepton of Begin's lack of concessions has hada negative effect on his standing with the American people. Only 29 percent now give him "excellent" or "good" ratings for his role as a Mideast peace negotiator, dovn 20 points from the 49 percent found in a January AP-NBC News poll.

U.S.—British breeder reactor developed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — American and British scientists said Monday they have developed a new nuclear breeder reactor and fuel processing system that can virtually eliminate the threat of atomic weapons proliferation.

Dr. Walter Marshall of the British Atomic Energy Authority and Dr. Chauncey Starr of the U.S. Electric Power Research Institute said their proposal would eliminate the production of plutonium pure enough to be used in bombs.

At the same time, they said, it would permit the reprocessing of spent fuel from conventional reactors and the use of breeder reactors to make the world's supply of uranium last almost indefinitely.

Starr said the new proposal will be presented to President Carter, who banned the use of existing fuel reprocessing plants and halted the U.S. breeder reactor program because of weapon proliferation dangers.

Two environmental groups, New Directions and the Natural Resources Defense Council, issued a statement criticizing the new proposal for failure to set high enough standards and saying the new technique could be used as a cover for bomb production.

The heart of the proposal announced by Marshall and Starr at the Fifth Energy Technology Conference is a reprocessing method they called "CIVEX" to stress its purely civilian nature. Starr said it is an improved form of a system used and discarded in the 1950s.

Unlike conventional reprocessing methods which divide spent reactor fuel into three types of products — uranium, plutonium and radioactive waste — the CIVEX process would keep uranium, plutonium and some wastes mixed together in a substance so radioactive that it would kill anyone trying to steal it.

Spent reactor fuel elements would be reprocessed entirely by remote control, emerging from the concrete-enclosed chemical processing line as new fuel elements suitable for use in the breeder reactor.

"We believe that once you have established a fast reactor cycle then indeed you can make it proliferation-proof, you can make it so difficult to steal the plutonium from the cycle that you can virtually forget about it," Marshall told a news conference.

He and Starr said nothing can keep a nation from embarking on a slow, deliberate atomic bomb program.

Buying power shows large decline; January consumer prices up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer prices rose sharply in January and the average worker's buying power declined by the largest amount on record, the Labor Department said Monday.

The price index for all urban consumers climbed 0.8 percent in January after rising 0.4 percent in each of the past three months. If averaged out over the entire year, the January increase would lead to an inflation rate of nearly 10 percent.

The purchasing power of the average worker declined 3 percent in January, the biggest drop since the department began keeping records in 1964.

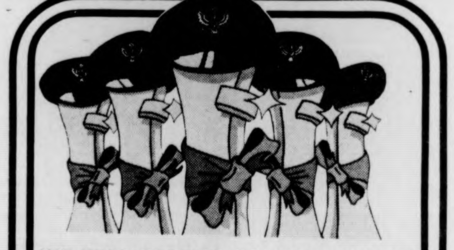
The decline in real spendable earnings was attributed to higher Social Security taxes, fewer hours worked, changes in the tax laws and rising consumer prices.

Two thirds of the higher prices were caused by increases of 1.2 percent for food and beverages and 0.8 percent for housing, the department said. Transportation was up 0.6 percent, medical care 0.8 percent and clothing 0.3 percent.

The reports were called "cause for concern" by Julius Shiskin, commissioner of labor statistics.

White House officials said, however, two of the increases were only one-time contributors to inflation. They were rises in the minimum wage, which drove up some prices for services and Social Security taxes.

"It is not seen as a basic change in the underlying 6 to 6.5 percent inflation rate that we felt was accurate even when the monthly incrases were lower," said White House Press Secretary Jody Powell.



WE NEED CERTAIN COLLEGE MAJORS TO BECOME AIR FORCE LIEUTENANTS

Mechanical and civil engineering majors aerospace and aeronautical engineering majors chemistry computer science mathematics majors

The Air Force is looking for young men and women preparing themselves in academic areas like these. If you're one of these people, you may be eligible for the two or four-year AFROTC program. And to help you with the college bills, a two, three or four-year scholarship could be available to you.

The AFROTC program leads to an Air Force commission. That means excellent starting salary, promotions, medical and dental care, 30 days of paid vacation each year. But more than all that, it means responsibility for people and high-value equipment, it means challenging work, and a chance to serve your country with pride.

Find out today about an Air Force ROTC scholarship. It's a great way to help pay for your college, and it could be that your present major will help you become an Air Force Major someday.

Uxbridge boy found frozen under snow

UXBRIDGE, Mass. [AP] — After a 20-day search ranging for miles around this central Massachusetts town, a mail carrier found the frozen body of a missing 10-year-old boy Monday under a snow bank five feet from his front door, Police Chief John Emerick said.

The body of Peter Gosselin rested under the snow near the garage of his home for almost three weeks while hundreds of police, firemen and volunteers hunted frantically elsewhere for him, the police chief said.

Emerick theorized the boy had fallen unconscious to the bottom of a 10-foot drift while playing, The precise cause and time of death was not known, pending medical examination.

The search had gripped the emotions of this town of 8,500 persons.

Mail carrier Leo J. Lussier spotted the tip of a mitten under the melting snow while making his morning delivery to the Gosselin house and immediately called the police, said Emerick.

The police chief said searchers had used a metal detector at the Gosselin home 4:30 p.m. Sunday without finding a trace of the boy who last was seen Feb. 7 frolicking in the midst of the heaviest snow fall of the century in this area.

Emerick said searchers never lost hope they might find the boy alive. However, the boy's father, Paul Gosselin said, "We kept expecting the worst all along. What can I say? This is the way it turned out."

Emerick said the family was "greatly relieved the body has been found. They have been through a long period of anguish and anxiety."

Nuke director says testimony incomplete

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Lee Gossick, executive director of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, said yesterday he gave Congress incomplete testimony in saying there was no evidence bomb-grade uranium had been stolen from a nuclear plant.

Rep. Morris Udall, D-Ariz., chairman of the House Interior Committee, accused Gossick of misleading Congress "to protect nuclear power from its critics."

Last July, Gossick was called to testify before Udall's committee to discuss news reports that more than 200 pounds of weapons-grade uranium had been taken from the Nuclear Materials and Equipment Corp. of Apollo, Pa., since 1964.

On July 29, 1977, Gossick said: "We have investigated every incident that has come ... to us with regard to the theft or diversion of material. I can say that we have no evidence that significant ... amounts of special nuclear material has been stolen."

He said yesterday he was referring to a period since 1968 — after the uranium was missing.

"I should have been more expansive in my response," Gossick said Monday, "either by detailing so much of the matter as I then knew, or by clearly defining my terms. With the benefit of hindsight I have no hesitation in saying I should have done so.

"I sincerely regret the misunderstanding that has resulted but I want to again reaffirm that I had no intent whatever to misrepresent the facts as I understood them or to mislead the subcommittee."

Gossick said he should have been more aggressive in finding out about the Apollo plant.

Since last summer, a newsletter got documents under the Freedom of Information Act that found several security lapses at the plant, but said officials didn't find enough evidence for a court case.

"The Ford White House called upon intelligence agencies last year to determine how many bombs could have been made from weapons-grade uranium missing from a Pennsylvania nuclear plant and reportedly smuggled to Israel," said Science Trends.

Udall said: "We now know that high level government officials have believed for years that there was a significant likelihood that high enriched uranium had been diverted from Apollo."

Towns reimbursed for snow removal

BOSTON [UPI] — Massachusetts communities may receive up to 75 per cent federal reimbursement for privately contracted snow removal after the February blizzard.

Any of the state's 351 cities and towns that hired outside help through Feb. 12 to clean up after the Feb. 6-7 storm may apply to 11 regional centers opening Thursday.

The centers will operate on a rotating schedule in Boston, Concord, Taunton, Middleboro, Barnstable, Worcester, Canton, Danvers, Springfield, Pittsfield and Greenfield.

The filing deadline for reimbursements is March 9. The state Department of Community Affairs has mailed detailed information on how to file to all Massachusetts communities.

Weiker says foreign birth no obstacle

HARTFORD (AP) — U.S. Sen. Lowell Weicker says he's going to ignore a possible constitutional stumbling block to his potential bid for the presidency.

The Connecticut Republican told reporters yesterday that he isn't investigating whether his Paris birth would prevent him from holding the nation's highest office. It would be up to a challenger to try to invoke the constitutional requirement that the president be born in the United States, he said.

Weicker's American family was living in Paris when he was born as an American citizen on May 16, 1931.

He said he would decide by the end of this year or early next year whether to seek the nomination. He said a "Weicker 80" committee this month was established merely to clear the way to accept contributions and doesn't imply a decision to make the run.

Weicker also said the decision won't hinge on who the potential opponents are. Asked about President Carter's chances for re-election, Weicker said: "I evaluate him as a one-term President."

Gas leakage delays putting train on tracks

CADES, Tenn. (UPI) — The discovery of a gas main delayed efforts yesterday to put a derailed tanker containing potentially dangerous caustic soda back on the tracks in this rural West Tennessee town.

The tanker was one of 25 cars of a 101-car Illinois Central-Gulf train that derailed Sunday afternoon, forcing the evacuation of 150 people within a onemile radius because of the noxious fumes.

The accident happened 80 miles west of Waverly, Tenn., where a derailed propane tanker exploded Friday killing 12 people and injuring more than 50 others.

There were no injuries or fires in the Cades incident. The evacuees were allowed to return five hours later after the leak was sealed but were told to be ready for a second evacuation when efforts were made to move the tanker.

Heavy equipment was brought to the scene Monday to move the tanker containing the sodium hydroxide, also known as lye or caustic soda. But then the gas main was discovered near the tanker.

"They don't want to rupture this gas main," said Civil Defense spokesman Dee Barker. "It's dangerous enough that they've held up the operation until they can do something about it."

Gas company officials were called in to plot the location of the gas main so workers could avoid it.

Among the derailed cars were two empty tankers which had carried liquid propane. They were considered "dangerous" because any vapors still inside them could expand and cause an explosion if fire were to break out.

However, ICG official Robert O'Brien said in Chicago that the evacuation was a reaction to what happened in Waverly and there was "no danger."

"There was no need to evacuate one single soul," he said.

Authorities first said the leaking chemical was producing fumes dangerous to breathe or touch, but the fumes dissipated Sunday night and the evacuees returned home.

Hite's audacity challenged again

To the Editor:

I tried to let Jon Hite's comments in the Tuesday Collegian concerning Heads of Residence [H.R.'s] pass without rebuttal. I find myself unwilling to do so, hence this letter.

First, while not an H.R., I have direct experience with the nature of the job, being a Head of Residence "widower". It is aggravating in the extreme to read Hite's remarks denigrating the work done by H.R.'s while knowing that neither he nor anyone else who has neither held the job nor lived with someone who has, can have any idea of the complex, long-houred, and ill-paid nature of the position. Repeat, NO ONE.

For the information of the unenlightened, H.R.'s are responsible for the well-being of the students and physical plant of their dormitories 24-hours per day, six days per week [with one weekend off per month]. In practical terms, this means that when in the building, they are at work. Even while asleep, H.R.'s are responsible. They do all of the following and many other things as well. Housing lists, keys, inventories, transportation of ill students, resolution of roommate hassles, academic, career and personal counseling; referals, fire prevention, vending machine money losses, R.A. selection, repair orders; all are attended to by H.R.'s [with much valued assistance by R.A. staff]. In addition, they are required to attend area staff meetings and committees as assigned by CDC. Also, many H.R.'s have direct involvement with student centers like the Northeast Women's and Southwest Men's centers, to name but two. The list of H.R. responsibilities, both required and voluntary, goes on and on.

In addition to the above, many H.R.'s contribute to students in the form of colloquia both in and out of the dormitories. I know of many H.R.'s across campus who offer such services.... and that's without looking it up.

Another part of the job not in the University description is the role of scapegoat. Being the most visible members of the administration, H.R.'s catch a lot of flack that should go in other directions. Hite's comments regarding the housing crunch in the fall provide a useful example. He makes no statement about the system-wide nature of the factors contributing to the crunch. He makes no mention of the unpredicted and perhaps unpredictable over-acceptance of students; none, of the students granted off-campus housing exemptions who decided to return to dorms; nothing about the difficulty of determining the actual number of bed spaces available when a pre-Labor day opening extends "opening day" into "opening week"; because students must work summer jobs through the holiday or be docked pay; nor does Hite comment on the number of students who pay their bills late thus muddying the situation incredibly for others who do everything right. The preceding should not be read as an indictment of any person or group, but rather as an indication of the complex nature of that problem. It is ironic, considering Hite's attempt to lay everything in the lap of H.R.'s and CDC, that H.R.'s, in fact, make none of the decisions regarding who shall live in a dorm. They are responsive to other offices for that. Also, the H.R.'s are the people who stand at the dorm door trying to explain the mess to angry students and parents.

Hite had the audacity to suggest that if only H.R.'s did their jobs "right" damage would decrease. That's just plain wrong.

Even a cursory examination of the campus damage situation will reveal that a large part of it is student caused. It is students who are present most often when dormitory damage occurs and are in the best position to curb it. Until students themselves are willing to testify to the identities of the vandals, to exert peer pressure on the offenders to change their ways, or, at least to resist the adolescent temptation to trash things, the damage rate will continue to climb. To suggest that H.R.'s are responsible for student damage is ridiculous.

There is one area in which Hite and I find ourselves in agreement. The R.A. staff is extremely important both to the students and the H.R.'s. Suffice it to say that I too believe they are overworked and underpaid. Although Hite won't believe it, H.R.'s feel that situation should be changed.

There is much more that could be said about the H.R. job, but I'll save it. I would hope, though, that before Jon Hite does any more "shooting from the hip" [as the Vice-Chancellor so charitably put it], he should do just a little investigation into the matter. It's apparent to me that his remarks were adherent to a model of "scapegoat-ism" rather than to the more appropriate ideal of accurate and constructive criticism.

Columnist too vociferous

To the Editor:

More a literary rubberneck than participator, I would customarily refrain from rendering a public dissent upon personal grounds. However, one discursive Collegian columnist has wrested reality from its sheath once too often.

His capricious and impervious ramblings seem disparaging to issues I find immensely appropos. In an exaggerated effort he manages to efface rather than elucidate issues by concocting infinite enigmatic sentences. One must engross a degree in vocabulary to endure the entire article.

Either give him a professorship or chasten him by putting a five letter limit on his vociferations.

Dinah Olanoff

'Third World' means equality

To the Editor:

The letter written by Patrick O'Donnell that appeared in the February 24th issue of the Collegian has prompted this hasty response. Patrick O'Donnell suggests that the concept of the "Third World" should be abolished because it represents "outright racism."

Mr. O'Donnell has apparently mis-read and failed to understand the origin and location of racism in our American society. His letter seems to be another attempt to "blame the victim."

Why is it so frequently suggested that the organizations and responses Third World people develop in response to historic and continuing racism, be abolished? As these suggestions are made, we hear so few suggestions about how we abolish the manifestations of our American legacy of racism, that appear all around us.

I with the letter writer, wish that the constitution and the Bill of Rights of the United States of America had been sufficient to create a nation where opportunity was available to all; such is not the case. I wish the Supreme Court decision of 1954 had been unnecessary, but it was. I wish the passage of the Equal Rights Amendment was not a necessity, but it is. I wish that non-Third World people would be such advocates of justice, liberation and opportunity that Third World persons would not have to organize; but we do.

I share with writer O'Donnell the hope that at some time in the American experience the diversity and creativity that is present within this land will be the source of joy and strength for all of us. But until that time comes, any suggestion that Third World groups disband and disappear is premature and insensitive.

Carter: Coal operators' hit man?

By PETER KRACHT

Eighty days into the coal strike, and in the words of one miner, "...(with coal stockpiles getting low) we're just coming up to bat." Despite mounting bills, harassment by state police, hired goons, the FBI, and even National Guardsmen (in Indiana), the miners have stood firm. No matter how low their so-called national spokesman Arnold Miller has been willing to bend over to please America's corporate giants, the rank and file have refused to be sold out in 1978. Meanwhile the same coal executives who boasted of their unlimited strength three months ago, are now yelling about the "endangered public interest" which calls for government intervention to force the miners back to work. Taking this as their cue, leading congressional figures have begun calling on the President to break the strike with the Taft-Hartley Act. And somehow, even Jimmy Carter realizes that it will take a hell of a lot more than a fireside chat to end this battle. While verbally claiming neutrality, the President has said more than once that he would use Taft-Hartley or some other form of action to get tough with the miners if "the public interest" called for it.

What we have going on right now is an all out attempt by the big money interests of this country to discredit the miners' struggle and rally public opinion for the President to attempt to crush this strike. Check out any major radio, TV, or newspaper reports of this "coal war". All the focus is on the tremendous hardships caused by the strike. Where has a single major news report focused on the just demands of the United Mineworkers Union?

In an immediate sense this strike has meant hardships for other working people, especially in the coal producing states. There have been power cutbacks and even layoffs. College students have been told in some states that the miners' strike may force them to close school for lack of energy. In spite of all this, the overwhelming response of the people has been to support the miners, and place the blame where it belongs — with the coal operators who refuse to give in to the just demands of the strike. At one steel plant in Pittsburgh, workers about to be laid off were told to "go out and kill a miner" if they wanted to protect their jobs. Instead those workers donated $200 to the miners strike in one day when members of the National United Workers Organization came around to gather support. Why? What these steelworkers were seeing was that the miners were going up against the same corporate bastards and their cops, courts, etc. that stand high and mighty on the backs of all workers, and they had to be supported in that fight. It's in the interests of all workers to see the miners win the right to strike over local grievances, rather than be shackled with the arbitrary abuses of the coal bosses; to regain full health benefits for their families rather than suffer in constant debt; to be able to refuse unsafe work rather than risk deadly accidents, etc. These are all problems facing workers in every major industry. What makes this miners battle so important is that these guys have shown their ability over the years to unite their ranks throughout the coalfields and take on the coal bosses, despite all attempts by courts, cops, politicians, and even traitors in the "leadership" of their union to drive them down. Should the miners win this current national strike it will be a real step forward and a real inspiration for the entire working class in its fight against the capitalist rulers of this country. So when Jimmy Carter talks about sticking his nose into the struggle and "getting tough" with the Taft-Hartley Act, you have to wonder whose interests he's so concerned about.

The Taft-Hartley Act itself was never meant to serve the interests of working people, and never has since its passage under Truman in 1947. When it was first introduced in congress to suit the post-war needs of big business, unions across the country branded it the "slave labor bill" and fought to wipe it off the books. It includes a section on "national emergencies" where the President is given the power to order strikers back to work if in his opinion the strike "imperils national health or safety".

According to the law the strikers would have to return to work for a "cooling off" period of 80 days during which time the federal government attempts to impose a settlement. In other words Carter would be acting as a dirty scab protecting the interests of the coal companies if he ordered the miners back to work with Taft-Hartley. This is one law the capitalists have never enjoyed using because it exposes the very nature of their rule over the working class. They also know fully well that fancy legal talk on a piece of paper doesn't force workers to end strikes; it's the power of the cops, national guardsmen, and federal troops that do the dirty work for the state. To put any force behind a Taft-Hartley order or any other government imposed settlement against the miners, the President would have to call out the troops, as was actually done in 1970 to break the Postal workers strike. President Carter may very well take off the mask of Mr. Human Rights and reveal his true nature as the coal operators' hit man by ordering the miners back to work at the point of a gun.

The point is to let Jimmy know that when he attacks the miners, he's going to be met with a wall of resistance and a counterattack. As the Miners' Right to Strike Committee puts it: "Organized — and with the support of our working class across the country — we can whip these companies, their cops, their troops, their Taft and Hartley and whatever else they throw at us! They can't mine coal with bayonets!"

Massachusetts turning right

Kevin Knobloch

The Massachusetts State Legislature made the front page of the state's major newspapers hundreds of times in 1977 for its initiatives regarding national issues affecting the Bay State. Those readers who have neglected to follow the actions of this lawmaking body may be surprised to discover its legislature, as a group, is far more conservative than its supposed national image would have us believe. Indeed, if America is turning to the right, the Massachusetts State Legislature is leading the pack.

A close examination of some of the major legislation dealt with during the past year, including both bills that met approval and those defeated, reveals open-ended support for business, industry and apple pie, while gays, women and the consumer continue to find themselves in the legislative doghouse.

From the beginning, the representatives made no real effort to look out for the rights of its constituents. Following a trend that peaked with the strong enforcement of anti-marijuana laws during the 60's, the House and Senate have continued its efforts to legislate the morals of the citizenry. Perhaps most indicative of these efforts was the House defeat, in a close vote, of a bill prohibiting discrimination against homosexuals and bisexuals in public jobs, not including public school teachers. Massachusetts citizens will rest comfortably for at least another year with the knowledge that their co-workers are not gay. Or at the very least, they will not have to work along side a publicly avowed homosexual or lesbian.

In yet another bold move, the legislature decided to send a resolution to the U.S. Congress urging it to call a constitutional convention to consider passage of an amendment prohibiting abortion except when necessary to prevent a mother's death. And, in one of its less perceptive moves, the House failed to support a bill allowing minors to obtain contraceptives and other birth control information from a doctor without parental consent. A perennial initiative submitted for consideration every year by its supporters, the birth control education bill still finds the legislature living in its distant high school days of the past, when pregnant teenagers were quietly removed from sight of the student body. The 167 representatives who voted against the bill have obviously failed to visit their high schools in recent years.

And, as not to mar its record of protecting their constituents from themselves, the House defeated a move to abolish the Obscene Literature Commission, which, although it is no longer funded and exists only on paper, could be revived at will. Frankly, its existence reeks of governmental censorship.

In perhaps the most familiar legislative action, the blue law controversy ended in a compromise that will most likely benefit the state's retail businesses in the near future, at the expense of creating a business week that never ends. Although the House defeated a measure that would repeal the blue laws and allow the opening of retail stores on Sunday, it did team with the Senate in passing a law allowing such openings for the four Sundays between Thanksgiving and Christmas. Although one argument suggests the consumer is the final benefactor, receiving an additional shopping day in which to spend, the move to abolish the blue laws can only benefit the profiteer in the end.

If the conservatism of the state's political leaders is still in doubt, two further legislative actions should be considered. The House strongly turned down a measure that would require gun owners to pass a firearms competency test to demonstrate their knowledge of gun safety. Either the House decided to ignore the high number of fatal gun accidents in Bay State homes last year, or the Fish and Game lobbyists are firmly entrenched on the State House steps. And, on June 27, the lawmakers approved a law that will have teachers in public schools across the state leading their students in a heart warming daily pledge of allegiance. The conservative leaders will soon discover there is no quicker way to teach hypocrisy to its youth than by promising "justice to all" in a state that chooses to exclude the rights of women, gays and the working middle-class.

Choosing up sides

Julie Melrose

After the National Women's Conference in Houston at which delegates voted to support the struggle for Lesbians' rights, a reporter wrote, "it was a convention at which women decided to love women who love women." It seems, however, that an increasing number of "women who love women" are having a hard time loving "women who also love men."

Women who devote the majority of their time and energy to women but continue to relate sexually to men often stand accused of being "traitors to the Women's Movement."

Traitors. A war word. Choosing up sides. The feminist community, both local and national, seems to be dividing along lines of sexual preference. In no way am I implying that the problem is being caused by lesbianism. It is the lack of acceptance and empathy among women who, somewhere back there, shared a common goal that is disturbing.

One of the major goals of the Women's Movement was, supposedly, to get women in touch with their true feelings and encourage them to act upon them. Asking a woman to commit herself to a lifestyle that demands repression of any sexual feelings towards men she may have is asking her to deny her true feelings. She might not be a "traitor to the movement" anymore, but she would certainly be a traitor to herself.

It has been argued that women have been socialized to be attracted to men, and of course this is true. But socialized or innate, the feelings are there for many women and continue to be there after a strong commitment to feminism has been made.

Some lesbians have said that heterosexuality or bisexuality in women they are close to presents a threat. They fear that after they have invested a great deal in the formation of a friendship or love relationship with another woman, that woman will leave them if a man comes along. I have no doubt that this is a realistic apprehension, given the way in which women have been socialized to think of love relationships with men as "the real thing."

I think it is granting women too little credit to believe that it is impossible for them to learn to give due attention and priority to relationships with other women. I also believe that if a woman remains in a lesbian relationship because of a political commitment and not because that's where she really wants to be, the quality of that relationship is bound to suffer.

One of the reasons so many women are opting for a lesbian lifestyle is that they view traditional heterosexual relationships as destructive and masochistic for women. No argument there. But who said all heterosexual relationships have to be "traditional?" Having relationships with men does not necessarily imply accepting those relationships totally on the mens' terms.

Along with the history of oppression of women by men has come a history of women contributing to their own oppression by demanding far less than they have deserved. Women need to set, in their own minds, standards as to what they need and want from a relationship. But this should hold true for all relationships, heterosexual and homosexual.

Some women have found that relationships with men just don't meet their needs, and have decided to commit themselves to relating sexually only to women. Other women choose to continue trying to build healthy relationships with men. It should be an individual's option to look for satisfying relationships wherever s-he thinks s-he may find them.

I find it very hard to believe that the least oppressive of heterosexual relationships is still more oppressive than the most oppressive of lesbian relationships.

There are some problems inherent in intimate relationships between any two people in a society that leaves many of us ill-prepared for any sort of intimacy. This is compounded, in the case of heterosexual relationships, by issues of sexual oppression and male-female socialization. But a great deal still rests on the individual qualities of the two people involved and their willingness to struggle together to overcome the problems.

Lesbian women, who probably know as well as anyone the damages of not being allowed to act on their true feelings, should not be punishing other women for acting on theirs. Any women who devotes the majority of her time and energy to working towards the liberation of women is making an important contribution, no matter whom she chooses to relate to sexually.

A heterosexual or bisexual feminist woman is no traitor. She is simply unwilling to make herself a martyr by denying her true personal feelings in the name of an abstract political identification. Being an active feminist is hard enough without having one's sisters doubt one's dedication.

Poet Zoe Best said in a telephone interview this weekend that when groups of women in this country segregate themselves socially, culturally and in the workplace they are really acting out a system of apartheid imposed by the ruling class to keep people from working together towards shared goals. She was referring specifically to Black and white women, but I think her point is equally applicable to women of differing sexual preferences.

The division of American feminists along lines of sexual preference has, sadly, become one more example of the way in which feelings about men drive a wedge between women.

Criminal justice students committing campus crimes

WESTFIELD, Mass. (UPI) — wcampus police at Westfield State College say 90 percent of the crimes reported to them are committed by students majoring in criminal justice.

"It's downright scary to think that these people are going to be enforcing laws they can't seem to obey," said one student in the popular course.

Criminal justice students are trained to be police and probation officers and law enforcemnt administrators. Many work as interns in area courts and police departments.

Campus security chief Thomas Connors said most of the offenses are not serious but range from minor disturbances to vandalism caused by drunken students.

The 380 criminal justice students make up 16 percent of the college's enrollment. Connors said most of the trouble is caused by a group of 16 to 20 students.

He asked the department, the fastest-growing on campus, to help out in dealing with the rowdies. But Connors was told the department's authority is confined to academics.

Bowdoin College students to visit Republic of China

BRUNSWICK, wmaine (UPI) – A group of up to two dozen Bowdoin College students and teachers has been granted permission to visit the People's Republic of China, the school announced yeaterday.

Professor Eric J. Hooglund, coordinator for the trip, said the itinerary developed by Luxingshe, the China International Travel Ser3 vice, includes visits to Peking, Nanking, Yangchow, Soochow and Shanghai between June 9 and 24.

He said the Chinese government will strictly regulate the trip, planning each day's activities in advance and closely supervising the Bowdoin group. Luxingshe will handle all food, lodging and in-country travel arrangements.

Police horse rescued from snow covered hole

BOSTON (UPI) – One of Boston's finest is in "stable" condition today after being rescued from an icy culvert in a downtown park over the weekend.

The cop is Misty, an 8-yearold stallion in the city's mounted police force. Misty and his rider, patrolman Willia Hahoney, fell in the snowcovered hole Sunday while on patrol in the Public Garden, near the state capitol.

Mahoney jumped free, but Misty was trapped.

"I packed some snow behind him so he wouldn't slide further into the hole," Mahoney said. Then he waited for fire and rescue companies to arrive.

After discarding several ideas on how to pull a 1,000-pound horse out of a hole, the rescuers slid a fire hose under Misty's belly.

Ten men stood on each side of the horse and, using the hose as a sling, began to pull.

Your Birthday

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 28

Born today, you are easily bored. Long before a project is finished, you look around for the next one. You will have to guard against detracting from your efforts through being prematurely interested in and distracted by what's yet to come.

You are something of a dreamer, but you don't let this interfere with the reasoned fulfillment of your responsibilities. Although you claim not to like surprises, you handle the unexpected with ease. Calm and clear-headed even when dealing with matters about which you know little, you present a picture of efficient know-how. You are not one who saves for a rainy day, but, as a result of upbringing, you generally safeguard your future.

You seem to work best with an overcrowded schedule. You enjoy leisure activities, but not leisure time. Rest and relaxation are words rather than realities. It is important to your success that you are never faced with empty periods; for you they have a depressing rather than a restorative effect.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) – Business complications may make today confusing. Try to elicit praise.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – An exceptional morning encourages you to new enterprise later. Progress is made quickly.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Profits will soar if you take advantage of a friend's offer. Business and pleasure mix well today.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Your chance to increase popularity is brief but definite. Move quickly when you have the opportunity.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Today benefits the go-getters of the business community. Don't hesitate to ask a favor.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) – Try to please the public when you can. Neglect tact and diplomacy to your detriment.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) – If you jump to a conclusion early today, you will have the wrong answer at evening.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) – You can vent your fury late in the day, but when you are alone and cannot be overheard.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) – A new method of maintaining an old position serves you well now.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) – An explosive opinion of another's work may cause embarrassment and personal loss.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) – Independence puts you out in front today; it may also cause injury to a friend.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) – You can be as creative as you wish today, and in a most profitable channel.

After four years, Cantwell remains a consistent performer for gymwomen

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

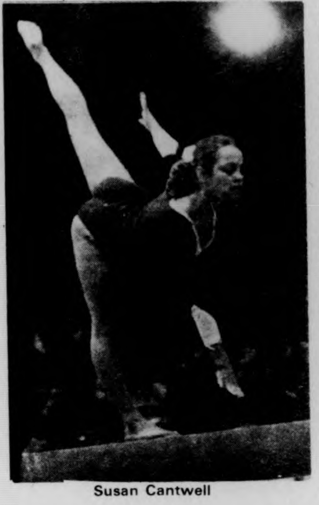
For four years Susan Cantwell has been a highly visible, very consistent, successful member of the women's gymnastics team. Tonight at 7 p.m. in the Curry Hicks Cage, Cantwell will be honored along with teammate Stephanie Jones as the Minutewomen compete against UNH in the last home meet of the season.



Susan Cantwell

Cantwell was lured away from her home state, Pennsylvania, and its state schools by UMass' academic and gymnastic programs, in the fall of 1974. By the spring of 1975 Cantwell, with the help of former teammate Jeanine Burger, led the Minutewomen to an eastern championship and a second place finish in the AIAW nationals. En route, Cantwell earned her first All-American ranking — quite an honor for a freshman gymnast.

Cantwell's success came as no surprise, however. She began practicing at the age of 11 under the tutelage of her mother at the Mannets Gymnastics Club in Philadelphia. Susan, along with five sisters, continued practicing daily, five days a week, year-round, until she was in high school. Cantwell was injured during the 1972 Olympic Game Trials and spent a year and a half out of gymnastics.

"Susan has been a strong and consistent contributor all four years she has been with the team," said Coach Virginia Evans. "She has the distinction of being a stronger gymnast as a senior than she was as a freshman or sophomore. "This is unusual because a fair percentage of seniors are restricted by injuries at this point in their gymnastic careers," added Evans.

Cantwell's only serious injury in her college career came against arch rival Penn State. While warming up on the balance beam, she twisted her ankle on her dismount and was scratched from the final two events. Evans felt Cantwell's absence from the lineup was the reason UMass suffered its only defeat of that season.

As a junior, Cantwell was her best in competition. As Easterns she finished seventh in the all around category with a career best of 36.45 points in four events. At nationals she finished thirteenth, an honor in itself, but a disappointment in that the top twelve finishers qualified for the World University Games Trials.

Last year also marked the entrance of Jill Heggie, Stephanie Jones and Karen Hemberger into the lineup which added greatly to the internal competition for the all around positions. Cantwell settled in the number three slot.

"I really like the atmosphere in the gym now," said Cantwell. "There's a lot of team spirit and help coming from everyone. That really makes a difference when you have to come into the gym to work out every day.

Gymnastics demands a great deal of time and dedication. The UMass team begins working out in September, shortens all major holidays, and works three to four hours each day. Cantwell doesn t regret giving up a "normal" life. "I'll miss working out after doing it for so long," said Cantwell.

Coach Evans echoed Cantwell's feelings. "We will definitely miss Susan in the gym. She has been a consistently, strong performer and has added a lot to our program," said Evans.

The Cantwell name may not disappear forever, however. Susan's youngest sister Barbara is considering coming to UMass in the fall. In the meantime, Susan is hoping to finish off her last season with a flourish and you can catch her efforts for the last time tonight at 7 p.m. in the Cage.

Spikers set

Two UMass volleyball squads finished second and third, respectively, last weekend at NOPE in a tuneup for this weekend's New England College Open at Wentworth College, March 4.

Springfield College came out on top in the practice tournament, and Berkshire College placed fourth.

Martin Avedisian, commissioner of officials for the New England division of the United States Volleyball Association, has seen the UMass team and has given it his full support. He said he would like to see western Massachusetts become the mecca of New England college volleyball.

High-scoring Peters: She can do it all

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

She is the ultimate offensive machine, a player who can score in double figures almost at will.

And yet Sue Peters of the UMass women's basketball team is also more.

"Sue has become an all-around ballplayer," UMass coach Mary Ann Ozdarski said. "She passes and rebounds well. Sue's developed into an all-around team player."

But scoring is still Peters' forte, and if she hits for at least 11 points tonight against Southern Connecticut, she will become the first Minutewoman to ever score 400 points in a season.

"Sue Peters is the type of kid, whether she's off or on, who will always score points," Ozdarski noted. "She's a very, very consistent ballplayer, and is a pure shooter."

Consistency is the keyword to Peters' success with UMass. Her 20.5 points per game average leads the club, and she is shooting at a 48 per cent clip from the field.

Peters has scored in double figures in each of UMass's 19 games this season, and has hit the 20-point mark 13 times. Her high game was a 33-point effort on a 15 for 21 day from the field against Vermont in early December.

"I feel it's more difficult for me to score this year than last," Peters said. "I feel I have to do more to score a basket, like shooting outside. A lot of my baskets last year were layups."

"I feel a little more pressure on me, not to score more, but that it's going to be harder to score."

The 5-7 sophomore guard came to UMass after a brilliant career at Southbridge High School. Ironically, the star of the Northampton team was Maura Supinski, now a Minutewoman teammate.

Peters was a starter at UMass from minute one of her freshman year. She popped in 16.3 points per game last season to lead the club. This season, her development as a player has been continuing.

"She picks up things very quickly," Ozdarski said. "She's improved so much. The kid loves to play the game."

"I think I've been using my head more this year than last," Peters said. "Last year I did a lot just on ability alone, but I feel I've been thinking more this year."

Peters has been adjusting to a new backcourt partner since the end of January. Mary Hallaren has stepped into the starting lineup in place of Sue Henry, who left the squad due to academic problems.

"It was difficult for me when Sue left, because we were close friends off and on the court," Peters said. "I think after she first left I tried to do too much myself, and I put added pressure on myself.

"Sue looked to me a lot, and we played well together. But I'm getting used to playing with Mary. She knows when I want to get the ball. She looks inside for me a lot more."

Although Peters is averaging seven rebounds a game, she is not satisfied with that aspect of her game.

"I'm unhappy with my rebounding," she said. "Offensively, I should get much more rebounds. I tend to stand around and watch too much.

Sue Peters lets loose an "in your face" scoop layup — just one move in her offensive repertoire that makes her the most potent scorer on the team. (Staff photo by Pat Dobbs)

"It's expected of me to score 20 points a game, but I'm not expected to get 15 rebounds. I should be doing that much more often, or at least get three or four more a game."

Only in her second year on the team, Peters feels like a veteran.

"I feel like one of the more experienced players on the team," she said. "I'm trying to help the younger players out."

Entering the Eastern regionals, Peters said that Southern Connecticut, Queens, St. John's, and Brooklyn College are the teams to beat.

But if Sue Peters keeps scoring 20 points and handing out four assists a game, perhaps UMass should be included in that list too.

UMass tames Panthers, 71-68

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

It was only fitting that on Senior Night at the Cage last night, two, you quessed it, seniors, would combine to make the biggest play of the game as the University of Massachusetts basketball team came from behind to nip Pittsburgh, 71-68.

The senior duo of Mike Pyatt and Derick Claiborne, playing their last home game at UMass along with Alex Eldridge and Chuck Stevesky, combined to score 10 of UMass' final 12 points and teamed up to thwart a final scoring attempt by the Panthers with six seconds left.

With 15 seconds remaining and UMass holding a tenuous 69-68 advantage (that's the first time UMass led since 4-2), Pitt coach Tim Grgurich called time out and diagrammed his team's final shot.

"We went into our regular offense and were looking for Larry Harris," Grgurich said afterwards in defense of his decision.

But the Panthers couldn't find Harris, thanks mainly to the tough defense of Eric Williams, and when center Ed Scheuermann tried to hit Terry Knight with a pass down low, Pyatt came across and swatted the ball to Billy Morrison, who fed Claiborne for the game icing layup at the buzzer.

"I just came across from the weak side after I saw Knight post down low and just got my hand in the way," said Pyatt of his key defensive play.

The victory brought the Minutemen's regular season to a close as they finished with a 15-11 record, 5-5 in the EAA. More importantly, the win gives UMass some momentum entering this Thursday's first round playoff game in Pittsburgh where they'll meet host Duquesne.

The victory ended a four game drought for UMass, but it didn't come easily. The 4115 in attendance thought they were in for another long night when the Panthers, who were led by Harris' 18 first half points, walked out at intermission leading by nine, 42-33.

But the Minutemen's defense tightened and held the Panthers, who had shot 60 per cent from the floor in the opening half, to a cooler 40 per cent in the second stanza. Harris, who was the game's high scorer with 25 points, was limited to just seven in the second half.

The UMass offense heated up as Pyatt (22 points, 8 rebounds), Williams (14 points) and Claiborne (11 points) helped chop a ten point Panther advantage (56-46) to one, 63-62, with 6:24 left.

"We played extremely well in the second half. I thought we played with a lot of enthusiasm and that squares us away pretty well for this week," UMass coach Jack Leaman said.

It was a night for the seniors to remember and yet another chapter in a long list of Cage memories....

UM fans bid fond farewell to hoop srs.

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

All the excitement, thrills and chills that seniors Mike Pyatt, Derick Claiborne, Alex Eldridge and Chuck Steveskey brought to UMass when they first stepped on the floor way back in 1974 were ever so present last night at the Cage.

It was only fitting that Pyatt, with the Minutemen leading by one with 51 seconds to go in the game, would deflect a Panther pass right into the hands of UMass guard Bill Morrison.

It was only right that Morrison would dish off a pass to Captain Claiborne and send him on his way to a game ending layup as 4,115 spectators absolutely went nuts and zoomed onto the court.

"The fans here at the Cage are just unbelievable," said Pyatt, who scored 22, rebounded eight, stole 4 passes and blocked one shot. "The ovation they gave us tonight will remain with me for a long time."

"The Cage is the Joint," said Eldridge, "I think Senior Night will be a night to remember for a long time. We definitely needed a lift from the crowd to get us going."

Eldridge, returning from a four game absence with a knee sprain, scored five in an 18 minute stint but was instrumental in helping the Minutemen climb back from a ten point deficit to only trail by five when he went out of the game.

"I feel a lot better tonight," said Eldridge. "The knee will come around. I could have played more in the second half but I felt it tighten up a little bit and didn't want to risk it with the tournament coming up."

Claiborne, who broke the UMass record for most consecutive games played in a four year career (90) scored 11, rebounded five times and handed out three assists.

Claiborne, who scored seven of the last 12 UMass points, said the win over the Panthers was exactly what the team needed.

"It was a tremendous win, not so much for the seniors but for the whole team. It was an emotional one, and one I think that will get us on the track for the tournament," he said.

Steveskey only played five minutes for his last game at the Cage but he definitely was appreciated by the crowd as the four seniors were individually introduced along with manager Skip Alford before the game and received plaques.

"Chuck has been a real asset to our program for four years. His hustle in practice and in the game has been a model for other players to follow," said Coach Jack Leaman.

Trackmen slip in NE's

By KEVIN McCAFFREY
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE — Northeastern University outclassed the competition at Harvard's spacious indoor track complex Sunday, as the Huskies amassed 62 points en route to their fifth consecutive New England Indoor Track Championship. UMass finished a disappointing 14th.

Yankee Conference title holder UConn finished a distant second with 37 points, while YanCon runner-up Boston University tallied 24 for third place. UMass, represented by the lone scoring effort of Steve MacDougall in the 1000 yard run, concluded the two day program with four points.

In the sole Minutemen highlight, sophomore MacDougall shed his image as a second year surprise with his convincing performance in the 1000 yard run. Running in typical long striding form, MacDougall squeezed out a narrow victory over John Costigan of Worcester State for the runner-up slot. His time of 2:11.63 was but 1.07 seconds from snaring victory away from the New England titleholder, Tom Mortimer of Northeastern.

What could have been one of the most thrilling match-ups of the 16-event program dissolved before the gun sounded. The Minutemen's prime candidate for an All New England selection, Joe Martens, pulled a hamstring while warming up to qualify in his specialty, the 440 yard dash. The prospect of witnessing Martens and the eventual winner, BU's Glen Cohen, head to head in a running duel never came to pass as it had a week ago in the YanCon championships. For the record, it was the British Olympian Cohen who registered a convincing triumph with a new meet standard of 48.52 seconds.

Two other UMass performers who fared well a week ago were victimized by what coach Ken O'Brien termed "poor positioning".

Francis O'Keefe, victorious in the YanCon's at 880 yards, finished out of the scoring (top five) in the same event that provided glory a week ago. Falling almost instantly behind at the sound of the gun, O'Keefe spent most of his energy on the final 100 yards of the race in a determined attempt to offset the initial deficit. His final effort fell short of the mark and he finished sixth.

Senior Mark Healy, who was the second fastest qualifier in the 600 yard semi-finals on Saturday, followed the unfortunate footsteps of teammate O'Keefe. Boxed out early, Healy fell into a hole too deep to overcome. Mark Lech of Northeastern won the event.

NE-bound matmen trounce UNH

The Minuteman wrestling team, headed for the New England championships this weekend, trounced New Hampshire 30-15 last night at Boyden Auxiliary Gym in the team's last regular season meet of the season.

The surprise of the night turned out to be Keith Dixon, who trounced the Wildcats' Scott Wood, 12-1, in his 126-pound match. Dixon had seen little action during the early part of the season, but has come on to be the Minutemen's number one man in the 126 pound class.

"There's no doubt about it," beamed Coach Dave Amato after the match. "That kid went out there and wrestled one helluva match against a wrestler who finished fourth in New England last year. Dixon may turn out to be a pleasant surprise this weekend."

Prior to the Dixon heroics, Dana Rasmussen started the UMass scoring with an 8-2 win at 118 pounds. With 45 seconds left in the third period, Raz' sprained an ankle but was able to finish the match. The injury was not serious.

"It was a minor sprain, but it doesn't hurt," said Rasmussen, "It'll be fine by Friday."

Larry Otsuka continued his onslaught against rival wrestlers with a convincing pin at 5:56 in his 34 pound bout. Otsuka had held a 10-3 lead at the time of the fall.

Charley Rigoglioso was leading 1-0 in the second period of his 142 pound match, but was awarded the match by forfeit when the Wildcats' Nabil Boghos was unable to continue. Boghos was taken to the Infirmary for treatment of a split tongue and released.

UNH won its first match of the night as Bruce Cerullo took a riding time decision over Tim Fallon. Fallon, the UMass co-captain and only senior on the team, was honored by players and coaches before the meet began.

In making the presentation of a plaque, coach Amato cited Fallon for his four years of outstanding service to the UMass wrestling program. "Tim Fallon is one of the outstanding captains of sports on this campus," said Amato.

Although wrestling in a heavier weight class, Mike Carroll won 7-2 to put the tally at 22-3 UMass.

UNH took the next two matches, but Bob Clark was a 1-0 winner in his 177 pound bout to put the meet on ice for the Minutemen. In the Clark match, a second period stalling warning against both wrestlers became an important call as Mike Pendergast, the Wildcat wrestler, was called for his second stall late in the third period to account for the only scoring in the match.

John Allen wrapped things up for UMass as he staged a New England title warmup with a 17-4 triumph.

Wrestling Notes

Among the spectators last night was Ron Pelligra, former UMass assistant wrestling coach and graduate student, who is now working in Syracuse. Pelligra was the national heavyweight champion in Division Three during his wrestling days at St. Lawrence University...

Festival of Music set for summer session '78

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

A three week Leonard Bernstein Festival of Music featuring major guest artists and companies to both perform and teach workshops to summer session students was announced yesterday by Fine Arts Center officials.

Acting Director of the Fine Arts Center John A. Jenkins said the festival is expected to boost summer session enrollments, provide student jobs both in the areas of performance and work-study, and generate a larger tourist industry in the Amherst area.

"It'll keep the campus hopping," said one Fine Arts Center official, "There's something going on every weekend."

Officials say the Amherst area could take in from $500,000 to as much as $1 million from people coming to the area during the festival period of June 26 to July 23.

About 10 major stars and companies have been signed to participate thus far, but officials say more are in the process of being signed.

Artists and performances now planned include violinist Eugene Fodor; conductor and pianist Lukas Foss; Metropolitan Opera mezzo-soprano Florence Quivar; productions of "Westside Story" and Bernstein's opera "Trouble in Tahiti"; The Hartford Ballet; the Duke Ellington Orchestra and Woody Herman and his Young Thundering Herd.

Bernstein, who is currently completing a three month European tour, sent a message to be read at the press conference yesterday.

"As a composer and a native son of Massachusetts, I am doubly honored by the University of Massachusetts at Amherst in presenting the Leonard Bernstein Festival of American Music. To the University, the community, and to the artists who will participate, I send my warmest greetings and appreciation," Bernstein wrote.

Jenkins said the idea for organizing such a festival dedicated to Bernstein has been kicked around the University for a while.

"Alan Light (concert hall manager) arrived in my office or in the office of (assistant provost) Fred Tillis, I don't remember which it was, with the idea of the festival," Jenkins said.

In October, Fine Arts and University staff decided to go "full gear" on a Leonard Bernstein festival, Jenkins said.

Bernstein's New York Agent has told the University that Bernstein would very much like to attend "at least one event" during the festival, but a prior commitment to a tour of the Orient will force him to be absent for the first two weeks.

Jenkins said the festival has an operating budget of about $200,000, which will be "defrayed by sharing the costs between different revenue sources."

He said organizers hope to generate $100,000 from ticket sales and another $20,000 from workshop fees paid by summer session students.

Summer session students or anyone interested may enroll in workshops being offered by guest artists in the weeks preceeding their performances.

Sue Huetteman, in charge of running the workshops, said the fee is $15 per credit with both 3-credit and 6-credit programs available.

Huetteman said students should begin looking for press releases and ads in local newspapers around the first of April.

While students will probably be the first to know about the festival, enrollment is on a first-come, first-served basis and no preference will be given to UMass undergraduates.

Summer Session Director Alan Ashton said he hopes to boost summer enrollment to 4000 from last year's 3700.

Room and board will also be provided for a fee, Huetteman said, or students may live off-campus if they prefer.

In addition to participating in the workshops, students are eligible to audition for the various festival performances to be held.

Jenkins said the festival hopes to give

Bernstein - a brief look

Leonard Bernstein was born in Lawrence, Mass., on August 18, 1918, and grew up in Boston. He graduated from Harvard University in 1939, and continued his studies at the Curtis Institute with Fritz Reiner, Randall Thompson and Isabella Vengerova. His summers were spent at Tanglewood, as a student and assistant to Serge Koussevitzky.

Engaged by Artur Rodzinski as assistant conductor of the New York Philharmonic in 1943, Bernstein made his debut with the orchestra on November 14 of that year, replacing Bruno Walter in a nationally-broadcast concert.

In the years following, Bernstein served as music director of the New York City Symphony (1945-1948), was head of the conducting faculty at the Berkshire Music Center (1951-55) and professor of music at Brandeis University (1951-56), and appeared regularly as guest conductor with the New York Philharmonic and the Israel Philharmonic.

Named music director of the New York Philharmonic in 1958, Bernstein was the first American-born and trained musician to attain such a post. During his long association with the philharmonic, he conducted more concerts than any other conductor in its history, and, in 1969 he was given the lifetime title of Laureate Conductor.

In addition to conducting the New York Philharmonic, Bernstein has conducted most of the world's leading orchestras, as well as the Metropolitan Opera in La Scala, Milan (the first American ever to conduct there), and the Vienna State Opera.

Acclaimed as a composer, Mr. Bernstein has written three symphonies, "Jeremiah", "Age of Anxiety", and "Kaddish", the "Serenade" for Violin and String Orchestra, "Chichester Psalms" for Orchestra and Chorus, the ballets "Fancy Free" and "Facsimile", the one-act opera "Trouble in Tahiti", and the score for the film "On the Waterfront".

For the Broadway theatre, he has contributed the scores to "On the Town", "Wonderful Town", "Candide", and, "West Side Story".

His recent works include "Mass", which opened the Kennedy Center in 1971, and "Dybbuk", a ballet which had its premiere performance in 1974 by the New York Ballet.

A retrospective of Bernstein's work was presented last spring in Israel during a two-week, nationwide Bernstein Festival, organized by the Israel Philharmonic to celebrate the 30th anniversary of his first concerts in Israel. This past August, the Carinthian Summer Festival in Austria presented the first European festival of his music.

Pierpont songsters rally; defend dorm reputation

By MARK LECCESE
Collegian Staff

It seems that 175 students singing "We Shall Overcome" had an effect on James Matlack.

Matlack, the master-director of Southwest, faced the singers Monday night in Pierpont, where he had gone to announce his plan to change the reputation of the dorm by limiting its residents to freshmen and sophomores this fall.

After facing emotional opposition from the meeting, Matlack yesterday announced that he would be willing to consider possible alternatives to his plan.

In a memorandum issued yesterday morning, Matlack said: "I will meet again with a drafting group from Pierpont next Monday to assess progress and the practicality of a viable alternative, one which offers at least equal assurance that good order, reasonable compliance with University regulations and policies, and an environment conducive to study for all residents will be achieved and maintained."

Matlack also said Pierpont would have three weeks to present their alternative plan, "or else my original proposal will go forward."

Not many Pierpont residents were satisfied, however. "It's hard to believe he's acting in good faith when he gives us three week's deadline for a project he's worked on for five months," said David Barenberg, a Pierpont student senator.

"If he had put more time in working with the Pierpont community instead of working against the community, we'd be further along in working to achieve our mutual goals," said Barenberg.

Matlack, in a four-page statement given to the students Monday night cited several reasons for his plan, among them were: pet policy, fire policy, equipment damage, noise levels, disruptive and destructive behavior associated with drinking and partying, and the use and sale of drugs.

According to Barenberg, Matlack "didn't have specific statistical matter on things such as the dorm's retention rate, academics, or drug problems. He didn't have the information to back up his charges and admitted so freely."

Jon Hite, Student Government Association Co-President, saw Matlack's willingness to bargain as a "glimmer of hope. I think this thing can be resolved in the dorm without the decision being made externally," said Hite.

Carter wants a return to basics

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter asked Congress yesterday for a record $12.9 billion federal budget for education and promised that some of the aid will go toward reviving the three R's — reading, 'riting and 'rithmetic.

If adopted by Congress, the hike would be the biggest increase in federal aid to education since Lyndon Johnson's administration.

Carter's message to Congress restated his fiscal 1979 budget request for a 24 percent increase in spending on education. It also revealed his proposals for reshaping the Elementary and Secondary Education Act in order to channel federal money more directly to "those so often shortchanged in our educational system because of social problems or poverty."

The president, whose first public office was as a school board member in Sumter County, Ga., said his proposals "will focus our nation's resources on helping our children master the basic skills — reading, writing and arithmetic — which remain critical to their ability to function in a complex society."

He also reaffirmed his intention to ask Congress to set up a separate Department of Education.

Carter asked for $6.9 billion for elementary and secondary education, up from $6 billion this year. This includes nearly $3.4 billion in aid for compensatory education for poor children, which funnels money to 14,000 of the nation's 16,000 school districts.

He proposed targeting $400 million in extra aid to 3,500 districts with large concentrations of poor students. Two-thirds of this money will go to hardpressed center-city schools, while one-third "will flow to rural and suburban school systems which have similar needs," he said.

The extra money will increase from 5.6 million to 6.5 million the number of poor students who get remedial education.

In his effort to improve steadily declining basic educational skills such as reading and writing, Carter said the government will fund more research and demonstration programs in these areas.

Congress, which has provided more for education than Republican presidents wanted from 1969 through 1977, is expected to be receptive to Carter's request, although a split is developing on aid to college students.

Carter wants to increase aid to college students by $1.46 billion, with much of the new money going for $250 grants to students from middle income families.

Outfront charge denied

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

The manager of the Campus Center Building Operations yesterday said there is "no way" $6,340 worth of materials was discarded when Campus Center employes cleaned the old Commuter Lounge more than a year ago.

Members of the monthly student newspaper, Outfront, are bringing four university employees to court April 10, seven months after filing a suit against them. The original claim of $1,000 in losses was increased Monday.

Dudley J. Bridges called the new figure "outrageous." He said, "It's too bad they have to go to this extent." Bridges maintains that if anything of value was thrown out by Campus Center workers, it was the fault of Outfront.

He said the Campus Center employees discarded "trash" that was left scattered on the floor of the Commuter Lounge, then on the lower level of the Student Union.

But according to James Starr, student Legal Services Office attorney for Outfront, the items allegedly discarded, including back issues of Outfront, graphics files, subscriptions to other periodicals and layout materials, were either on shelves or in "neat" stacks along the walls of the lounge.

Starr said, "I think we've got a good chance to get a judgment," at the Hampshire County District Court civil session.

The plaintiffs — James Jordan, Richard Warren and Robert Gardner — worked for Outfront a year ago. After the 1976-77 intersession, the Outfront members wrote a memo to Bridges asking for $500 reimbursement, which was denied. It was during that intersession the lounge was cleaned.

Defendants named in the suit, other than Bridges, are William F. Field, acting director of the Campus Center at the time the materials were allegedly discarded, Bernard F. Wilkes, assistant director of the Campus Center, and Edward J. Kelly, a professional technician for the Campus Center.

Also named are "John Doe" and "Mary Roe," names of persons not identified but may have been involved, according to Starr.

Since September, requests of information were filed at the court between the plaintiffs and defendants. It was when answering one of the requests that Jordan reassessed the value of materials he said were lost, according to Starr.

Outfront is not currently being published.

"Saturday Night Fever" hit Poor Richard's Sunday night where a capacity crowd witnessed 32 couples compete in a dance contest sponsored by Poor Richard's, Mountain Farms Mall 4 Theatres and Record Town.

The 32 couples were divided into six groups, each dancing to a song of the disc jockey's choice. Ten finalists were selected by a panel of seven judges which included representatives from the Mountain Farms Mall 4 Theatres, Record Town, the Valley Advocate, and Poor Richard's.

The ten couples then danced individually to a song of their choice. The contestants were judged on the style, creativity, and smoothness of their dancing. Five couples were selected as winners, with the first prize of $50, courtesy of Poor Richard's, awarded to Pat Leighton and Barbara Czelusniak.

Second place winners, Jose Candelario and Candid Maldonado, each won a year's free pass to Mountain Farms Mall 4 Theatres. The third place couple, Tony Potter and Lori Mickle, each won a copy of the original soundtrack of "Saturday Night Fever," compliments of Record Town.

Fourth place was awarded to Stanley Thompson and Evelyn Leon, each winning a free pass to Mountain Farms Mall 4 Theatres and a "Saturday Night Fever" poster. John Lahey and Patty Wayshack captured fifth place, each winning a "Saturday Night Fever" poster.

An overwhelming turnout Sunday night forced Poor Richard's to turn away more than 200 people who were waiting to attend the event. A second contest will be held on Sunday, March 12th to accommodate those who were unable to participate in the contest.

Ms. Czelusniak, one of the first prize winners, is a nutrition major at UMass and has been dancing with Pat Leighton since last spring when they met at a social dance class at UMass. Her partner currently teaches physics at Amherst High School. The couple danced to Thelma Houston's "Don't Leave Me This Way." Their style of dancing featured the American Hustle, forward and reverse turns, and a variety of kicks and head movements.

Concert heads agenda

The Undergraduate Student Senate will meet tonight night to discuss spring concert proposals which have caused a great deal of controversy.

Senate Speaker Pat Whelan expects the concert proposals to be discussed most of the night. "The meeting could last extremely long if amendments are made," said Whelan. These amendments could include a Black American Music Festival with an admission fee along with a free Spring concert.

If the Senate does get through the concert discussion, then it will hear reports from the Finance committee and approve appointments to vacant Senate committee positions.

Smith prof heads study

A Smith College associate professor has been named director of a ten year study of the U.S. Constitution that will culminate in 1988, the bicentennial of the adoption of the Constitution.

Donald A. Robinson, associate professor of government at Smith, says the study will attempt to raise "the important questions of how a document framed under such different circumstances has survived through two hundred years and whether, in fact, the Constitution is still appropriate for a nation that now faces the challenge of modernity."

The study is being co-sponsored by the American Historical Association and the American Political Science Association with initial funding from the Andrew T. Mellon Foundation of New York. Additional funding is being sought.

Richard B. Morris, Governor Morris Professor of History Emeritus at Columbia University, and James MacGregor Burns, Woodrow Wilson professor of Government at Williams College, will serve as co-chairman of a joint committee of scholars which will guide the project.

"The two associations are dedicated to providing the necessary kind of intellectual leadership that was absent in this country's celebration of the bicentennial of the revolution," said Robinson.

King favors financial aid

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER — Republican gubernatorial candidate Edward F. King yesterday said he favors more financial assistance for students attending private colleges and a state college tuition rate reflecting the cost of education.

King said the state has gone through an "edifice complex" in public higher education, concentrating on construction of buildings and not improvement in education.

"We're not getting the product (of education) we deserve," he said after he and Democrat Edward J. King addressed local businessmen during a breakfast at the Sheraton Lincoln Inn.

Edward F. King

The Democrat King, also a gubernatorial candidate in this fall's election, said he has not yet formed a position on higher education.

Both Kings attacked fiscal policies of incumbant Democratic Gov. Michael S. Dukakis during their ten minute speeches at the $4 breakfast sponsored by the Smaller Business Association of New England, a regional organization of small businesses.

Both Kings told the Collegian an investigation of the state Bureau of Building Construction should be conducted independent of the state legislature, as suggested last week by Lt. Gov. Thomas P. O'Neill III.

Some state legislators want a legislative committee appointed to investigate the operations of the building bureau, which oversees construction of all state buildings, including the Tillson oil plant at UMass-Amherst and buildings at the campus of UMass-Boston.

The oil plant operated for only eight months before it was found to be efective, and construction defects have also been found on the Boston campus.

The two Kings also said having similar names is more of a plus than a minus. They said since they are not campaigning against each other, their names receive double exposure.

Edward F. King told the businessmen he and the Democrat King are going to combine their bumper sticker orders to save money.

He also told them how he used to receive late night annoyance calls from east Boston residents complaining about Logan International Airport. The Democrat King in the sixties directed MassPort, an agency overseeing the airport and seaport operations in Boston.

"He was smart enough to have an unlisted phone number, I wasn't," the Republican King said.

The Democrat King is also a former professional football player who, the other King said, stands at 6' 5". The Republican is 5'6".

The Republican also said he foresees no problem in receiving the party's endorsement at the convention in Springfield. No Republican has been elected Massachusetts governor without the May 6 endorsement, he said. He is being opposed by state House Minority Leader Frank Hatch, R-Beverly, and Middlesex County Sheriff John Buckley.

King said his opponents are too liberal for the Republican party endorsement. He also said more delegates have indicated support for him than Hatch and Buckley.

The Democrat King said there is an "obviously large portion of voters not satisfied" with Dukakis because King said the incumbant has not fulfilled the promises of his 1974 gubernatorial campaign.

He also said Dukakis is "using the office for political advancement and not program reforms."

"Everything is focused on the media," said King, who noted he heard some political followers say the recent snow storm which handicapped Eastern Massachusetts aided the re-election efforts of Dukakis.

Edward J. King

The speech of the Republican King centered around his campaign for limiting tax policies of the state.

The Republican found the Citizens for Limited Taxation, which this fall collected enough signatures to place the question of a constitutional change in the state tax structure before the legislature for two votes in the next two years.

Should the tax reform measure receive 25 per cent of the vote in the legislature, the Republican said the proposal will be placed on the 1980 ballot as a binding referendum. A binding referendum approved by the voters must be enacted as law.

He said if his tax reform proposals are not enacted in the next two years, the state is "doomed to become the Appalachia of the eighties."

If the tax reform measures pass, the Republican said Massachusetts has the "opportunity to become the comeback state of the late 20th century."

The Republican is proposing a ceiling be placed on the amount of money the legislature can tax state residents so that industries will locate here once the property tax drops.

According to the Republican King, the state has increased its budget in the last ten years more than inflation has increased the cost of living. But while the state budget has increased, aid to cities and towns has decreased, King said.

The Republican also called for "fiscal accountability" in programs mandated but not funded by the state, an action he said causes spiraling property taxes at the local level.

The Democrat King said in his speech the Dukakis administration can be criticized for "inconsistencies" and "credibility."

"If you look at the Dukakis book of promises," King said referring to Dukakis' 1974 gubernatorial campaign platform, "he has not just not performed his promises, but did just the opposite."

He questioned Dukakis' opposition to nuclear power when the state "is over-dependent" on imported oil.

The Democrat King said the state needs a "balanced energy menu" of off-shore oil exploration and increased use of coal to produce electricity.

The Democrat said there is "clearly no way for economic recovery" in the state if an anti-business climate of high taxes and expensive energy sources continues to exist.

Both Kings are visiting the Springfield-Amherst area in the next few weeks. The Democrat is in Springfield a week from today, and Ludlow and Holyoke March 11. The Republican visits Mount Holyoke College for dinner Saturday night and Smith College Monday.

Troopers dropout due to inhuman treatment

FRAMINGHAM, Mass. (UPI) — Several State Police Academy dropouts say their first — and only — week as trooper trainees reminded them more of a fraternity initiation than police training.

A week ago Monday, 119 recruits reported for training at the Massachusetts State Police Academy in Framingham.

This week, 90 are left.

One anonymous suburban police officer, one of 29 dropouts, told the Boston Globe Tuesday he quit because of "degrading and inhuman treatment. I've been a police officer. I know what the job demands. But, there's no way I was going to take the kid stuff they throw around out there."

One North Shore recruit said he was told to report in a business suit — then ordered to run a mile through mud and water and do push-ups in a puddle.

"They woke us in the night and made us drag our sheets and bedclothes through the showers, and then sleep on them," he said.

"They made us stand for five hours with our photographs in front of our face, and we weren't allowed to move — or even go to the bathroom — the whole time," he said.

"You couldn't make phone calls. One guy's wife was sick, and he tried to call her," the dropout said. "They caught him on the phone and humiliated him in front of everyone. He just walked away and went home."

Another unidentified recruit who left after three days said trainees were jammed into toilet stalls and made to stay there for one hour.

A State Police spokesman, Cpl. Paul Beloff, defended the treatment as "intense pressure and emotional tension created by the staff as a necessary function of our training program."

But, Beloff said Colonel Robert Wills, head of the academy's administrative services, is investigating charges involving the sheets, photographs and toilet stalls.

"We're looking into those allegations," Beloff said. "Some of them sound pretty absurd. There's too much important stuff going on out there for these kinds of things to happen."

He said "pressure situations created at the academy are designed to make a trainee react quickly to situations he might face in the future." A 25 percent dropout rate is normal, he added.

Beloff said pressure "weeds out the people who can't take it ... The really intense pressure is in the first week. They don't

Seabrook funding questioned

CONCORD, N.H. (UPI) — A Washington-based rate expert told the Public Utilities Commission yesterday the Public Service Co. can build the Seabrook nuclear power plant without making customers pay in advance for the $2.3 billion station.

"My testimony is not intended to obstruct or delay Seabrook, and it won't have any affect on delaying our obstructing Seabrook," Ralph Miller told the PUC while testifying in behalf of consumers fighting the PSC's $32 million rate increase proposal.

"Assuming adequate rate relief is given, the company should continue to attract the necessary capital for its construction program," Miller said.

Miller said such customer prefinancing, called construction works in progress (CWIP), would not save ratepayers in the long run but rather raise electric rates by tens of millions of dollars.

The bulk of the PSC's rate request would pay for Seabrook by having the company's customers prefinance the plant through higher

Music festival in jeopardy

By RENEE MOBLEY
and TERRELL EVANS
Black Affairs Staff

The New Africa House Steering Committee met yesterday to discuss the fate of the Black American Music Festival.

Chairperson Mark Hickson directed the floor to Kwaku Saunders who gave a brief history of the proposal presented before the Senate, by the Third World Caucus on December 1, 1976.

The motion presented stated, ".... the senate supports the concept of the rationale and objectives of the attached proposal entitled Commemorating an Indigenous: Classic Black American Music.

That the organizers of the program go ahead and make initial contacts Re: arrangements with artists, publicity agents, and stadium cost, with the agreement that all negotiations must go through RSO.... Contracts shall be signed after the senate approves the final budget."

The senate had originally agreed to support establishment of the Duke Ellington Foundation by allowing the proceeds from the concert to go toward that cause. Members of the senate now state they are reluctant to support the Duke Ellington Foundation because it has not yet been incorporated.

In the original proposal $76,000 was to be allocated overall and $36,000 of that was to go toward talent. Last week the senate cut the budget leaving only $20,000 for talent.

Kwaku Saunders said that the senate understood this and that the funds were to go toward supporting the foundation regardless.

Many questions were raised as to how the senate could renege on the original agreement, providing that the binders that were tacked on were met. The binders were certain terms tacked on to the motion and had to be fulfilled before it could be passed. They were: 1) the Festival Committee secures the stadium for the concert, 2) they obtain a security contract with UMass security, 3) They obtain a verbal agreement from the expected talent. The binders were met and the motion was passed.

The general feeling at the meeting was that the senate had reneged on the legal agreement by introducing compromises. The compromise consisted of cutting the ticket price from $6 to $3 and failing to support the foundation.

Howard U. sponsors communications conference

Note: The 7th Annual Communications Conference was sponsored by Howard University. Black Affairs reporter Terrell Evans attended, this is his report.

The Seventh Annual Communications Conference was held at the Mayflower Hotel in Washington D.C., February 16 thru 19, sponsored by Howard University's School of Communications.

A huge success with over 500 people attending, the conference was organized into a series of workshops focusing on specific areas of communications set up so that a panel of speakers would address the audience in a question and answer format.

The panelists consisted of professors from colleges, universities and the professional field here and worldwide.

Among those in attendence were Parren J. Mitchel, (Rep. Md.) and Chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus, Ousmane Sembene, Senegalese filemaker, Milton Jordan of Charlotte, N.C. Observer, Sara Ann Shaw of WBZ-TV, Columbus, Ohio, Dr. Tran Van Dinh of Temple University, Prof. Justine J. Rector of Temple University's School of Communications and Theater, and Prof. Sammuel Yette School of Communications Howard University.

Workshop touched upon all of the media — radio, newspaper, cable and regular television, films, the record business and public relations.

Specific areas covered were financing, technology, distribution, production, management, advertising, field experience, and careers and jobs.

In the workshop "Racial Sterotypes in the Press," Rector spoke on how the press slants stories and uses certain words like "terrorists," "communist," and "guerrillas," to turn people against organizations that do not agree with U.S. government policies.

Rector explained that the U.S. will write about Cuban forces being in Africa illegally, but will say nothing of the full U.S. military force at Guantanamo Bay in Cuba. She spoke of how the U.S. will print stories about Idi Amin without attributing stories to anyone.

Some of the workshop titles were "Career Opportunities in Journalism: Nationwide," "Film Exhibition," (Mr. Ousmane Sembene, noted Senegalese film producer) "Press Ownership and Management," "Investigative Reporting," and "Women in Film."

There were daily "Career Interviewing," "Job Preparation," and "Speech and Hearing Clinic" workshops. Numerous business organizations were also there including ABC-TV, military.

The four day conference was well organized, students and non-students from many of the fifty states attended.

South Africa's token gestures

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa [UPI] — South Africa recently integrated the nation's tennis courts and said blacks may even join whites in a drink after the match in a ruling that eventually could end segregation in all sports.

Some blacks voiced immediate skepticism above the move but other white sportsmen welcomed it as a "green light for normal sports in South Africa."

Sports Minister Dr. Piet Koornhof told the International Tennis Union that from now on, "No permit or other legal permission is needed by any player to play on any court in South Africa."

In addition, Koornhof said "no permit or other legal permission is required to join any club."

Black Affairs Staff

On March 2, 3, and 4, "Illusions, A Ceremony" will be performed at Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m.

Carlos W. Anderson, the writer, director, and producer of the play is a self taught artist, whose paintings have been displayed in a number of cities throughout the country.

His first major art exhibit was at UMass Cultural Center when he was nineteen. In addition to painting Anderson is actively engaged in the art-forms of dramatic acting, singing, poetic scripting and interpretation, playwriting, directing and choreography. He is also an accredited lyricist, and has written three major musical productions including "The Children of My Soul", a book of his poetry.

Although having had no schooling in art or music, Anderson's training background in theatre, radio, and television acting has been extensive. At seventeen, he organized, developed, and directed an acting company out of St. Paul, Minnesota, that for two consecutive years, broke box-office records wherever they traveled. The company, B.A.G. Inc., was also instrumental in initiating the reality of bringing live theatrical entertainment into the prison institutions of Minnesota.

Other background includes training at UMass Black Repertory Theatre, Studio Theatre, Experimental Theatre, and performances as requested by Amherst College. Auditions have landed him scholarships to the Negro Ensemble Company and the Players Workshop, both in New York City, and while living there he developed and performed the principle role of 'Dr. Max Lewis', on the nation's first Black casted and produced radio soap-opera, "Sounds of the City", which ran for two years.

Basketball and "Flashlight"

UMass, learn from Howard

By TERRELL EVANS
Black Affairs Staff

While in D.C., Carl Watts and I decided to take in Howard University's basketball game, held Friday night, February 17.

When we walked into the building, not yet in the gym, we heard Parliament's "Flashlight" playing. My companion said, to me,

"Oh, they've got a DJ."

He couldn't have been more wrong. We walk in and to our surprise was a music group with bass, lead guitar, drums and everything, playing "Flashlight."

In support of their team, the students at Howard really put on a show.

The cheerleaders had some moves that UMass sad cheerleaders haven't begun to imagine. The music group in cooperation with Howard's band had the crowd really cheering and moving. UMass, we got a long way to go!

Correction

It has come to our attention that the February 15 Valentine's issue of Black Affairs, contained incorrect information about the lady featured with Leon Thomas. We did know the lady's name at the time of publication, but felt that the picture deserved to be printed.

The lady's name left out of the photo is Maonei Bwerinofa from Rhodesia, she resides in Mackimmie dorm in Southwest.

Happy Tuesday

By JIM PAULIN
Special to Black Affairs

Happy Tuesday. This morning I must stand trial over in Northampton, the town that should have signs posted around it saying "Danger — Entering Climate of Corruption."

My bet is that the Northampton Police Department isn't the only thing that's corrupt, that is, maybe it's only the tip of the iceberg; like maybe if you looked at the courthouse over there you'd find some mighty dirty things like incompetent psychiatrists have people committed to the Northampton State Hospital because the judge doesn't like the defendant's personal appearance. The judge calls for the rubber stamp apparently senile Dr. Kaplan to have anybody put out of circulation at the madhouse under 15b of the laws of the Department of Mental Health for at least 20 days.

But 12e says that anyone can petition the court to have any one sent up to the state hospital for ten days should the court at a hearing decide to do so and that's what should happen to those overpriced mechanics, doctors, who seem to enjoy committing people out of commission after talking to them very briefly in the conference room in the court house in the presence of a police officer.

And then there's John O'Donnell, so called public defender, whose first question to me when I saw him first Monday of December was how much walking around money do you have, as if it is any of his business because if the probation office awards you the public defender, the public defender should know that you don't have enough money to pay a lawyer.

Someone came up to me before I had to see O'Donnell and told me that if I wanted any decent defense I'd better pay for it. Later on, the same man told me that the first time he had O'Donnell he went to jail for a year, and the second time he threw him a hundred dollars under the table and walked — he didn't go to jail.

But anyways, I managed to get out early after having been deprived of my liberty in that extension of the penal system, the mental hospital for two weeks instead of 20 days because my parents came and got me from the court on Tuesday like they usually do in these situations.

At state hospitals they have bullet proof glass and locks on the door, and regardless of your state of mind you're still in the state hospital, and the only way to stay in touch with the outside world when you're not being visited is either through the mail or the telephone. After awhile you spend so much time on the phone you wonder if calling isn't the closest thing to being there.

Peace Corps gets new director

Carolyn Payton, Peace Corps director

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Carolyn R. Payton, 52, a psychologist and director of the University Counseling Service at Howard University in Washington, D.C., has been nominated by President Carter as director of the Peace Corps.

Ms. Payton would be the first woman director of the Peace Corps in its 16-year history. Her nomination to the position of associate director for international operations at ACTION, the federal agency for volunteer service, is subject to Senate confirmation.

The Peace Corps has been part of ACTION since 1971. As head of international operations at ACTION, Ms. Payton will direct the work of more than 6,200 Peace Corps volunteers and trainees in 62 developing countries around the world.

A former country director of the Peace Corps in the Eastern Caribbean from 1966 to 1969, Ms. Payton is no stranger to the international volunteer program. It needs to be "revitalized," she feels.

"The Peace Corps I worked for was a very significant institution for young and old people to gain meaningful experiences," said Ms. Payton, who held various positions with the Peace Corps from 1964 until 1970. "Recently, there has been an influx of middle-level technicians who have expert skills to teach. They are a different type of individual than the volunteers of the 1960s who might not have had specific skills to offer, but were willing to learn about the culture and people in a country.

"I believe very strongly that the ability to provide technical assistance should be secondary to a volunteer's motivation," she continued. "ACTION is the only federal agency designed to transmit human qualities and understanding. I would like the Peace Corps to get back to that level."

Ms. Payton also would like to see the number of Peace Corps volunteers grow, particularly with the addition of more minority and older persons. "I would like to see more blacks and other minorities recruited, as the Peace Corps experience is equally valuable to people from all backgrounds," she said.

A 1945 home economics graduate of Bennett College in Greensboro, N.C., Ms. Payton received a master's degree in psychology from the University of Wisconsin in Madison in 1948 and a doctorate in education from Columbia University in New York City in 1962.

Benefit dance to be held

There will be a benefit disco on Saturday, March 4, from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. on the 10th floor of the Campus Center at UMass, Amherst. Proceeds from the disco will go towards defraying expenses for EXPO-CUBA '78, a national poster contest-exhibit.

There will be Latin, Salsa, and disco music at the event. There will also be a poster display. Donation is $1.50 at the door and there will be a cash bar.

EXPO-CUBA '78 is being held nationally as a cultural exchange between Cuba and the United States. Cuba's silkscreen designers have attained international prominence in the field of poster art by their use of vibrant colors and bold designs.

The national contest-exhibit is being coordinated by Western Massachusetts artists.

Music will be provided by William "Shady" Grady, winner of last year's "Battle of the DJ's," held at Amherst College.

Northeast Conference on the liberation struggles in S.A.

By JAMES LEWIS JR.
Assistant Editor Black Affairs

There will be a Conference on the Liberation Struggles of Southern Africa at Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut, April 1st, 1978. The conference is sponsored and planned by Northeast Committee for the Liberation of Southern Africa, which is made up of representatives from Amherst College, University of Massachusetts at Amherst and Boston, Brandies, Hampshire College, University of Connecticut, Wesleyan, Yale American Committee on Africa, American Friends Service Committee, Commuter Collective, CP Pax, National Students Against Racism, and University Christian Movement.

This conference has been in the planning since the December 10th demonstration at the Amherst College Trustee's meeting. At that meeting about 380 to 420 people from the New England area stood outside in the cold for over three hours to protest the Amherst college twenty million dollar investment in South African apartheid.

The U.S. has invested 1.6 billion dollars in South African apartheid, which is a system where equal employment is illegal for Black people, Black people are paid starvation wages, and as a result there is a 53 per cent child mortality rate. Black people have to carry passes in order to walk in the city. Every day there are hundreds of planes flying overhead carrying Napalm bombs, ready to literally destroy the Black people. South Africa is the most inhumane society on the planet, with the possible exception of Uganda, and every attempt to change apartheid for the better has only resulted in increased bloodshed of Blacks, by the White minority.

The white minority numbers about 4 million compared to the Black population of over 18 million. It wasn't always a racist country. The Boar War, when the Whites defeated the Blacks, the British shipped in tanks, bombs, ships, and all kinds and types of sophisticated equipment and soldiers numbering in the thousands or millions. The Zulus put up a good fight, as best as they could, but the Dutch were backed by then number one super power of the world, Great Britain, and all the weaponry that came with them. And don't think they did not fight a serious war with the Zulus.

Now, still after forcing Black people into economic and political slavery, they are still backed by western investments, 7 billion from England, 1.6 billion from the U.S.

The aims of the conference are educational. There will be workshops on organizing around university divestment, anti-Krugerrand campaigns, Coordination for Regional Demonstration set tentatively for April 30th, the formation of a regional Communications Network for Coordination and Outreach for Anti-Apartheid (a South African Support group communications syndicate), and there will be many educational workshops on the structure and situation of South Africa itself.

Student groups at UMass (We are the first school), Hampshire College, Ohio Univ., the Univ. of Oregon, and the Univ. of Wisconsin have been successful in getting their administrations to divest stock in U.S. corporations operating in South Africa. Over 400 students have been arrested protesting university investing in Southern Africa at schools in California.

Let us hope this Conference receives a worthy turnout, so we can work to get the U.S. out of South Africa.

Admiral finds no evidence of high cancer rate

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Adm. Hyman Rickover, the Navy's top nuclear expert, said yesterday the Navy has no evidence civilians who worked on nuclear submarines at Portsmouth Naval Shipyard died of cancer at more than double the national rate.

"I'm not saying there's no problem — I don't know," Rickover said, but "we don't see a problem" on the basis of evidence the Navy has.

Rickover, testifying at a House hearing, also said the Boston Globe should give the Navy all the details of a study indicating the high death rate, even though naval officials refused to cooperate with the study on grounds it would invade the privacy of dead workers.

The 77-year-old admiral said the Globe was only "out for a scoop" in publishing the findings by Dr. Thomas Najarian, a blood specialist at the Veterans Administration hospital in Boston.

Najarian told the committee earlier in the day he had to enlist the help of Globe reporters in getting the names of deceased workers who had or had not worked on nuclear reactors.

Rickover's criticism of the newspaper came when Rep. Tim Carter, R-Ky., asked when the Navy "first became aware" of the high cancer rate among Portsmouth workers.

"I don't believe we've ever become aware of that," Rickover replied, saying it was "quite reprehensible" of the Globe to withhold details of a study affecting the lives and health of thousands.

Asked by Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass., why the Navy refused to provide information on deceased workers, Rickover said it was done on the advice of counsel under provisions of the Freedom of Information Act.

Rickover said he always has been "conservative" in setting standards for protecting Navy military and civilian personnel from radiation, and that the maximum permitted exposure was lower than the national standard.

"I think what we are doing today is perfectly safe," he said. "But I can't substantiate that."

Rickover said no one in the Navy has been injured in a reactor accident, but acknowledged he was "not an expert" in determining possible effects of long-term exposure to low-level radiation.

"An analysis on a nationwide scale is long overdue," he said. "It will be an enormous undertaking, far outstripping the isolated case at Portsmouth, or even encompassing all the shipyards."

Najarian testified that, rebuffed by the Navy, he turned to the Globe for help in tracking down the workers, checking death certificates and interviewing workers and their families.

He said when the Globe asked the Navy to check the resulting list, "The Navy refused, stating that they would not want to invade the privacy of the deceased former workers."

No settlement for Maine Indians

AUGUSTA, Maine [UPI] — Great Northern Paper Co., Maine's largest landowner, will not negotiate with Indians to settle land claims, its president said yesterday, after hinting further expansions in the state may be curtailed.

Great Northern President Robert Hellendale labeled as "unfair and possibly unconstitutional" a White House plan for federal settlement of claims against small landowners which leaves the state Great Northern and 13 other large landowners open to suit if they do not settle with the tribes.

He told a news conference "our counsel is in sympathy with the position of Maine Attorney General Joseph E. Brennan that we have a strong case and, if we have to, we won't mind litigating it."

The Penobscot and Passamaquoddy tribes claim 12.5 million acres, roughly two-thirds of the state, were taken from them in violation of the Non-Intercourse Acts of the 1790s while Maine was still part of Massachusetts.

Hellendale said his company — which pumped $150 million into Maine's economy last year — is trying to "pressure" the state's congressional delegation to convince the Carter administration to revamp its position and endorse a federal settlement of the claims against the large landowners.

In a letter to Greater Northern's 4,200 employees, Hellendale called the White House position a "raw deal" and urged workers to write their lawmakers to push for a full federal settlement.

The presidential task force said the federal government would take no responsibility for the large landowners, who must reach their own settlement with the Indians or face suit by the U.S. government on behalf of the tribes.

"It is not our plan to try to negotiate with the tribes," Hellendale said. "Our feeling is that it is a federal responsibility to resolve the dispute."

He said reports that Great Northern was expanding in Arkansas instead of Maine were inaccurate because the Southern construction had been planned anyway, but he readily admitted "it is always possible if our land base shrank there will be fewer expansions in the state.

"If the property base shrinks the wood supply shrinks, the number of jobs shrinks, capital infusions into the state shrink and take home pay in the state shrinks," he said.

The presidential task force presented, but did not endorse, the Indian demands on the large landowners.

The demands called for the landowners to sell the Indians 300,000 acres at $5 an acre and to offer options on another 200,000 acres at fair market value. Hellendale said Great Northern's share of the land to be sold or offered options on could total 165,000 acres.

Senate rejects treaty block

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate yesterday firmly rejected another attempt to block ratification of the Panama Canal treaties by weighing them down with complicating amendments.

By a vote of 69 to 24, the Senate defeated a proposal to combine the two companion pacts — one safeguarding U.S. defense rights and the main canal treaty itself — so that neither could take effect without the other.

Yesterday's outcome provided treaty backers a wider victory margin than they achieved Monday in defeating, by 55 to 34, another "killer" amendment.

But in the scramble to decipher the meaning of yesterday's vote, Sen. Robert Griffin, R-Mich., cautioned that his vote against this amendment should not be interpreted to mean he now supports ratification of the treaties.

In the debate preceding the ballot, Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, denounced the amendment proposed by Sen. William Scott, R-Va. as another move to kill the treaties' chances for ratification.

"He's against the treaties," said Church during the debate preceding the vote. "He wants to kill these treaties. He wants to do that through the adoption of 'innocuous' amendments.

"Once we begin to enact amendments changing the text of the treaties in such a manner, we put the treaties in jeopardy. We may force another plebiscite in Panama."

Scott acknowledged he opposes the treaties, but insisted his sole purpose was to clarify the relationship between the two companion documents.

Judge won't give up in sex suit

[HER SAY NEWS SERVICE] — A judge who fired a clerical worker for being single and pregnant is now trying to block payments for the settlement she won from the county after she had filed a sex discrimination suit.

Kristy Gwin of Maustin, Wisconsin, was dismissed from her job as the county's Register in Probate by Judge William Curran, after the Juneau County jurist learned she was pregnant.

Curran said Gwin's pregnancy proved she had violated a Wisconsin law prohibiting sexual intercourse by an unmarried person.

After filing a sex discrimination complaint with the state, Gwin was awarded an out of court settlement from the county of $2000.

Judge Curran, however, has asked the county board's personnel committee to withhold the payment, saying the county should not pay the settlement because that could make it liable to taxpayer suits.

Curran said he had to fire the woman because Wisconsin law prohibits unmarried persons from engaging in sexual intercourse. The judge stated that Gwin's pregnancy was "obvious evidence to the public that she had violated the laws of the state of Wisconsin by sexual misconduct, and that her obvious unlawful behavior would influence offenders who came before his court.

Judge Curran claimed he would punish any man if he could prove the man had also violated the statutes, although the judge conceded that with a man, such proof might not be so obvious.

Snow budget approved

BOSTON (UPI) — Nine million dollars to reimburse cities and towns for ice and snow removal required by February's record-breaking snowstorm was added to a $22.5 million supplemental budget yesterday by the Massachusetts Senate.

The Senate initially approved the budget after adopting an amendment offered by Sen. Edward L. Burke, D-Framingham, adding the snow removal funds. The lawbody rejected an amendment by Sen. David H. Locke, R-Wellesley, which would have allowed income tax deductions for educational expenses.

The budget also included an amendment inserted by Ways and Means Committee Chairman James A. Kelly Jr., DOxford, to allow tax deductions for damages caused by the snow storm between Feb. 6 and Feb. 12. Another $334,800 appropriation was added by Kelly for Salem State College.

The additions, if approved by the House and Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, would boost the budget to more than the $30 million.

Senate President Kevin B. Harrington, D-Salem, ruled Locke's amendment was out of order after Kelly claimed it was beyond the scope of the bill. The ruling sparked a heated debate between Kelly and Locke, the assistant minority leader.

"I suppose, technically, he (Kelly) is right," said Locke. "But, let the word go out...that our friend from Oxford said 'no.'"

Locke said his amendment, which Kelly claimed would cost the state $33 million, was intended to help middle class citizens. Kelly said he opposed it, because it would give tax breaks to the wealthy, who don't need it. Kelly said he preferred increasing scholarships to the needy.

Guzzi may prosecute

BOSTON [AP] — The names of seven Massachusetts lobbyists, including one of the state's top labor officials, and seven firms have been turned over for possible criminal prosecution by the attorney general's office.

State Secretary Paul Guzzi said the 14 failed to meet required filing deadlines for disclosure statements.

Lobbyists who did not file disclosure statements by Jan. 15 or within the 14-day grace period may be subject to fines of $100 to $5,000.

Matlack's Pierpont plan an outrage

from our perspective

Seldom have the UMass administration's incompetence and utter disregard for the rights of students been so plainly demonstrated as they were in the recently exposed plan to deny sophomore and junior residents of Pierpont House the right to return to their dorm next semester.

The plan was arrived at by Southwest Master-Director Jim Matlack, who seems to be a strong believer in cosmetic solutions to serious and deep-seated problems. For example, one of the rationale cited by Matlack for his plan was that Pierpont has become a major center for area drug trafficking. This is typically warped Whitmorish logic. Instead of concerning themselves with the real problem of the drug traffic and trying to come up with solutions to this problem, Matlack and the C.D.C. come up with a plan that will make the drug problem seem to disappear by spreading drug traffickers around to other dorms. The bogus rationale Matlack has come up with which to mask this flawed logic are simply laughable.

The process by which Matlack came up with the plan apparently involved a minimum of student input, and little or no consultation of those to be affected by the plan, the dorm's residents. In a memo submitted to Pierpont residents at the Monday night meeting with them, Matlack suggested that he "could not include direct participation by house residents without catapulting the matter into the arena of public dispute and protest." Perhaps, then, it is unfortunate that news of the plan somehow leaked out before the university had the opportunity to implement it over the summer. While Matlack claims he was planning to reveal the proposal this week, there is little reason to believe this when one considers Matlack's attitude toward input and discussion.

The protests of angry Pierponters have forced Matlack to reconsider, and to meet with the residents again in order to come up with an alternative proposal. Perhaps it is just this reputation for breeding student activism (it was Pierpont which put up a stink when new students were forced into the Campus Center last fall) which has caused administrators to desire the break-up of the dorm.

The entire situation would be ludicrous were it not the case that Matlack is very serious about "cleaning up" a dorm that has been causing the administration some headaches over the years. Matlack's latest memo states his goal as "needed improvement in the House." Perhaps it is time for administrators to consider the needed improvement of the House, and what they can do with their own "houses" as well.

Concert controversies continue

To the Editor:

In accordance with recent articles in the Collegian, [the Black American Music Festival, Feb. 23 & Feb. 24] it has been brought to my attention by a number of my constituents that any fee — be it a nominal $3.00 or a phenomenal $6.00 — is too much to pay for what has traditionally been a free student activity.

Recently, the Student Senate has had the distinct pleasure of appropriating roughly $10,000 for enterprises which seemingly have benefitted only a few self-interested UMass students. Though this is only 1 per cent of the total Senate budget it indicates that the Senate is not fully interested in the students here at UMass.

I feel the actions of the Senate on Wednesday February 22, were an affront to the Students of this campus. We pay $64 every year to the Student Activities Trust Fund in expectation that the Senate will give it back to us in benefits. Surely the Senate would be capable of handling a Spring Concert were they only to manage their funds properly.

We always have enough money to send people to Kent State. Though it might have some moral value for a small number of students, serves no useful purpose for the majority.

So, if you do not want to pay for a concert that should be free anyway, let your Senator know how you feel. The constituents of those who sit on the Senate should speak to their electors, especially at this time of the year.

To the Editor:

A spring concert organized around the them of a Black American Music Festival comes as an exciting and progressive idea to most open-minded UMass students. Those few students whose letters have appeared on these pages, claiming that only the tastes of a minority will be served, owe themselves a lesson in American musical history, and broader exposure to Black American music.

As one of the few art forms originating in America, Black American music is an area which no educated person should fail to experience. Many white students may be surprised to find Afro-American music at the root of their favorite modern styles: blues, jazz and rock and roll. The diversity of current popular music owes itself to the diversity of Black American music. The festival, as envisioned by organizers in the Office of Third World Affairs quoted in the Collegian, promises to hold something for everyone. The proposed festival will allow UMass students the opportunity to explore the wealth of contributions Black musicians have made and continue to make to the music of this country.

Hasty opposition to the idea of a Black American Music Festival stems from the same ignorance which so often blurs our judgement in matters of racial awareness and understanding. Hopefully, the Student Senate will act in the interest of all UMass students by approving this unique musical and cultural experience.

Ken Silver

To the Editor:

First of all, congrats to the Collegian for supporting the Spring Concert Veto, mainly on the grounds that the three dollar admission charge proposal could not be justified. Yet, simultaneously it's regrettable that the Collegian would also stand by the proposed concert format.

It's very difficult for anyone, especially a newspaper, at UMass to put down the idea of a Black American Music Festival as the spring concert without charges of racism immediately being thrown about. But race is not the issue here. Music however is, and the spring concert has annually been not only "the" concert of the year at UMass, but also a concert that has provided something for everyone in regard to music. Until now, the idea behind this has been that any concert that spends so many thousands of dollars that come from every individuals student activity fee should make a valid attempt to give each student something they could relate to.

Now however, thirty senators have attempted to decide for the entire student body that the spring concert should stick to one central theme and abandon the "something for everyone" route. Despite the Monday Collegian's support of the B.A.M.F. and despite many senator's insistance that "the concert's for everyone and everyone can attend", the truth, whether a sad one or not, is that this type of format will not appeal to nearly as many students as the programs in the past have. It's a sorry state of affairs when individual senators place their own personal preferences above those of their constituents and forget just whose money they're spending.

The senate, by many of its members own admission, has fumbled up the idea of a B.A.M.F. from the beginning, and as time went on only fell more into the trap. Stevie Wonder? It is well known in musical circles that when Stevie Wonder does play to an audience [rarely] he plays for charity. Presto, UMass had the Duke Ellington Foundation. I am not implying that the Duke Ellington Foundation could not be a worthwhile cause. However I might be implying, just maybe, that it wouldn't have been a thought if not for attempts to get Wonder here. As is, the foundation still doesn't actually even exist. One more thought on Wonder at UMass. It might be Monday morning quarterbacking, but the possibility of Stevie at Alumni stadium, although a nice thought, with any investigation, could have been seen as about as likely as The Beatles reuniting for a one nighter at the Bluewall.

In closing might I state that the idea of a B.A.M.F. is great, but not at the expense of the spring concert. And on behalf of a great deal of UMass students I would like to thank the thirteen student senators who voiced this belief. There will be a student senate meeting Wednesday night at 7:30 to make a final decision on the spring concert. Please contact your senator to give him your views, one way or another, in regard to this issue. Let the senate represent you.

Wanted: Children's toys

To the Editor:

I'm writing in behalf of the children's workshop for Women's Week. Fellow Umies, we need your help!

For those who don't know, children's workshops are activities planned for kids, throughout Women's Week.

Daily activities include stories, arts, crafts and films. Non-sexist workshops ranging from sign language to juggling are scheduled throughout the week. Healthy snacks such as peanut butter, nuts, fruit and orange juice will be provided.

These programs are being offered 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., Monday, March 6 through Friday, March 10 in room 168, Campus Center, completely free of charge. Children of all ages are welcome. Parents can be assured that competent staff will be on hand at all times.

Now, here's where our fellow Umies can help. We [the competent staff] are working long hours planning, organizing and collecting resources. We need Stuff! Things. Junk. Really, anything you have to offer we can use. Kids can play with nearly anything.

The following are just some suggestions but anything you can donate is greatly appreciated. Toys, books, comics, magazines, furniture, games, plastic milk containers, egg cartons, old clothes, boxes, etc., etc., etc.

Just drop the things off at the commuter's collective office located upstairs in the Student Union, or room 168 Campus Center, during the week.

By the way, anyone who likes kids and would like to volunteer to help out just drop by 168 anytime and have fun! Enjoy Women's Week and thanks.

College immaturity unacceptable

To the Editor:

I was a passenger on one of the five-college buses returning from Mt. Holyoke College to Amherst and UMass at 1:55 a.m. on the morning of February 26. A friend and I were the only Amherst students on the bus; the rest were from the University. There was a group of students in the back of the bus who were very drunk and very rowdy. Of this I do not disapprove; however, when several inebriated people proceed to taunt and harass another individual, I feel some sort of action is in order.

The students pounded on the insides of the bus for the entire trip back to Amherst. My friend and I were subjected to deafening yells and screams for the duration of the ride, such as "Fuck Amherst," "Amherst sucks," and the like, even after I politely requested a little less noise. I was also pushed and shoved.

I find this conduct appalling and very immature in a college or university student, as I am sure you do also. It is not that I resented the anti-Amherst remarks, but rather the inconsiderate behavior exhibited by these individuals. I felt helpless in such a situation, as did the bus driver. I simply thought it impossible that students who would behave in such a manner could attend an institute of higher learning.

It is my hope that some of these loud-mouthed individuals may read this letter and seriously consider their public behavior Saturday night, if they remember it at all. Such conduct is unacceptable by any standards; was it too much to ask for the right to ride without being harassed and having my aural senses dulled? I urge these individuals to consider their immaturity and selfish, inconsiderate actions in this matter, and to examine themselves as citizens in our society. It seems to me that along with the process of higher education there comes the responsibility as an adult to act decently and in a civil manner by not infringing on the rights of others.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

Letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages. They should be sent to the Executive Editor, co-o the Collegian, or dropped off at the Collegian office.

All letters are subject to editing for either content or space according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed. Letters for a specific publication date must be submitted by 4:00 p.m. on the day preceding that date.

Tongsun Park clears the air

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Behind guarded doors, millionaire rice merchant Tongsun Park yesterday began the climactic congressional testimony he said would "clear the air" about South Korea's alleged Capitol Hill influence buying operations.

"He's going along pretty good," one congressman said during a break in the first of a series of secret House ethics committee hearings designed to determine which, if any, members of Congress may have taken Korean bribes.

But the lawmaker, who declined to be identified for print, said Park had thus far produced "no surprises" for the long-running ethics investigation.

Park's appearance culminated months of diplomatic and legal bargaining that finally persuaded him to return from Seoul as a congressional hearing and corruption trial witness in return for immunity from prosecution on his own indictment for bribery, racketeering and mail fraud.

Congressional investigators — including ethics panel counsel Leon Jaworski, chief of Park's interrogation — say they have evidence the Korean government itself was behind the alleged 1970s bribery effort.

They also claim Park, 42, once a Washington based businessman and high society party-thrower, was one of the paymasters.

Both the Seoul government and Park himself deny those charges.

Stopping briefly at the entrance to the small, heavily guarded House hearing room Tuesday morning, Park said, "I'm going to get in there and let them ask any questions they want to."

"And I'll do my best to clear the air, so that the Congress of this country gets back to its normal life."

Terming the allegations "very unfortunate," he said, "I am grateful for the opportunity.... whereby I can tell my side of the story."

His attorney, William Hundley, nudged him away before he could answer reporters' questions.

Although Park stands to clear the federal charges against him by testifying before Congress and at the trials of alleged accomplices, Jaworski told UPI, "He will be subject to perjury charges if he doesn't testify truthfully."

Epileptic help on way

WASHINGTON [AP] — The government yesterday approved an anti-convulsive drug that experts predict will help more than a half-million victims of epilepsy, some of whom are incapacitated by hundreds of seizures a day.

The drug, valproic acid, is chemically similar to sodium valproate, a drug that has been available in Europe for a decade and that has been the subject of a campaign in recent months by the Epilepsy Foundation of America to win U.S. approval for its use.

Valproic acid will be marketed in this country by Abbott Laboratories of Chicago under the brand name Depakene.

Dr. Julius Richmond, assistant secretary for health in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, called the Food and Drug Administration's unusually quick approval of Abbott's new drug application "an excellent example of the FDA's scientific regulatory process working efficiently and objectively in the face of storng emotions and partisan pressures."

But the Epilepsy Foudation, while saying it was "relieved and gratified" by the decision, said the time lag between the drug's availability here and elsewhere in the world dramatized the need for special government treatment of drugs with little commercial value.

The FDA said it found valproic acid to be effective treatment for petit mal epilepsy, a form of brain disorder that causes momentary loss of consciousness. The agency said the drug also may be effective when used with other drugs to control other types of epileptic seizures.

The Epilepsy Foundation predicts at least 560,000 epilepsy patients who suffer more than one seizure a year and who are not controlled by other drugs can benefit from valproic acid.

COLLEGE STUDENTS

You may be eligible for a two-year Air Force ROTC scholarship. The scholarship includes full tuition, lab expenses, incidental fees, a reimbursement for textbooks, and $100 a month tax free. How do you qualify? You must have at least two years of graduate or undergraduate work remaining, and be willing to serve your nation at least four years as an Air Force officer. Scholarships are available to students who can qualify for pilot, navigator, or missile training, and to those who are majoring in selected technical and nontechnical academic disciplines, in certain scientific areas, in undergraduate nursing, or selected premedical degree areas. Non-scholarship students enrolled in the Air Force ROTC two-year program also receive the $100 monthly tax-free allowance just like the scholarship students. # Report says Soviets pushed treaty to limit

WASHINGTON [UPI] — An administration report on the first U.S.-Soviet strategic arms treaty said yesterday the Russians pushed the agreement to the limit but never broke it.

The State Department report also said the United States challenged Soviet compliance with SALT I eight times in the original five year period and, each time, the Russians either stopped the questionable activity or proved the charge was baseless.

It said the Soviets in turn questioned five American actions, and that none was found to be a violation of the treaty.

The 18-page report on SALT I marked an apparent attempt to build confidence in the U.S. ability to monitor the much more complicated SALT II agreement now being negotiated.

SALT II faces stiff scrutiny from senators who claim the Russian's built up their nuclear warfare capabilities under camouflage of SALT I.

The 1972 SALT I accord technically expired last year, but both sides said they would continue to honor the limits it places on numbers of strategic missiles and anti-missile systems until the successor pact is concluded.

One U.S. official involved in monitoring compliance said the experience of the first five years shows that "the Soviets certainly operate at the limits of the agreement."

But, he said, "we have never charged the Soviets with a violation, although we have seen things that we didn't understand."

The report said questions raised by the United States included citation of several apparent Soviet attempts either to camouflage their missile-launching silos from the view of U.S. reconnaissance satellites, or to disguise the radio signals emitted in the testing of new missile systems.

"The U.S. stated this concern and discussed it with the Soviet side," the report said. "In early 1975, careful analysis of intelligence information on activities in the U.S.S.R. led the United States to conclude that there no longer appeared to be an expanding pattern of concealment activities..."

"We continue to monitor Soviet activity in this area closely."

Another case cited occurred in 1976 when the Soviets were building new ballistic missile submarines and failed to dismantle the required number of land-based missiles in return.

The report said the Russians "agreed to the U.S. demand that no more submarines with replacement launchers begin sea trials," the required number of land missiles had been dismantled.

Soviets to double gas, other luxury item costs

LENINGRAD, U.S.S.R. [UPI] — The Soviet Union will double the price of gasoline and sharply increase the cost of other luxury goods, including coffee, beginning today informed Soviet sources reported yesterday.

In Moscow, the Foreign Ministry press department announced only that N.T. Glushkov, chairman of the State Committee on Prices, would hold a news conference at 10 a.m. today.

A check of several Leningrad service stations confirmed that a 100 percent increase in the pump price of gas would be put into effect today.

Moscow gasoline stations were crowded with customers filling their cars and spare cans with the last cheap gasoline, they expect to see. By nightfall, the same thing was happening in Leningrad.

The increase would boost the price of low-test 93 octane gasoline from 62 cents per gallon to $1.20 per gallon, the sources said. High test 95 octane gas would jump from 65 cents per gallon to $1.30 per gallon.

In Moscow there were reports that the government would also increase prices of such luxury items as coffee, chocolate, brandy, wine, furs, gold, diamonds, and auto spare parts.

"We received orders to double the price," one Leningrad gasoline station attendant said. "That is all I know."

Western sources said the Soviets have admitted there is a gasoline shortage and hope by sharply raising the prices to reduce private driving.

During the past year Leningrad has experienced several gasoline shortages, including three periods of up to a week when gasoline was sold only to foreign tourists and foreign residents.

The sources also noted that the price of gasoline has been held at the same level for a number of years and, by European standards, was quite cheap.

Wednesday's expected official announcement of the increases was the first since last spring when the Soviet government nearly doubled the price of domestic airline, ship and taxi travel.

The sharp increase in gasoline prices was believed to be the first real effort at energy belt-tightening for years that it has more than enough petroleum production to take care of domestic and East European requirements.

★ Festival of Music nears

students and others the chance to work with professionals in the fields of music and dance. Auditions will be held in Boston and New York as well as Amherst, he said.

Jenkins said he hopes to draw ticket sales from "outside a 50 mile radius" of Amherst, and has devised an "extensive marketing plan" with a $15,000 budget to advertise the festival as far away as New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

The Bernstein Music festival is being coordinated with the other special programs operating on campus this summer, Jenkins said, including the Toward Tomorrow Fair which drew in 25,000 to the campus last June, and annual conventions which this year include societies of bellringers, Massachusetts Music Educators, and the East Coast Drum and Bugle Corps, numbering 20,000.

Both Amherst Town Manager A. Louis Hayward and First Selectman Diana Romer say the town is optimistic about the Bernstein festival and Romer says both town government and local businessmen are "hopeful that the festival won't compete with the Berkshires" for tourist traffic.

Sales for subscription tickets to the festival will begin about the first of May and student discounts will be available.

News in Brief

Uxbridge boy may have fallen

UXBRIDGE, Mass. [AP] — A 10-year-old boy whose body was found buried under a snowbank after he had been missing 20 days probably died of a concussion which may have resulted from a fall, medical examiners said yesterday.

Dr. Thomas DePalo, an area medical examiner, and state pathologist Dr. George Katsas said further laboratory examinations were needed to determine the exact cause and time of death.

The body of Peter Gosselin was discovered Monday under the snow near the garage of his home, about five feet from his front door, by a mail carrier. Meanwhile, hundreds of police, firemen and volunteers had hunted frantically elsewhere for him, Police Chief John Emerick said.

The medical examiners tentatively ruled the death accidental following an autopsy Tuesday afternoon. They said the boy died of a possible concussion while playing which led to asphyxia and exposure.

The concussion resulted from a fall against an object or from his head striking the ground, the doctors said.

The boy's body was discovered by mail carrier Leo J. Lussier who spotted the tip of a mitten under the melting snow while making his morning delivery to the Gosselin house. He immediately called the police, Emerick said.

JFK's house opens as shrine

NEWPORT, R.I. (UPI) — Hammersmith Farm, used as a summer White House during John F. Kennedy's presidency, will open to the public May 1.

The family of Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis used the estate as its summer home through four generations. It sold the main house and 50 acres of land to a group of nine businessmen last October.

The estate will be maintained as a "museum honoring the social history of Newport with special emphasis on the Kennedys," Edward F. Sughrue, who heads the group, said yesterday.

The new owners are planning one-hour tours of the mansion and its grounds, for a fee.

Janet Butler Crook, director of the museum project, said s. Onassis' mother, Janet Auchincloss, and other family members will probably continue to visit a colonial farmhouse and a windmill guesthouse on a portion of the property they retain.

The current plan calls for a narrated slide show of photographs supplied by the Kennedy samily and library. Guides will then lead tourists through the house, pointing out the rooms used by the president and his wife. Visitors will also be allowed to stroll through the terrace garden.

Tickets will cost $2.50 for adults and $1.25 for children 6 to 15.

While the tours will concentrate on the Kennedy connection, Hammersmith Farm's history goes back to 1640, when King Charles I gave the property to early Newport leader William Brenton.

In the late 19th century, John Winthrop Auchincloss purchased 97 acres from a family named Battey, then the owners of record. The family used the property as a working farm and vacation spot for nearly a century.

Jacqueline Bouvier made her debut at Hammersmith in August 1947. In 1953, the wedding reception following her marriage to then-Sen. John F. Kennedy was held at the estate.

Worker's death has cops baffled

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (UPI) The murder of a young medical worker near a busy street in this university city has left police puzzled — and without a murder weapon or witnesses to help.

"I wish I had something more concrete to tell you. But at this point I don't," Lt. Edwin Peterson told UPI yesterday.

The funeral will be 10 a.m. today in Lexington for Julie T. Campbell, 23, a medical records file clerk at Boston's Lahey Clinic.

Police still don't have a motive in the Monday morning murder. The woman was not sexually assaulted or robbed. A medical examiner said she was stabbed several times in the neck, back and chest with an instrument resembling a large hunting knife.

Friends said she left the Plough and Stars bar — a homey, often-crowded folk and jazz lounge on busy Massachusetts Avenue — as it closed about 1 that morning. She began the short walk to her apartment at 57 Ellery St.

About 1:12, police received a telephone call reporting a woman screaming in front of 25 Ellery St.

Smith found innocent

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. (UPI) — Robert Smith, 28, of Keene, N.H., was found innocent yesterday by a Hamden County jury of a Greenfield double murder involving a gas station owner and his part-time accountant.

The jury, which deliberated for five hours, found the defendant innocent on two counts of murder and one count of armed robbery.

Robert Wilson, 28, also of Keene, has been convicted for his role in the double murder. And, both Smith and Wilson were found guilty earlier of a New Years Eve 1975 triple murder of Dr. Hugh Mahoney, his wife, Ruth, and their son, John, of Tewksbury, Mass.

Smith was on trial for the murders of garage owner Joseph Sceposki, 65, and Edward Flavin, 34, of Turners Falls.

Two defense witnesses at the trial testified Monday the state's chief witness admitted he killed the two men.

Two prisoners Monday testified Michael Renz, also of Keene, admitted to them he killed the two men. Renz turned state's evidence in exchange for a reduced charge of second degree murder.

Superfluous B.S.

Frank Denton

When media is the new name in power, the rhetoric department has more business than it can accommodate, and Bic pens are at a premium, one would expect the general caliber of literate discourse to be escalating. That is what one would expect, anyway.

If the Student Senate is any indication, the most convincing speaker is the one most fluent with profanity. A thousand puissant invectives punctuate their civic fervor. In the heat of their inaction, a good ninety per cent of the "intelligent debate" would curdle crude oil.

Historically, a string of explicit explitives was considered unprintable, but a recent review of Collegian commentaries has convinced me otherwise. Railing against the prevailing social strata in colorfully pungent and repugnant detail is not conducive to change at all. Indeed, it resembles nothing so much as an impotent tantrum.

Adjectives such as "revolting," "putrid," "inefficacious," "cheap," "indiscriminate," and "ailing" are much more edifying politically than biolgical innuendoes. The author who assaults one's preconceptions with his-her learned politics while insulting one's intelligence with his-her gutter vocabulary reflects a dubious sense of proportions — probably as dubious as his-her politics.

It is a general concensus that we receive more than enough worthless monologue in class. How much more superfluous, then, is the B.S. (bottled speciousness) that the Student Senate, the Revolutionary Student Brigade, and Collegian contributors spoon out!

The primary focus of these civic participators is the issues. But no one agrees on the definition of the issues. So a multitude of factions is created, each of whom further clouds the definitions with pedantic rhetoric and frantic politicking.

All, however, agree on the definitions of heresy. Heresy is condoning political prisoners, condemning the radical element, and perpetrating the myth of capitalism. All of this is the gospel according to nineteenth century philosophy. As soon as the nineteenth century replaces the twentieth century, people everywhere will see what startling new ideas these factions represent.

While the ideas of great thinkers are marvelous foundations to work from, they were certainly not intended as the ultimate repositories of wisdom. I find it astonishing that Lenin and Marx have not yet bred a generation which has thought beyond the problems their systems engendered. We have merely interpreted; we have not created further innovations. Because we are totally comfortable with their solutions, our minds lie fallow, their dynamic studies of society have become sterile, and our mouths continue to shape innocuous inanities.

This is perhaps the greatest decadence in our miscreant student body. Universities originally existed to teach students how to think. Many have, instead, learned how to memorize. Is it any wonder that conversations lag, and the heavy with classic good looks uses the classic lines? That is not communicating! That is parroting.

The worst parrots of all are those who drop the Loaded Word. One has only to label someone a capitalist, sexist, or racist, and pandemonium breaks out. Oppression comes squirting out of the woodwork, social statistics appear from nowhere and the incident appears in the Collegian the next day.

The Loaded Words have become overused tools, exhausted cliches. They change from time to time for variety's sake, but the damning essence lingers on. It is easy to call someone a name. It is not so easy to pull him-her out of the closet.

My, what wonderful conversationalists we all are! We can cuss, we can b.s., we can parrot, we can drop Loaded Words, and best of all, we can get away with it. Unfortunately, when all is said and done, very little has been said or done. This can be poignantly described as a gutless vacuum.

Once upon a time, the motivating force behind communicating was to express a concept with clarity and newness of form. Often the concepts bore repeating. Almost as often they were pregnant with meaning. The only part of conversation today that is pregnant with meaning is the silence. Think about it. In silence.

Apathetic collective

While I was walking by the library the other day (I hope my friends notice the "by" and not "out of" or "to") a sinister looking man in a trenchcoat slowly approached me.

Calling me, he glanced about nervously. Then I noticed an awkward lack of students around.

Regardless of this fact, I casually walked over to him. "Hey kid, my name's Raymond and, I need your help."

"Why, are the Whitmore computers after you?" I asked, and mumbled my name as an afterthought.

"No, it's more devastating than that."

"Well, what do you want?"

"I want you ... "

I then backed off a couple of feet and asked,

"Hey, you're not one of those on-campus Air Force recruiters, are you? I've been getting so many letters from you recently ... "

"I'm not an Air Force recruiter, but I am recruiting, for a new group on campus."

"Oh, well, I'm not interested."

"That's great!" he said, "then you're just the type of person I'm looking for."

"Are you some kind of nut? I said I'm not interested."

Pulling his hat lower over his eyes, he replied, "But the group I'm with, we're called the ... "Apathetic Collective."

"Oh, then I can't join, I don't have the time."

"You mean," he said shuddering, "you're involved in some group on campus already?"

"Well, I'm in Area Government, and I write for the Collegian."

"Just when I thought I found a new member, you turn out concerned, just my luck," he said resignedly.

I really felt sorry for him as he began to shuffle away. Abruptly though, he turned and said.

"Hey, maybe you know some people who'd like to join. Anyone apathetic will do."

Hoping to help him (he looked so dejected) I said,

"Maybe I do know someone, his name's Peter, he's into Electrical Engineering and, I really think he'd be interested in joining."

"If he'd be interested, he can't join, he wouldn't be apathetic enough," he said dismally as he again turned away.

Calling after him, I said, "Good luck with uniting the apathetic minority at UMass. You know, if you get enough of them together, maybe they'll get concerned about something, and really be a group here."

"Funny kid, real funny," he mumbled under his breath as he walked away sulking.

I was a little hesitant to write this story. What if some apathetic people on campus didn't like it? Then I realized, if they're that apathetic, they won't read it anyway, so, I think I'm safe.

Another capitolistic accomplishment

Damon Thomas

American ingenuity. From it has come such marvelous creations as the television, the birth control pill, and the electric toothbrush, among others. Well, as of this month, we may add the no-drip tea bag to that impressive array of money-making inventions.

It's true — no-drip tea bags have just been developed, thanks to the efforts of several industrial design students at Syracuse University, who have been working on a $2,000 grant from the Lipton Tea Company.

More specifically, according to a recent news release, the 19 juniors were involved in designing "tea infusion systems and products" to avoid such so-called "problems" as dripping tea bags, tangled strings and tags that fall into tea.

Dripping tea bags, tangled strings and tags that fall into tea. It is comforting to know, from a tea-taster's point of view, that labor, capital, resources, and time are being spent on alleviating such burdensome problems. After all, it is "disgusting" for tea drops to fall upon and subsequently dirty the cup's exterior, the saucer, or the table. Tangled strings must, of course, be dealt with because, well, they're tangled. As for "tags that fall into tea," besides the fact that such tags do not adds any intrinsic flavor to the tea, the accompanying fortune on the drowning tag may become defaced. Thus, it is also imperative that we present tags from falling into the tea.

From a social welfare standpoint, however, this whole process of devising a no-drip bag is a classic illustration of how, under the present economic system, productive resources are wasted or squandered on the development, manufacture, and marketing of goods and services which bear no relationship to need.

There exists a popular concept in economics known as the opportunity cost. Briefly stated, the opportunity cost of producing a commodity consists of the other products which might have been produced with the same resources. In other words, the time, labor, resources, and capital involved in the manufacture of, for instance, a Cadillac, have thus been expended for that purpose. These productive resources have been diverted from the manufacture of, say, hospital machinery, housing, or school facilities and channeled instead into the production of this Cadillac.

A predominant characteristic of corporate capitalist production involves the indiscriminate consumption of energy and raw materials; the result has been to shower the country with automobiles, electrical appliances, cosmetics, drugs, convenience foods, soft drinks, color TV sets, and now, no-drip tea bags — while millions of Americans lack adequate housing, mass transit, recreational, educational, and health facilities. Furthermore, conspicuous consumption has been made a way of life, fostered by corporate capitalism as a means to increase demand for a tremendous and growing volume of unnecessary junk products. And, as Paul Baran and Paul Sweezy have pointed out in their book, Monopoly Capital, the demand for such products has been created for the sole purpose of keeping the system afloat. But such a state of affairs represents an irrational way for people to live and it neglects social values in favor of material acquisition. It is especially irrational in an age of shrinking resources.

Thus, from this analysis, we can see that there is a certain opportunity cost — a social cost — involved in the development and production of items such as no-drip tea bags. Yet, this misdirected development and misuse of productive factors has a basis rationale behind it — the principle of profit. For the logic of capitalism itself is profit, not need. Furthermore, the minority who own and control corporate capitalism decide what will be produced by and for the majority of Americans. That is why, devising and then selling "New Lipton No-Drip Tea Bags" remains an unquestioned priority over that of rebuilding and reshaping our inner cities, as well as addressing other pressing needs. It is the principle of production for profits' sake, which stands in the way of alleviating our social problems. Apparently, the old notion of economist Adam Smith's "invisible hand" insuring that the quest for private profits will serve society's needs is still widely accepted as valid. However, the initial conditions upon which that theory is based no longer hold true, corporate production has replaced the individual entrepreneur, free competition no longer exists, and the consumer is no longer sovereign. Although production is still carried out for profit, the "invisible hand" is nowhere in evidence.

The no-drip tea bag. Think about it.

Fishing limit successful

BOSTON (UPI) — U.S. Commerce Secretary Juanita Kreps Tuesday termed the 200- mile fishino zone limit "successful" on the eve os its first anniversary.

Overall, the domestic catch by fishermen last year equaled 1976 levels, while foreign fishing catches declined and gave depleted stocks a chance to replenish, she said.

On March 1, 1977, 20 years of lobbying for stricter controls over foreign trawling in U.S. offshore waters ended with enactment of the law.

The limit, imposed in the Fishery Conservation and Management Act of 1976, "effectively reserves the allowable catch off our coasts to U.S. fishermen, permitting foreign vessels to catch only amounts in excess of the U.S. catch," Frank said. "This ensures that vital resources are conserved and that depleted stocks can be rebuilt to be available in the future."

Some fishermen protested over the past year — first against what they claimed was lack of enforcement against foreign fishing vessels, and later against fish quotas on certain species established by the National Marine Fisheries Service.

During 1977, 997 foreign and 546 U.S. fishing vessels were boarded by the Coast Guard and Fisheries Service agents. They issued more than 800 citations against ships' owners for numerous minor violations of the fishing law.

The only two ships seized under the year-old law — both Soviet fishing vessels — were boarded by the Coast Guard last April about 150 miles southeast of Nantucket.

They were escorted into Boston Harbor, where their excess catches were confiscated.

Car salesman appears as 'new' Elvis Presley

ORLANDO, Fla. [UPI] — Dennis Wise, a former Hawaii car salesman with a devotion to Elvis Presley so intense that he underwent plastic surgery to look like the late rock star, showed his new face to reporters yesterday. He does resemble his idol.

"Dennis Wise was Elvis Presley through the years, growing up," he said. "I've always followed Elvis. The only thing that's changed about me is my face."

Wise made his first public appearance since his Jan. 31 surgery on a network television program in New York Monday morning, but his face was obscured by a large pair of sunglasses, giving rise to speculation that his operation had been a flop.

But shunning the sunglasses yesterday, Wise appeared at a news conference at an Orlando hotel and sat down in the glare of TV lights so everybody could get a good look at him.

Reporters generally agreed the resemblance was pretty good. In fact, one of the TV cameramen said that peering through his black-and-white viewfinder, he thought Wise looked exactly like Presley.

Wise plans to market his new looks in an Elvis impersonation act although he has no professional entertaining experience. His speaking voice sounds like Presley's and he says his singing voice does, too.

Five cave explorers rescued after entrapment

WATERLOO, Ill. (UPI) — Five tired, hungry and muddy amateur cave explorers were rescued yesterday from a pitch-dark cavern where they had been trapped for two days by icy waters.

"They had the good sense to get out of the water, stay in one place and wait to be found," said one of the rescuers, Kevin Barton.

"If they had panicked and got into the water, it would have depleted their body heat very quickly. We'd never have found them alive."

The four men and one woman, all from St. Louis, were at St. Clement Hospital in Red Bud, Ill., and reported in good but guarded condition suffering from exposure and dehydration.

The five said they made their way through the 2¼-mile length of the Old Schoolhouse Cave Sunday afternoon, but found an entrance there blocked by water which had risen because of melting snow.

They started to return the way they had entered, but ran out of food and water and became exhausted about half way back.

They found a dry spot in a small chamber and huddled there for warmth. By the time rescuers reached them, they had run out of light.

"When we found them and told them it was Tuesday, they were shocked," Barton said. "They thought it was at least Friday night."

The spelunkers — Tony Nenninger, 20, Gregory Berry, 22, and John Kloeckner, Lisa Albrizzi and Michael Thompson, all 18 — were described as relatively experienced explorers. All had either taken or taught courses in caving.

From 40 to 50 persons — police officers, reporters, cameramen and relatives of the trapped people — were at the mouth of the cave when word was relayed that the five had been found alive.

"Hey, they're OK," several persons shouted.

The first to emerge unsteadily into the daylight was Miss Albrizzi.

"I feel all right, pretty good," she said.

Three of the men also walked out unassisted. The last, Nenninger, was carried out on a stretcher.

Barton, 21, an airplane mechanic in St. Louis, said he had explored the cave about six times.

"There's not much to it," he said. "It's long. It has no pretty formations. It's always had a lot of water."

'Bubbles' still loose

IRVINE, Calif. [UPI] — Authorities trying to recapture Bubbles the hippo from a swampy pond the size of a football field were hampered yesterday by a pouring rain, her reluctance to surface and a court order preventing anyone from shooting her, even if she should bolt from the lake and endanger people.

"She's under water 90 per cent of the time so all we see most of the time are Bubbles' bubbles," said Jo Schetter, spokeswoman for Lion Country Safari wild animal park.

The two-ton hippopotamus escaped from the park Feb. 19 and has wandered from one lake to another, eluding park rangers, Orange County sheriff's deputies and state Fish and Game personnel who were trying to shoot a tranquilizer dart into her to return the hippo to her home.

"She appears very happy in her muddy pond," said Mrs. Schetter. "Right now it's raining like mad and it's keeping sightseers away but also creating a problem for the rangers trying to locate her."

On Monday, hundreds of sightseers, television camera crews and picketers crowded Laguna Laguna Canyon Road for a chance to see the hippo, and park officials announced, "Rangers are going to have to shoot to kill if she endangers humans."

But a group called "Love Animals Don't Hate Them," went to court and obtained a temporary restraining order preventing the shooting of Bubbles.

"It was never our intention to shoot Bubbles," said Mrs. Schetter. "It would only have been necessary if she posed a threat to people in the area. But we are now bound by the court order which is in effect until March 10."

The order was signed by Superior Court Judge Robert Greene Monday night.

Rangers tried to fire tranquilizing darts into Bubbles during the night, but the darts apparently missed or had no effect as the hippo, a nocturnal pachyderm, remained submerged.

Bubbles only needs to come up for air for several seconds every five minutes and only her nostrils emerge above the surface. Large reeds in the lake, which was created by this season's rainstorms, have prevented the rangers for the most part from even getting a glimpse at Bubbles.

The hippo, who has twice before escaped from the animal park, made her third escape by going through two fences.

Your Birthday

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1

Born today, you have a habit of creating financial difficulties. You have a knack for making money and a genius for spending it. You often have more month left at the end of your money, and this worries you and those who depend upon you. Usually your good humor carries you through; occasionally there is genuine anguish for all.

You enjoy beginnings tremendously. New projects intrigue you; new adventures lure you away from what you are doing. As a result, you often leave things undone, preferring to move in answer to the call of the different or unknown. It is possible for you to retrain yourself into more gainful habits.

You are a sociable individual, and you enjoy company. You are gregarious and garrulous, taking great pleasure from conversation.

THURSDAY, MARCH 2

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) — Look behind the facade. There is more than meets the eye to everything today.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — If you can follow directions, those helping you shouldn't mind a little humor.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Postpone travel. There is danger if you insist on journeying today.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Live up to the spirit of the law today, even if you can only give lip service to the letter.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Curtail your social life today. Stick strictly to business for best results.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) — Keep a low profile early today, or you are in danger of giving away secrets.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) — If you will delegate responsibility, you will see your mental and physical health improve.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) — Avoid speculation, especially if you are not working with your funds.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) — Contact those who have already succeeded in your field to gain important information and inspiration.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) — Friends and family expect much attention today. Don't feel guilty if you must let them down.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) — Plan your work according to physical strength rather than intellectual interest.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.19) — Tact is the essential for success now. Listen carefully to partners.

Track trials for women

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The Amherst College track is a pit. One hundred and seventy one yards of graded now rolled dirt situated in a building erected sometime in the pre-depression era.

Conditions aside, UMass's Cindi Martin toured the tight, square-cornered, slightly banked indoor track there last Friday in 2:19.7, an outstanding time, considering the facility.

"On a better track, that could have been about a 2:16 or 2:16.5," said UMass Coach Ken O'Brien.

At first glance, the time seems even more outstanding, since Martin, a junior, has been primarily a sprinter and quarter miler in the past. Not so, according to Coach Charlotte Lettis.

"Cindi has amazing ability from 100 yards on up," she said. "I think she's our most versatile runner — in fact, I think we may have found ourselves a new half-miler."

No other performances of the caliber of Martin's were turned in in the Amherst Invitational, which along with UMass included the host and six other schools. Lettis did mention some good times though.

Barb Callman in the 440 (66.4), Anna Mathieu in the high jump (5'), Laurie Wolf in the 880 (2:23.8) and Tina Francario in the mile (5:20.9) were all cited by the coach.

Diana Sealev avenged an earlier defeat in the quarter mile as she took on Milton of Yale in the mile relay. Her Ivy opponent had eked out a .3 second win in quarter, but in the relay, Sealey took the baton from Ginger Bulman with a slight lead only to see Milton pull right up on her shoulder. Sealey dug in and spurted away from Milton, leaving her rigging in the dust (literally).

Linda Stillman was the victim of some bad luck. After getting through the dash quarter and semi-finals, she had her blocks slip at the gun, and finished fourth, but only a stride out of third, and still closing," according to Coach Gary King.

Meanwhile, the women are back training at Curry Hicks Cage — 176 yards of boards which many would refer to as as much of a pit as Amherst, when they would mention the place at all. However, Lettis disagrees.

"I think it's a good track — a fast track," she said. "The track has something to do with times, but the athlete has more to say about them. Track is such a psychological thing.

"Not to make excuses, but our big bout with the flu and intersession are tougher to take."

Women skiers win 2

By LISA CAPONE
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's ski team won both championship races Sunday and Monday at Middlebury College, making them the champs of the Women's Inter-College Ski Conference (WISC), with a perfect 40-0 record.

In the giant slalom held Sunday, Minutewoman Kathy Shinnick was first with a time of 1:35.24 minutes. Placing second and third were UMass Cathy Donovan at 1:36.40, and Nancy Hayden at 136.54. UMass skiers Diana Vilenti, Janet Gilman, and Connie Pratt placed ninth, thirteenth, and fourteenth respectively.

The slalom on Monday was almost a repeat performance of the previous day's race. Shinnick again won it with a time of :90.99, followed by teammates Hayden and Donovan at :91.48 and :92.47. Connie Pratt was eighth, and Minutewoman Valerie Hanson placed ninth. Gretchen Dietze of B.C. was fourth and Nancy Corsiglia of Smith fifth in both races.

In the Women's Eastern Regionals held at Middlebury Friday and Saturday, UMass didn't finish in the top ten per cent, but "skied very well indeed," according to coach Bill MacConnell.

"The women did about as well as I thought they would against such tough competition. They were skiing against some of the toughest teams in the nation," he said.

UMass was not scored as a team, but rather as individuals in the Easterns. However, had they been scored as a team, the Minutewomen would have finished ninth in the slalom, according to MacConnell.

Donovan was twenty-sixth at 1:45.57, closely followed by Hayden, who placed twenty-eighth at 1:46.18. Shinnick, who fell in the first run of the slalom, finished forty-third at 1:57.02. Williams College was first in the slalom, U. New Hampshire second, and Colby-Sawyer third.

In the giant slalom held Saturday, UMass placed about the same as in the slalom had they been scored as a team, according to MacConnell. Shinnick, with a time of 2:07.10, was twenty-eighth, and Hayden was thirty-third at 2:08.72. The third major skier on the team, Cathy Donovan, didn't finish the race. Dartmouth College won the giant slalom, followed by Middlebury and U. Vermont.

It was indeed a very busy time for the skiers. When asked to comment on the weekend, the team members remarked, "It was a long one... but it was fun!"

★ Claiborne

can help a team on defense, and I feel I am a good shooter."

Leaman says if Claiborne does not get drafted, he would certainly succeed in European leagues which have employed former UMass players, Jim Town and John Murphy.

"Derick is such a heady player that I can't really say what his potential is. Because of his intelligence, I can't tell how or what his limit is," said Leaman.

But Claiborne feels that working with children would be another occupation for him. For the last four summers, he has worked with Operation Sport Rescue, a youth-oriented program in New York City. "I like to work with kids and hope I can continue to do so," said Claiborne.

SOFTBALL — Entries are due at the IM Office today. $10 forfeit fee required!

Bowling teams split matches

The UMass men's and women's bowling teams competed over the weekend in the Tri-State Tournament of the Year in Cranston, R.I. The tournament typified this year's performance by the men's team, as there were fine individual showings, but a disappointing performance on the whole. The women were winners.

The women's team has had a very successful season, as its first place rating heading into last weekend's tournament shows. Rebounding from behind in points, the women took 17½ out of 29 points to finish the day 5½ points in front of second play Lowell.

Standouts for the women included Cyndi Adams, whose 526 series was good enough for first place in singles. Adams, along with her doubles partner Gina McEvoy, combined to take first place in doubles competition with a 991.

Also turning in good performances for the women's unit were Jackie Cashen (202), Beth Schneider, Sue Iverson and Adele Fox.

The men's team, which entered the tournament in eighth place, could not put it all together, and finished in the middle of the pack of twelve teams. Mike Berard was a standout for the squad (237, 219, 207, 204), taking the singles title with a 615 series, and placing second in all events, averaging 202 on the day. Going into the final tournament (to be held later this month), he holds the league high average with a 188.

Freshman Tim Welch averaged 185 on the day and has looked very impressive in the last few tournaments.

Roger Norcross, by virtue of his performance in the ACU-I tournament two weeks back, will be competing in the National Championships to be held in St. Louis in April.

The men's team has the nucleus to be of championship caliber, but lacks one or two consistent bowlers.

Claiborne out from the shadows

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Think of all the second people in the great name combinations. Livingston of Stanley and Livingston, Watson of Sherlock Holmes and Dr. Watson, Clark of Lewis and Clark, and now think of Derick Claiborne of the UMass backcourt combination of Eldridge and Claiborne.

For nine years, ever since 8th grade, Alex Eldridge and Claiborne have teamed up in the backcourt. At Taft Senior High in New York City both of them gained recognition as the starting backcourt of the number one high school in N.Y.C.

Since coming to UMass in 1974, both Eldridge and Claiborne have scored over 1,000 points, marking the first time the Minutemen have had their backcourt pass that milestone.

But Claiborne, the man his teammates call "D", has always been in the shadow of his teammate Eldridge.

While Eldridge has been handing out 515 career assists, or making countless flashy passes, or going behind his back to lay one off the backboard, Claiborne has remained in the background, protecting against the fast-break, setting up the offense and occasionally scoring (9.8 points per game).

"Sometimes I think Derick should have gone to another school where he would have gotten the recognition he deserves. He has helped my play tremendously. Without him, I couldn't make the moves I do without worrying that Derick is backing me up," said Eldridge.

"We've been together for so long we know each other automatically. I can't think of anyone I would rather team up with in the backcourt," Eldridge said.

"Sometimes it gets to me that I don't get noticed for the things I do," said Claiborne. "But if the team wins, I really don't care."

"I feel proud that both Boob and I have accomplished something since we have been here. It's been alright," said Claiborne.

The 6'2", 170 pound senior, first started playing competitive basketball at the age of 11 in what he termed the "Bird League". On his junior high school team, Claiborne played forward-center, but it was the playgrounds and the summer tournaments that he started to learn the tricks of the backcourt.

At Taft High, Claiborne switched to guard, where starting in the same backcourt with Eldridge, he averaged ten points per game his sophomore year, 14 in his junior season, and 16 in his senior year.

During his senior season, Claiborne was a Prep High School All-America choice and was the team's MVP that year. He was actively recruited by St. John's, Hawaii, and Temple, but didn't want to go too far from home and decided to come to UMass.

"In December of 73 I first came here, and for some reason I remember three inches of snow on the ground. Maybe it was the winter atmosphere about this place, but it was something I liked very much," said Claiborne.

Claiborne didn't play much his freshman year (averaging 2.8 points per game) but started all 27 games his sophomore year and averaged 11 points. As a junior, he averaged 9.8 points but was the leading foul shooter on the team (80.6 per cent) and had a game of 28 points against Duquesne including 16 free throws in a row (a UMass record for one game).

This season the communications major has played all 26 games and is the second leading player in minutes played (816, only eight behind team leader Mike Pyatt).

"When we recruited Derick we were looking for an outstanding person with a team oriented approach to basketball. We got that in him," said UMass coach Jack Leaman.

"He is a very steady ballplayer, an unselfish person, and certainly a very intelligent guard. He's a keen thinker, has quickness. He's a fine shooter and probably one of our best defensive players," added Leaman.

As far as a fast-breaking offense, Claiborne wishes he could have run more but realizes that they type of personnel UMass has is more suited for a transitional, set-up offense.

"In high school, we used to run all the time and when UMass recruited me, they said they would be rebuilding the program under a more running offense. We now run more than we used to but we have to adjust to the type of players we have," said Claiborne.

"To be truthful," said Claiborne, "Boob, Mike and I have turned this program right around. For example, all the players would have to tuck their shirts in all the time, but we raised this question, and now they have developed uniforms which allow the shirts to hang out."

Claiborne said he hopes to turn professional since a couple of NBA teams have sent him letters. "I hope I can be drafted on the eighth or ninth round. I think I

Spring blooms baseball

The signs are apparent. The remains of Blizzard '78' are slowly disintegrating (barring further incident), the longjohns that have kept your body warm all winter long are slowly moving their way to the bottom of the laundry pile in your dresser, and procrastination on your homework by the excuse "I'm not going to the library in that!" simply isn't going to work anymore. Two thoughts come to mind; spring is on the way, and spring training isn't far behind.

Yes, fans of the great American pastime, bring out your apple pie and Chevrolets, baseball is on the way. Spring training for most of the twenty-six teams has already started, some (like the Yankees) as early as February 8. That gives the players roughly a month of wind sprints, grass drills, and preseason interviews before the exhibition (schedule) begins on March 8, when Ray Kroc's San Diego Padres — or should I say Quarter-Pounder Padres — battle Gene Autry's California Angels in Hootville, Florida.

"Tune-Up Time" is a tradition in the baseball world. It's the time when the rookies and free agents arrive a week before the million-dollar superstars feel like dropping by to visit with their teams, or when the cagey veterans are contractually required to start getting their acts in gear if they want to continue to draw their weekly paychecks. Spring training might be a ritual more than a necessity, but it is a rebirth of an interest after a winter's chill, and a time when the future is of more interest than the past.

To local fans, the '77' Red Sox odyssy ended on a sour note with a second place finish. To most, it was an example of a high powered, top caliber team — even though the pitching never attained its expectations — that was edged out of a pennant by an egomaniacal merchant named Steinbrenner with an intransigent desire to buy a world championship. Well, the '78' season isn't too far away, and here are a few items worth noting which will surely wet the appetites of eager gamblers like myself, and you avid fans out there in fanland (a winter resort in Finland).

Attendance in the major leagues during '77' season increased an astonishing 24 per cent — even though two expansion teams were introduced — and there were substantial increases in lucrative television contracts. There is little doubt that skyrocketing bids for free agents contributed to this astonishing figure. The first crop of twenty-four free agents (post '76' season) obtained contracts totalling $25.2 million. This impact on salaries had to be tremendous. The second wave of free agents did even better, the top fourteen secured $24.2 million. Will this mean another attendance leap in 1978? A primary indication will be the gate figures at Florida and Arizona games, where tourists and local inhabitants soak up the rays and while away the days.

Baseball owners, by and large, are profit orientated. Any business major will attest to that. Most individual owners and corporations that have bought interest in sports teams are not out to squander away their finances. A willingness to shell out huge amounts to numerous players suggests that these investors believe their investments will pay off.

Baseball as an industry has not reached its pinnacle of public interest as of yet. Sixteen clubs are raising ticket prices, and are betting that interested fans will continue to buy more expensive tickets. If they don't, and decide to sit by the tube on weekends (which, I have just been informed, were made for Michelob) in their air-conditioned rooms, sipping 'em down, and listening to the team of Dick Stockton and Ken Harrelson, the clever advertising that is designed to catch the viewers' eye and sells for up to $250,000 a minute will most certainly continue to reward its sponsors. This week's quote of the week: "That's right Hawk, Mrs. Agnes B. Whoopee of Dorchester is this inning's winner of Star Market's home-run sweepstakes. She'll receive $25.00 worth of fine foods as well as a life-size photo of your beak! Excuse me fans, I meant nose." Conclusively, if you are interested in baseball, baseball is definitely interested in your wallet.

Tidy tidbits.... I make the Red Sox a 17-10 choice to capture the American League East crown. The additions of Torrez, Drago, and Burgmeier should mend some wounds to an aging pitching staff.... The Yankees follow at 2-1, with fireballers Eastwick and Gossage the newest additions to the money machine.... Watch for a dogfight for third between a vastly improved Milwaukee ballclub (with Hisle, Fosse, and Davis joining the roster) and the Orioles with Weaver the Magician. These clubs are listed at 11-2 and 10-1 respectively. The Tigers, Indians, and Blue Jays round out the strongest division in baseball.... Fenway Park still has two feet of snow covering the field..... The smart gambler will bet against the veteran pitchers for the first few weeks of the season. It takes time for your Tiants, Torrez's, Catfishes, and Cuellars to heat up. They are good bets in the hot summer months.... Watch for my next column, when I try to explain the complicated betting spreads that frequent bookmaking operations on a nationwide basis, and which few sports fans can understand.

Alcoholics lose

Los Conquistadors edged the Alcoholics 30-28 last night at Boyden gym to avenge last year's playoff defeat.

The Alcoholics finished third in last season's intramural basketball tournament while Los Conquistadors were ranked among the top ten teams.

Los Conquistadors dominated the first half of play with good outside shooting and a tight defense.

At halftime Los Conquistadors led 18-13.

With just 45 seconds left in the game, the Alcoholics narrowed the margin to four points.

The Alcoholics successfully switched from a man to man defense to a full court press and within 15 seconds had tied the score at 28-28.

Los Conquistador's Steve Gardner took an easy layup at the seven second mark for the final shot of the game.

In the second game, Mad Dog 20-20 captured its first victory of the season, whipping the Cakes, 32-18.

Both teams are now 1-3 in intramural action.

Mad Dog led the entire game and at halftime were in front, 15-3.

With just 2:20 left in the game, the Cakes closed the gap to six points.

That is where Mad Dog 20-20's John O'Brien took over. He scored six of his 14 points in the last two minutes of the game.

O'Brien also managed one steal and an assist in the closing seconds of the game to secure the Mad Dog victory.

The Machine slipped by the Collegian 21-18 in last night's final game.

Gymwomen edge UNH at Cage

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

The women's gymnastics team finished their home season on a positive note as they defeated New Hampshire 138.10 to 135.25. The equally matched teams combined for a "white knuckler," until the second half of the meet when UMass began to gain the edge.

UNH won the first event, vaulting, 35.80 - 35.65. Karen Hemberger and UNH's Denise Walker tied for first place with scores of 9.45. Senior Susan Cantwell, honored before the meet with fellow Seniors Stephanie Jones and Debbie Law, finished third with a 9.0 for her half on full off vault. Jones and Karen Clemente contributed the other top four scores for the Minutewomen with 8.60 scores. Law came through with an 8.05 in her last home appearance.

UMass battled back and won the uneven parallel bars 35.00 - 33.85, to lead at half time by one point, 70.65 - 69.65. Jones and Walker tied for first place on with scores of 9.30. Hemberger was third with a 9.05. Cantwell received an 8.60 after the judges reconsidered her performance at the request of coach Virginia Evans. Law's 8.05 score was also contested by Evans but remained unchanged.

The balance beam proved to be deadly for both teams, but the Minutewomen pulled together to take the event 33.60 - 32.65. Cantwell and the omnipresent Walker finished in a tie for third with 8.45 marks. Walker's score was rather controversial in that what looked like a fall just before her dismount was ruled by the judges to be caused by a photographer who was accused of being in Walker's way. UNH Coach Lou Datilio contested the presence of the photograph and asked that Walker be able to repeat the routine. The judges ruled against this but did not deduct any points from Walker's score for the missed dismount. "The whole thing was pretty questionable," said Evans. Diane Laurenson continued to regain her performance strength and contributed an 8.05 to the UMass event score.

Walker also won first place on the floor exercise with an 9.20. Cantwell finished off her final performance for the UMass fans with a second place finish with a 9.05 mark. Hemberger finished third with an 8.85 for a new routine she is still adjusting too. Debbie Smith continued to improve and contributed at 7.95 to the event. UMass won the event 33.85 - 32.92 despite the judges conservative scores.

Cantwell finished with her highest total all around score of the season of 35.20 to finish second behind Walker who totaled 36.40. Karen Hemberger edged out UNH's Edie Sutton with a 34.70 for third place. Hemberger was in second place after two events but ran into rhythm problems on the beam and had two falls to reduce her score to 7.35.

Karen Clemente turned in another strong evening's work. She finished with a 31.25 total for four events despite being continually bothered by ankle injury suffered earlier in the season. Stephanie Jones was scratched from the floor exercise at the last minute to give her sprained hip another chance to rest.

The team displayed alot of spirit and enthusiasm enroute to their eighth win of the season. "I was pleased with the performances overall tonight," said Evans. "We're getting the routines down, but we still have a few bugs to work out before Easterns," said Evans.

Senior Susan Cantwell made her final Cage appearance last night. The All-American gymnast has thrilled and spellbound crowds for four years here.

Southern tips women

NEW HAVEN, Conn — So close. So close and yet so far.

The UMass women's basketball team crept within two points, 53-51, on a Julie Ready jumper before Southern Connecticut, the number one ranked team in New England, engineered a 12-2 spurt to pull away from the Minutewomen for a 74-67 victory last night at Moore's Fieldhouse on the Southern Conn campus.

Sophomore guard Cathy Inglese (22 points) and reserve forward Loretta McDonald combined for 10 points during the four minute period of the second half where Southern broke out to a 65-53 lead with 6:38 remaining.

The Minutewomen, who fell behind by ten points early in the first half, 14-4 got themselves back into the game with an eight point run led by Jen Parker and Debbie McCulloch, who shared the scoring honors for UMass with 12 points apiece.

Southern Connecticut's ability to run the fast break and the hot outside shooting of forward M. J. Pruzinsky threatented to break the game wide open at the halfway point of the first half, as Southern led, 26-16, but the Minutewomen fought back to a seven point deficit, 40-33, at the half.

Sue Peters, UMass' stellar guard, hit two free throws and a 20 foot jump shot in succession to initiate the comeback, bringing the Minutewomen within three, 44-41, in the first five minutes of the second half.

After falling behind by nine points, UMass started its nearly successful run to wrestle the lead from the Owls.

Forward Maura Supinski sank a free throw, completing a three point play where she was fouled following up a missed shot. Subsequent baskets by McCulloch, Co-captain Cheryl Carey, and Ready brought the Minutewomen to that 2 point deficit at 53-51, forcing Southern Conn coach Don Perrelli to call a timeout to regroup his forces.

After the timeout, it was off to the races, as the Owls hit three fast break baskets and three jumpers to open up a twelve point lead, 65-53.

"We started to run the ball and we hit the shots we needed to repell their comeback," Perrelli said.

Parker hit two long range jump shots to bring UMass back to 65-57, but Southern, led by senior center Marnie Dacko (14 pts.) and Inglese, staved off the furious UMass comeback. An Inglese fast break layup secured the Southern victory, giving the Owls a 72-61 lead with 1:44 remaining in the game.

Despite it being the team's second consecutive defeat, Coach Mary Ann Ozdarski remained optimistic. "The kids never gave up, but we were content to play even with Southern and not forge ahead," she said. "Jen Parker did an outstanding job, both defensively and offensively, and McCulloch and Mary Hallaren sparked our comeback."

"We are both tired teams," said Perrelli of Southern, after the two teams' final regular season game. "UMass is going to be tough to beat in their bracket of the Easterns, they should give Providence a tough time."

On the brighter side, Peters scored her needed 11 points to become the first woman to score 400 points in a season for the Minutewomen.

UMASS — McCulloch 5-2-12, McHugh 0-0-0, Carey 3-2-8, Hallaren, 2-0-4, Parker 6-0-12, Peters 4-3-11, Supinski 2-1-5, Harrington 3-3-9, Peebles 0-0-0, Ready 3-0-6. Totals 28-11-67.

SOUTHERN CONN — Cook 0-0-0, Dacko 6-2-14, Gemmell 1-1-3, Rajcula 2-0-4, McDonald 3-2-8, Van Ness 6-3-15, Inglese 9-4-22, Pruzinsky 4-0-8. Totals — 31-12-74.

UMass wrestling captain Tim Fallon was honored Monday night before the team's final home meet of the season. Head coach Dave Amato is shown here presenting Fallon with a plaque donated by fellow teammates and the Alumni Association. Fallon, the only senior on the team, will be participating in the New England's this weekend in the 150 pound weight class. (Staff photo by Dave Daly)

Into the stretch run

A new winner has been announced in the Red Auerbach Giveaway contest! He is Bob Bigelow of the Eastern Basketball League and formerly the Kansas City Kings.

As was stated last week in the rules and regulations of the contest, Bob wins an all-expenses-paid ten-day contract with the Boston Celtics. Unfortunately, we were unable to offer him the opportunity to replace a Celtic notable so we gave him the spot on the roster that was occupied by previous winner Zaid Abdul Aziz.

Congratulations Bob!

I'll announced the name of the next winner as soon as it is determined — in about ten days.

-----

Eastern Conference

1. Philadelphia (41-8) — Glidin', stridin', groovin', movin' one on one basketball at its best. It's disgusting but it works.

2. San Antonio (37-22) — His name is George Gervin, he is known as the "Ice Man," and he may very well win the Most Valuable Player award.

3. (tie) New York (31-28) — Bob McAdoo has started his assault on the league scoring title; if he fails, the Knicks fail with him.

3. Washington (31-28) — This team will go as far as Bobby Dandridge, not Elvin Hayes, takes them, and already he's taken them pretty far.

5. Cleveland (30-31) — This team is in limbo, bordering between success and utter failure. Nate Thurmond, where are you?

6. (tie) Atlanta (28-33) — If this concoction of ball players makes the playoffs, Hubie Brown is my choice for coach of the year.

6. New Orleans (28-33) — As Pete Maravich goes, so go the Jazz; for the moment, Maravich is gone (knee) and so are the Jazz.

8. Boston (22-34) — I'm waiting for Red to sign LaRue Martin to a ten-day contract, then this team will get moving.

9. Houston (24-38) — This team fell apart for three reasons. 1) the loss of Rudy T. 2) shifting all of T.'s scoring onto Calvin Murphy's shoulders and 3) spending more time arguing about The Punch than replacing Tomjanovich.

10. Buffalo (19-38) — This team is Marvin Barnes' penance for his past no-no's.

11. New Jersey (14-47) — Avis tries hard because they're No. 2 in their business, the Nets try hard because they don't want to be No. 22 in theirs.

Western Conference

1. Portland (49-10) — when you say Trailblazers, you've said it all.

2. Phoenix (38-22) — And a little child shall lead them. My pick for Rookie of the Year, "Sweet D" Walter Davis.

3. Denver (38-23) — If Brent Mushberger calls Davis Thompson "sky walker" one more time, I will be forced to reveal the true identity of Shaheed Abdul Aleem.

4. Seattle (33-27) — Nothing but good has happened since Lenny Wilkins returned as coach. At this rate, he'll make up for Bill Russells' foul ups around the year 2000.

5. (tie) Los Angeles (32-29) — To prove the awesomeness of Kareem Abdul Jabbar, he missed 20 games but still has enough total points to qualify for the league scoring race.

5. Milwaukee (32-29) — I still can't believe that the paint job the Bucks had on their court cost $40,000.

7. Chicago (31-32) — At his current rate of play, Artis Gilmore will die from exhaustion by season's end; and the Bulls still won't make the playoffs.

8. Golden State (29-32) — Slowly sinking downward. Boy, did Ricky Green turn out to be a dud as a pro.

Free Black American concert voted

John Foley last night said he favored two concerts ...

By JON KLEIN
and JACK GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate early this morning in a seven and one half hour session passed a motion to hold a Black American Music Festival with no admission charge as the campus Spring Concert at Alumni Stadium. The vote was 42-15.

The concept of the benefit would still be preserved by donating money to the Duke Ellington Foundation. The foundation is a New York based group which has not yet been incorporated.

The goals of the group would include setting up a museum and archives of Black American Music. Money for the donation would come from either concession sales or from a grant from the senate. These decisions had not been reached at presstime.

Early this morning the Senate agreed to a donation to the Foundation under the condition that they earned back their outlay for the concert.

In defense of the Black American Music Festival Judyie Brandt said "The festival does not seek to alienate white students nor to become a spring concert in blackface." Brandt continued by saying "this legislature chooses to hide behind tradition, ignoring the possibilities for change, for growth. There is no excuse for maintaining this ignorance."

The meeting began with a proposed amendment that there be a BAMF on Saturday, Mar. 5 with a traditional Spring Concert the following day.

The amendment was discussed on the senate floor but the concensus was that there would be a conflict of interest between the two concerts.

It was then moved that the money for the concessions for the BAMF be given back to the student body instead of to an out-of-state organization.

It was stated that the SGA had already committed themselves to the BAMF and that the talent was in the process of being secured.

Also, the Senate concluded that the idea of students paying for a traditionally free concert seemed to upset some senators. Those who were upset said their constituencies had told them that they would be opposed to paying for any event in place of Spring Concert.

The already mentioned proposal for the organized concerts was attacked on many sides. One, there was no security secured for the traditional Spring Concert. Two, Mark Hickson, a member of the Third World Caucus, felt that if the student body was given the option of a free concert or the cost of three dollars, they would choose the free concert.

Pricilla West, SGA treasurer, countered with the contention that if there were two concerts, the profits or losses would be minimized. However, West was countered by Senator Jon Foley who brought it to the attention of the Senate that the Spring Concert has never made money before.

Senator Lynda Ciano, Greek Council representative, said she didn't feel the BAMF was representative of her constituency. Rene Bablier, Third World Representative, countered by saying "Our SATF has gone to concerts and have had no interest in them at all."

UM med school head disagrees with state

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — UMass-Worcester Chancellor Roger Bulger yesterday said the issue of whether UMass medical school students should pay back the state the cost of their education involves the question of the theory of public aducation in relation to a medical school.

He said the UMass Board of Trustees will have to present a strong arguement that subsidized public education does include medical school education in order to change a policy approved by state legislators which requires UMass Medical School graduates repay a portion of the costs of their education.

The legislature last December passed a bill requiring UMass medical school students to repay the costs of their education either in a cash reimbursement or by practicing medicine in the state.

Chairman of the State Senate Ways and Means Committee James Kelley, D-Oxford, recently suggested the UMass trustees should reconsider their proposal which would require either an $8,000 payment or a year's service in the state.

Kelley said the monetary payback proposal of the trustees is not large enough to encourage graduates to choose the in-state service form of paying for their education.

The trustees did not discuss the payment question during their monthly meeting at the Columbia Point campus here yesterday, although Bulger briefly outlined his thoughts to the trustees and also answered questions outside the meeting. The board will probably consider Kelley's suggestion at their meeting next month, according to board Chairman Joseph P. Healey.

Bulger said the $30,000 figures quoted by Kelley's office as the cost of educating a UMass medical student compared only the total operating cost of the school with the number of students and not other line-items of its budget. Bulger said his staff is analyzing the costs but he estimated it to range from $17,000 to $20,000. Four hundred students attend the medical school.

Bulger said he would like to see medical school students pay for their education by completing their medical training at hospitals in areas needing more doctors.

He told the trustees that while most state medical schools are attempting to have 50 percent of their students train in state, the percentage of UMass students training in Massachusetts is already 60-70 percent.

The UMass medical school already oversees training at hospitals needing doctors, including a program in Uxbridge, Bulger said.

Healey after the meeting said he doesn't "like to see students straddled with debts" after graduation. He said the trustees will probably develop other proposals about medical school students' paying for their education by the April board meeting.

Interim President Franklin K. Patterson said the idea of graduates attending public insitutions having to pay for the cost of their education "could begin to erode the idea of land grant institutions that have little or no tuition."

Patterson said a requirement to repay a subsidized medical school education could "discourage" those students from attending who ought to attend the public medical school."

He pointed out 60 percent of the students attending the UMass medical school come from families with total income less than $20,000.

Patterson also said he is "intrigued" by Kelley's suggestion that medical school graduates begin to pay for their education only when they reach a certain income level.

Senate lends Pierpont support against Matlack

By CINDY REGET
Collegian Staff

The Student Senate last night added its voice to the opposition against the Matlack Plan.

The plan, proposed by Southwest Master-Director Jim Matlack, would limit the residency of Pierpont dormitory to only freshmen and sophomores. Students beyond their fourth term of residence at UMass would not be allowed to reside in the dorm. The Student Senate unanimously passed a motion supporting Pierpont residents "to support the people of Pierpont in their actions and to commit whatever support and resources necessary to their ultimate victory."

When this motion was opened to the Senate for discussion, the basic contentions of this proposed limitation of the residency of Pierpont were aired. They were:

—"The Administration cannot tell us where we can or cannot live. It's our money and it's our home," said Senator Susan Birmingham.

—"This isn't just a Southwest issue. If this can happen to Pierpont, it can happen to any dorm," said Senator Eric Anderson.

—"The problems of drug usage and selling, disruptive and destructive behavior, noise levels and fire and pet policies are not as extreme as Jim Matlack's solution warrants. The people in Pierpont are a symbol of activism and resistance and therefore have always been a thorn in the side of the administration... the people of Pierpont should be able to deal with their own internal problems," other senators said.

The residents of Pierpont now have three weeks in order to compile an alternate plan to Matlack's proposal. If at the end of three weeks they are unable to provide a solution which meets with Matlack's approval, his original proposal will go into effect.

Many Pierpont residents are dissatisfied with this time period. "It's hard to believe he's acting in good faith when he gives us three week's deadline for a project he's worked on for five months," Pierpont Senator David Barenberg said Tuesday.

Karen Kelly summed up the veneral feeling at last night's Senate meeting when she said, "This is the sleaziest move pulled on the student body for a while."

Student judiciary head has legal experience

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

Some of Barry Benson's closest friends don't know he has a top student government position.

After a semester's vacancy, the office of the Student Clerk of Courts was filled last Thursday by a soft-spoken junior management major who is not impressed with titles.

"Titles?" said Benson, "They don't mean anything."

"There's a sign in there hanging from the ceiling that says "Attorney General." My desk is in there but I don't know if I'm going to put any sign up anywhere." Benson does not want to draw attention to himself or his job.

"A lot of people up here lose sight of the fact that they are also students, but not me. I consider myself a student first."

Benson's actions belie his seemingly frivolous attitude toward his position. On the first day of his job he set up a trial, prepared for a meeting with the student judges of the Student Judiciary, and overhauled the case filing system. He modestly recites these accomplishments, adding that he feels he has not even begun to fulfill his official obligations.

According to the Constitution of the Student Government Association, the Clerk of Courts is the "chief administrator" of the Student Judiciary. Benson interprets that line to mean that he helps to head the University Student Judiciary system. "I schedule trials, keep records, recruit and assign judges, and keep concerned parties informed about final court decisions, among other things."

He estimates upwards of twenty hours a week will be spent on his job, the bulk of the time devoted to problems relating to student trials.

Student Judiciary is one of three judicial bodies at UMass.

While Benson and Student Attorney General Jeff Lutsky share the same office, they both see their jobs as a separate. "I oversee matters relating to advocates while Barry is in charge of the judges" Lutsky said.

The SGA Constitution provides for 19 judges but Benson said, "there are only 10 at present". He plans to meet with area government presidents to ask for appointments.

"We are supposed to have two judges from each of the area governments, Stockbridge, Commuters, and Greek communities as well as three from the Senate but we are deficient in every area except the Greeks." Benson said he would like to see more students involved in the judicial process.

I wanted to get invovled in some aspect of the Student Government but not in the Senate." Benson said his interests lay in the Student Judiciary. "I like law in addition to business," Benson explained, adding "in this job I can combine both. I've taken courses in political theory as well as constitutional and business law. This job is added experience. It is always good to learn as much as you can."

Benson's background in law and business is not the total extent of his experience with legal administration and management. He spent last summer as a legislative intern in the Massachusetts Office of Federal State Relations in Washington D.C. "I attended Congressional hearings during my internship." Benson said. He also summarized legislation, and gathered information concerning current legislation in memos for Boston based officials. "this is where I think the Clerk of Courts position is valuable. I'll be able to use the communication skills I acquired."

His knowledge will also aid the judges new to the judicial system. It is Benson's responsibility to train all judges he recruits. "What I do is start them off with a mock trial where they would be able to sit in as part of the tribunal. They would be able to gain actual experience that way and I could see how they perform before putting them in a real situation."

Setting up real trials is one of the more difficult tasks Benson faces during his term as Clerk of Courts. "I have to call three judges together for each trial; that comes up in addition to making Campus Center room arrangements. "The system calls for one of the three judges to act as the presiding judge and it is up to Benson to decide which judge is to be appointed to that position. "I try to call judges on a rotating basis and do the same with choosing a presiding judge, but there are problems in that," Benson admitted. He cannot reveal any facts of the case about to be tried but must insure that the judges are not from the same area of campus as the defendant. "They cannot know the person on trial, and there can be no personal contact."

Benson finds the real problem in picking out judges is "when the hard cases come along." Experience counts heavily in selection, but Benson feels "it is more important to have a strong experienced judge who cannot be intimidated by advocates who'll of course be trying to sway the argument their way." Benson sees the need for judges to have control over a courtroom proceedings and is able to appraise all judges' abilities during trials. "My job maintains that I be present at all of the trials which is necessary as I may be needed for assistance."

Judges may also ask my opinion on procedures or any other aspect of the legal system. "I'm here to help" Benson said "but I have to be asked when it comes to trials."

Benson is not afraid to admit he doesn't have all the answers to questions that are asked of him. "It's no shame to admit you don't know something. I would say "I don't know" to a judge or anyone else instead of giving a wrong answer off the top of my head."

Benson was selected by a student administrative committee last Thursday from a field of 12 candidates. "We were looking for someone with legal experience, knowledge of court procedure, and clerical skills." said Lutsky. "Barry was the best qualified and we are confident he will do the best job. With him there is no doubt about it."

New trustees welcomed; others say 'goodbye'

By JOAN FEENEY
Collegian Staff

BOSTON – The UMass Board of Trustees here yesterday welcome some new members and said goodbye to others ending their terms as trustees or University administrators.

UMass-Amherst student trustee Marion Batiste and Boston campus trustee Judy Baker attended their last full board meeting of their one-year terms. Both still have committee sessions to attend this month.

University Vice President for Planning Nan S. Robinson begins her new job on the Connecticut Board of Higher Education following her resignation this Friday.

Robinson becomes a deputy commission on the Connecticut board, which is undergoing a reorganization. She has been associated with UMass for seven years.

Robinson was involved with the planning of the Columbia Point campus here and also lobbying to locate the John F. Kennedy Memorial Library at the campus. The library is expected to stimulate plans to rehabilitate the Columbia Point section of the city.

Robinson's responsibilities for University planning will be divided between two University offices as part of a central office reorganization by Interim President Franklin K. Patterson.

Vice President of Academic Affairs Ernest A. Lynton will assume Robinson's academic planning duties and Vice President of Administration and Finance George Kaludis will take on Robinson's physical plant and capital responsibilities.

Patterson said he will serve as the chief officer in University long range planning.

Robinson will help coordinate the different branches of the Connecticut public higher education system.

Budget status unknown for UM snow removal

The status of UMass' snow removal budget is unknown, according to UMass Director of Planning and Operations Jack Littlefield.

Littlefield's department had requested an additional $40,000 for snow removal during the first week of February, but no action has yet been taken on that request.

Littlefield speculated the decision to allocate funds was held up due to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' attempt to secure federal storm assistance for Massachusetts.

Meanwhile, the Town of Amherst's snow removal budget is "running in the red" and will remain so until May, according to Dept. of Public Works Supt. Stan Ziomeck.

The DPW will have to wait until the annual Town Meeting to take care of any deficit spending, Ziomack said.

UM – Boston gets $9 mill. for rink, pool and gym

An $8.9 million contract has been awarded for construction of a physical education facility at the UMass-Boston campus.

Interim UMass President Franklin K. Patterson said ground is expected to be broken for the complex this spring and work should be completed by October, 1979.

UMass trustees have already voted to name the facility for the late Catherine F. Clark, a trustee and Dorchester community leader, who died last November.

The physical education complex will include a gymnasium, exercise rooms, a swimming pool, and a skating rink. It will be built next to the administration building on the Harbor Campus.

Jumbo jet crashes on takeoff

LOS ANGELES [UPI] – A Continental Airlines jumbo jet bound for Honolulu blew two tires on takeoff in a heavy rain yesterday, skidded off the runway and burst into flames, killing two passengers and injuring 50 others in a panicked scramble down emergency chutes to escape the inferno.

"Some people just jumped down into the flames," said Leona Bennet, 54, Anaheim, who received a broken ankle while sliding down a burning ramp from the DC-10 packed with 184 passengers and a crew of 13.

A man and a woman died when they exited a chute on the right side of the plane and were consumed in flames issuing up from beneath the tail. Other passengers scrambled down other chutes which were not burned. There was no fire inside the plane.

Five other passengers received critical or serious burns and 45 others had minor injuries. They were rushed by ambulance to nine local hospitals.

An airline spokesman said the pilot, Capt. Charles E. "Gene" Hersche of El Paso, Texas, was making his final flight before celebrating his 60th birthday this weekend and retiring under mandatory age requirements.

"He's been with the airline for 32 years, has logged more than 30,000 hours and hadn't scratched one airplane until today," said Continental spokesman Bob Serling, author of the book "The President's Plane Is Missing."

Federal Aviation Administration officials said Flight 603 was on its takeoff roll from Los Angeles International Airport when two tires on the right side blew out "under conditions of reduced visibility, with a low cloud ceiling and a heavy rain falling."

The pilot tried to abort the takeoff from Runway 6, but the plane's landing gear collapsed and he swerved hard to the left to avoid smashing into a car rental agency, a fence and other buildings at the end of the runway.

The crippled plane came to a stop on the grass to the left of the runway, about 40 yards short of the buildings.

Just as quickly, the jet's doors popped open and emergency evacuation chutes billowed to the ground. One of the chutes caught fire.

"Smoke was streaming out of the left side of the plane and the back end of the tail area," said Tom Spencer, a employee of the Hertz Rent-A-Car agency. "The engines were just engulfed in flames – the flames were streaming out of there."

Another witness, Mercio Williams, a dispatcher at National Car Rental Service a short distance away, said he saw people sliding down the burning chute and into a wall of flames. He said he saw some passengers push those in front of them down the burning ramp.

"I saw three people that were literally burning," he said.

The National Transportation Safety Board said in Washington it has sent a five-member team headed by board member James B. King to investigate the accident.

Many of the passengers praised the pilot for swerving to avoid the buildings and preventing an even more disastrous accident.

Among the injured was Ross Downing, 76, Denver, Colo. retired Personnel Director of United Press International, who was taken to Torrance Memorial Hospital with fractured vertebrae and a broken ankle. His wife, Inez Downing, 75, was admitted in critical conditions with burns over 80 per cent of her body.

Downing told reporters there was some panic aboard the flight as the plane ground to a halt and listed to the left when the landing gear collapsed.

Downing said he and his wife, who planned a honeymoon in Hawaii after their recent marriage, were in the midsection of the jumbo jet when the pilot yelled, "Everybody get out," over the intercom system.

"We were close to an exit on the right side," he said. "Somebody pushed me off the chute and I hite the wing of the plane and slid off the wing. I ran around the wing to check for my wife.

Stockbridge senators discuss fee increase

By MARTHA KIMBALL
Collegian Staff

Discussion revolved around a proposed hike of $2 per year in the Stockbridge Student Activities fee at the Stockbridge Student Senate meeting last night. The proposal stemmed from a report on last week's Stockbridge Professional Development Day given by Peter Quinlan, chairperson of that committee.

The activities fee increase would be used to offset costs for development day next year. This year, development day cost students over $1000. "I anticipate this figure can be cut back; there must be a limitation in the budget. The money from the proposed hike could all or partly go to development day," said Quinlan.

The fee is preently $65 for seniors and $60.25 for freshman.

The proposed increase must pass the senate, two-thirds of the freshman class, Dean of the Stockbridge School of Agriculture, Dr. John Denison, and the Chancellor's office. Quinlan said that Denison would approve the proposal if it gains student support. During the next week Quinlan will talk with the freshman class and obtain signatures.

According to John Burnett, Senate treasurer, the last fee hike was about four years ago.

The Stockbridge Student Activities fee varies from that paid by four-year undergraduate students. Only the Student Activities tax, Class tax, and Distinguished Visitor Program fees are paid by both Stockbridge and Undergraduate students.

"This is a quality event (development day) and shouldn't be let go down the drain. Students shouldn't mind paying an extra $2 each year for this event," said Joe Perella, freshman fruit and vegetable major.

Other discussion involved a proposal to charge development day exhibitors for display space to help relieve the development day budget. "No one would come for the first initial years if we charged for space. We must give the project a name before we give it a price," responded Quinlan.

Development day proposals for next year included changing development day to October, moving the convention putside to accommodate more demonstrations, and increasing and improving the major club display.

Upcoming Stockbridge activities include Stockbridge Night at The Pub, March 13th; money from the 50 cent cover charge will be donated to the Red Cross. A Progress Banquet will be held March 8th; tickets cost $4 and are available at the Senate office. Blood Donor Day will be March 15th; sign 15 in the Senate office, SU 432.

Atherton talks with Sadat; says peace process 'alive'

TEL AVIV, Israel [AP] – Alfred L. Atherton held "intensive" talks yesterday with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat that he said proved the peace process was still alive. The shuttling American diplomat then flew to Israel.

The assistant secretary of state made no statement after returning to Israel. His spokesman said he would go to Jordan on Friday after talks today with Israeli leaders.

The spokesman, George Sherman, said on arrival in Israel that Atherton brought Egypt's "initial reaction" to the latest Israeli proposals to push forward the difficult negotiations for a declaration of principles that would govern a Middle East settlement.

Major obstacles are the issues of Israeli withdrawal from territory occupied during the 1967 Mideast war and rights for the Palestinians.

Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin has called for resumption of face-to-face talks in military and political committees.

Foreign Minister Mohamed Ibrahim Kamel of Egypt said at a news conference Wednesday that Atherton's current round of mediation and Begin's trip to Washington later this month would have to be completed before reconvening the talks could be considered.

The United States and Israel would like Jordan's King Hussein to join the peace negotiations, but the king insists Israel agree to total withdrawal and self-determination for Palestinians beforehand.

Assessments included on town council agenda

By ARNOLD WARSHAW
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — A proposal to continue taxing Northampton properties at their currently assessed values until a referendum in November determines a standard of assessment for all Bay State communities will be among the topics for discussion when the city council meets tonight.

A reassessment of all properties in the city, at 100 per cent of their market value, took place this year, the first time since 1968.

As it now stands, owners will have to pay the new taxes on their property at the next billing period.

Council member Paul Bixby, who has made the proposal, last night said he is "simply asking the city council to hold off implementing the 100 per cent reevaluation."

Bixby made a similar proposal at the last council meeting two weeks ago, but it was tabled.

All properties are assessed equally, at the present in Massachusetts. That system, which Bixby said has "many inequities," will be changed if the statewide referendum is passed. Industrial, commerical, residential, and agricultural properties will be assessed differently.

Also on the agenda tonight is a recommendation by councilor Frances McNulty to establish an ad hoc committee to review insurance on city buildings.

The council will also take up an amendment which would give police officers the status of City License Commission agents when checking license violations at businesses selling liquor.

This stems from a complaint brought to the License Commission by the owner of a liquor store, challenging the police departments' authority to act on its own.

Russia warned against interference in Africa

WASHINGTON [AP] — The administration stiffened its stand on a new nuclear arms treaty yesterday, warning the Russians against interference in Africa and ruling out major American concessions in the ongoing negotiations.

The warning came from Zbigniev Brzezinski, the U.S. national security adviser, who said, "unwarranted intrusion" into conflict between Ethiopia and Somalia would complicate efforts to work out a new U.S.-Soviet arms treaty and to get it ratified by the Senate.

He also told reporters at a White House breakfast that the United States had nearly reached its limit in making concessions on intercontinental ballistic missiles, long-range bombers and the low-flying American cruise missile.

Differences over the three weapons systems are considered the major obstacle to completing an agreement that President Carter predicted last October "would be ready within a few weeks."

Since then, the negotiations toward a new Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty have slowed down. The Kremlin last Friday expressed deep concern over lack of progress and insisted in a sharply worded statement that Washington accept major restrictions on the cruise missile and other U.S. weapons systems.

Brzezinski said Wednesday the administration had set specific standards on how far it was prepared to compromise with the Russians and that "there is no point in signing an agreement that doesn't meet those standards."

His warning on Africa is the first by an administration official directly linking progress on arms control to Soviet behavior on the Horn of Africa.

"We are not imposing any linkages," Brzezinski said, "but linkages may be imposed by unwarranted exploitation of local conflict for larger international purposes."

The Russians, in an informal alliance with Cuba, have provided weapons and technical military aid to Ethiopia's Marxist government. According to U.S. intelligence estimates there are about 1,000 Russian advisers in Ethiopia along with 10,000 to 11,000 Cuban troops. This aid permitted Ethiopia to repel an attack from Somalia over the disputed Ogaden region and to drive the invaders back toward their border.

The United States has urged the Russians to support efforts to arrange a cease-fire and to persuade Ethiopia not to cross the border.

Women support groups help UMass, area women

By JULIE EAGLE
Collegian Staff

One direction UMass and area women can take if they are unsure or unhappy and need someone to talk to is the myriad of support groups offered by the Everywoman's Center located in Goodell Hall.

The groups provide women with "a chance to get to know each other, learn about women's issues, and discuss common experiences — all in a supportive atmosphere," according to Lyne Schachne, counselor at the center.

Elizabeth Gordon, also a counselor, said the support groups "keep women from being isolated, let them know they're not alone, and that they're not hysterical, neurotic females — everything we've been told we are."

Gordon said participants in the groups learn they are not deficient or incompetent, but "victims of an oppressive, sexists society."

In recent years, Schachne said, the support groups have not been concerned primarily with "consciousness-raising," but with specific directions women can take to help themselves.

She described consciousness-raising as passe', explaining it was something generated from the 1960's and early 70's when the Women's Movement was first beginning and its concepts were "overwhelming to many females."

Schachne added, "now there's much more awareness of oppression and the job is to see what we can do about it."

Topics of discussion vary from one support group to another, Schachne said, but those most often covered include: relationships with men, friendships, feminism, childhood experiences, what it is like to be a girl-woman in today's society, menstruation, sexism in society, lifestyles, competition in academics and relationships and careers.

Schachne pointed out the support groups attract many women in "careers that are predominantly male — engineering, the sciences. There's much sexism within those departments."

Although most women are initially shy about speaking out at support groups, participants end up talking freely because the discussions "are something they came for," Schachne said.

The first one or two support group meetings are facilitated by center employees, but thereafter participants "are on their own," Schachne said. They may choose to follow readings, take trips, or get involved in a variety of related activities, she added. The groups consist of eight to 10 women and initially are held in the Campus Center and then in members' homes.

When the support groups are first formed, moderators try to get participants "to introduce themselves, explain why they came here, what they hope to get out of the experience, and to share their concerns," Schachne said.

A group for divorced women, meets on Wednesdays from 7-9 p.m. Schachne said there is a "definite need" for this group in the Pioneer Valley Community.

Schachne said some of the problems involved in forming support groups are getting people together, finding common evening, and ensuring consistency in attendances. "Groups are hard to start, people come with different interests, and some are not sure of what they're looking for," she said.

"If the group coheses, it will be successful." She said the successfullness of each group depends on the people involved since they eventually run it themselves.

When asked if the Everywoman's Center has any contact with University men's center, Schachne said the only contact has been through Ruth Essenden, a counselor dealing with rape and violence, who has investigated the ways in which men's centers are approaching these issues.

The Everywomen's Center remains a place for women. Schachne explained, "There are not many places where you can deal just with women, where they can come and share their experiences with each other."

Coal battle continues

New emphasis on nukes caused by coal strike

WASHINGTON [Compiled from Wires] — The coal strike put a crimp in President Carter's hopes for increasing coal production and has placed new emphasis on nuclear generated electricity, Energy Secretary James Schlesinger said yesterday.

Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., chairman of the Senate Energy Committee where Schlesinger testified, pointed out the coal supply problems brought about by the strike.

"I do not suggest we abandon coal, but I do think we are going through a rough shakedown period in which more serious attention needs to be given to the nuclear option," Jackson said.

Schlesinger puffed on his pipe and replied, "We, of course, do reflect on the implications of the coal strike. I do not think we have had second thoughts with regard to our determination to move toward coal....

"I must concede, however, the current situation regarding the labor contract inhibits me somewhat in making my usual pitch about moving toward coal."

Schlesinger told Jackson the administration hopes to have a bill before Congress next week for speeding nuclear licensing.

"Nuclear power is a live option, but it should not be a substitute for coal," Schlesinger said.

He estimated the time to build a nuclear plant can be cut from 12 years to seven years. Nuclear plants cost around 50 per cent more than coal plants, but the fuel costs less, Schlesinger said.

He emphasized it is not a matter of choosing one or the other, but a balanced program looking at "a full range of supply options."

Schlesinger said he is still confident Senate energy negotiators can break their deadlock and agree on a natural gas pricing plan that will move comprehensive policy toward completion.

For the time being, he said, President Carter does not want to "get between the House and Senate" by insisting Congress go ahead and pass three parts of his energy program without waiting for the remaining two.

The five parts of Carter's energy proposals have passed both houses in different forms. Bills for energy conservation, industrial conversion to coal, and changes in utility rate procedures have been reconciled by a House-Senate conference committee, but the energy taxes and natural gas price controls are deadlocked in negotiation.

"Little can be done in the absence of some leadership on the part of the president," Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., told Schlesinger.

District leaders took to podiums in union halls and civic auditoriums to brief local leaders and rank-and-file members in such states as West Virginia, Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, and Colorado.

Meanwhile, over television and radio, United Mine Workers President Arnold Miller and other leaders urged ratification when members vote this weekend.

"My name is Arnold Miller," one ad began. "The highlights of the new 1978 contract are the health and retirement benefits that are restored and guaranteed... It's the first time in the history of this union that we've ever had guaranteed benefits. And the wages, I think, are very substantial, equal to and better than any other labor union contract that's been negotiated in the last couple of years."

Other commercials include pleas by UMW Vice President Sam Church; Kenneth Dawes, president of the Illinois UMW district; Herbert Killam, a member of the union's International Executive Board from Indiana; and Joe Duffy.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. — Ron Joiner, 35, one of four United Mine Workers local officials who was allegedly beaten by supporters of the new proposed coal contract. (UPI)

Contract causes fights among coal miners

[UPI] — Striking coal miners argued and brawled among themselves yesterday with most predicting a close vote on a proposal that would reopen the mines and restore energy to the suffering cities of America's midlands.

At Dilles Bottom, Ohio, Cedar Grove W. Va., Springfield, Ill., and elsewhere, local leaders of the United Mine Workers fought over ratification of a proposed contract that would end the nation's longest coal strike and put 160,000 miners back to work.

Tempers flared in the rank and file of the UMW, with the strike in its 86th day and voting scheduled for the weekend.

"I heard about 20 local presidents say they would quit if it is ratified," said Gene Oiler, president of UMW Local 1886 in Meigs County, Ohio. "It will probably pass, but I'm saying this. I don't think it should."

"I don't know how we can live with it," said George Krehel, president of an 850-member local at Kincaid, Ill. "I haven't heard anyone say okay yet."

In Washington, Labor Secretary Ray Marshall said Friday the government is prepared to intervene immediately to end the strike if miners this weekend vote down the tentative settlement.

Marshall told a news conference he and President Carter "will be prepared to do something as early as Monday."

Marshall said the possibility of resuming negotiations between the UMW and the Bituminous Coal Operators Association should the vote fail "would be very slight," explaining "it is clear that we gave the collective bargaining process one big push last week to try to get the settlement."

Marshall said the department has affidavits ready to attest to a national emergency if it has to seek a Taft-Hartley Law back-to-work order.

He said the government assumed miners would obey such an order, adding, "We cannot afford to proceed on any other assumption," he said.

Fists flew at Springfield as local UMW leaders opposed to the contract gathered to meet with union officials lobbying for its ratification.

And at Dilles Bottom in eastern Ohio, a group of pensioned and disabled miners among the 500 members attending a District 6 meeting burned copies of the tentative agreement in the hallway of the district headquarters.

A trio of local union leaders in Springfield said they were assaulted by the bodyguards of UMW officials because of their opposition to the pact.

Ron Joiner, 35, sporting a lump over one eye and cuts on his face, said he was returning to his hotel Tuesday night with Richard Bartolotti, 35, and his brother, Gary Bartolotti, 26, when "these guys jumped my two buddies."

"One has a bad arm. They had him down and were stomping him. I reached in to help him and then I got kicked around pretty good."

Charged with battery Wednesday were John Cox, reportedly a personal bodyguard to UMW District 12 President Kenneth Dawes, a strong supporter of the new contract; Gerald Hawkins, legislative lobbyist for the district, and union members James Poe and Vollie Bishop.

The younger Bartolotti said Cox and Hawkins "were there, watching the guys beat the hell out of us."

A local union official, conceding there was no proof Dawes was responsible, said the three were attacked because they had been "very outspoken against the contract."

News in Brief

Park's testimony may be damaging

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A House ethics committee member said yesterday he believes Korean rice merchant Tongsun Park has already told the panel enough to make possible disciplinary trouble for some members of Congress.

Although Park himself said he had sprung "no surprises so far" in his secret House testimony on alleged Capitol Hill bribery schemes, Rep. Bruce Caputo, R-N.Y., said the indicted millionaire is starting to get into some sensitive areas.

"I don't think anything has risen to the level of expulsion (from Congress)," Caputo said, "but the other penalties, and they are many — reprimands, censures, suspensions of voting privileges — I think could apply to some of the things we've heard about."

He declined to estimate how many members might face such penalties.

So far, only one politician — former Rep. Richard Hanna, DCalif. — has been indicted, along with Park and Korean businessman Hancho Kim in connection with the alleged Capitol Hill payoff operation.

Cuban influence increasing in UN

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Cuba has become an increasingly influential diplomatic force at the United Nations in the years since it began sending troops, technicians and doctors around the world.

Unlike its controversial military involvement in black Africa, beginning with Angolan civil war in 1976, Cuba's role at the United Nations is drawing little adverse response from diplomats, and often, its activities here are admired by other delegations.

"Unquestionably, Cuba is an important leader of the nonaligned bloc and a constructive force at the United Nations," says Nigerian Ambassador Leslie O. Harriman.

"A tip of my hat for their single-minded pursuit of Third World leadership," says a Guatemalan envoy.

An American official whose main responsibility is to deal with Cuba and other Latin American countries says the Cubans are "well informed, diligent professionals who do their homework. They are extraordinarily active and talented."

Coffee prices boost grocery bills 60%

[AP] — Boosted by coffee, grocery bills have risen almost 60 per cent in the past five years, with prices going up nearly 2 per cent during February alone, an Associated Press market-basket survey shows.

Although coffee prices have declined slightly since last spring, the average cost of a pound of the brew at the start of March was still about 3½ times higher than it was five years ago.

The AP drew up a random list of 15 food and non-food items and priced them at one supermarket in each of 13 cities on March 1, 1973. The prices have been rechecked on or about the start of each succeeding month.

USSR constructs railroad in Siberia

URGAL, U.S.S.R. [AP] — The Soviet Union is building a 2,000-mile railroad across seven mountain ranges and vast stretches of permafrost in northern Siberia that in the next few years will open up one of the world's richest regions in natural resources.

Into an area plagued by earthquakes and mudslides, where the winters can last almost nine months with temperatures dropping to 76 degrees below zero, the Soviets are pouring tens of thousands of workers and billions of dollars.

Crew battles wreckage; gas to reach tanker

YOUNGSTOWN, Fla. (UPI) — A disaster crew, fighting a dangerous cloud of chlorine gas and wary of "another Waverly," began clearing away railroad cars Wednesday in a bid to reach a tanker of volatile propane buried in a derailment.

The crew was working at the site of Sunday's 43-car train wreck that loosed a "death cloud" of chlorine gas which killed eight people.

Workmen donned gas masks because wind shifts kept moving around a a cloud of the gas still haging over the area. "The masks go on and off, depending on the wind," said James Littell of the Environmental Protection Agency's Atlanta office.

"You can't stay out at the scene very long without a gas mask," added EPA official Al Smith. "The chlorine fumes are so bad it makes it pretty rough. It's an egg-shaped cloud and it's just hanging there in a fog."

The tank car containing the chlorine gas was hauled to pit Tuesday and the gas dumped into a neutralizer, but some additional gas either escaped during the moving of the car, or got loose when the cr was emptied.

It was this gas cloud that plagued workmen trying to reach the propane tanker yesterday.

Smith said workers were taking every precaution in trying to reach the buried propane tanker because "we don't want another Waverly." He referred the explosion of a propane tank car at Waverly, Tenn., last Friday that killed 12 persons.

Smith said seven or eight cars were piled atop the propane tanker, "and it's almost literally buried. Everything is just totally mangled."

The economic impact of the Sunday derailment of the Atlanta and St. Andrews Bay Railroad train already is being felt in nearby Panama City. The International Paper Co., which depends on the rail line to deliver pulpwood, laid off 100 of its 950 workers Tuesday because it didn't havfoiohrials tokeep all its mills operating.

An estimated 2,000 to 3,500 people were ordered out of a 140 square mile area around the wreck site Sunday and the railroad put 700 of them in four motels at Panama City Beach. Officials said the motels and meals are costing the railroad over $9,000 a day.

Treaty critics lose again

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Treaty critics lost a third straight bid to amend the Panama Canal treaties yesterday but showed slightly increased strength in their fight against ratification.

By a vote of 56 to 38, the Senate tabled, and thus sidetracked, an amendment by Sen. James Allen, D-Ala., which would have permitted the United States to station troops in Panama in time of war even after it relinquishes any control over the waterway in the year 2000.

Like previous amendments defeated Monday and Tuesday, this one would surely have proved unacceptable to Panama and thus would have killed the treaties.

"We keep on winning 'em," quipped Robert Beckel, a White House congressional liaison man.

But the 38 votes mustered by anti-treaty senators on this amendment was four more than they had Monday, when a similar Allen amendment went down 55 to 34.

The 38 amendment votes cannot be translated into probable votes against ratification, but if that total were to harden it would represent more than enough to block approval.

Because ratification requires a two-thirds supporting vote, only 34 "no" votes would kill the treaties even if all 100 senators participated.

The support rounded up by the anti-treaty side for the troop-stationing amendment represented an even bigger improvement over the showing they made Monday, when the Senate rejected another complicating amendment 69 to 24.

The pro-treaty side won a firm convert Wednesday, however, when Sen. Thomas McIntyre, D-N.H., announced he will vote for ratification despite heavy pressure from "the bully boys of the radical New Right" in New Hampshire.

McIntyre's announcement brought to 55 the number of senators listed as favoring the treaties in a UPI tally. That poll now shows 26 senators opposed and 19 undecided.

Senate leaders say they now count 61 votes for ratification.

Dollar drops; US criticized

United Press International

The dollar plunged to record lows against major world currencies yesterday before massive central bank support pushed it sharply higher in a "chaotic" market that brought strong criticism of U.S. policy from abroad.

In Bonn and in Zurich, where according to one dealer early trading was "completely out of hand," the dollar fell by the hour.

A tourist wanting to exchange dollars for Swiss francs got 1.84 Swiss francs for one dollar on Tuesday afterernoon but only 1.74 francs for the same dollar yesterday morning. Six years ago one dollar brought 4.33 Swiss francs.

The same thing happened in West Germany, where the value of the dollar fell below 2 marks for the first time in history.

"There is no confidence in the dollar, or in the American promises to support it," a German banker said.

The Carter Administration has been the subject of a mounting chorus of criticism from abroad for its failure to support the dollar. Many analysis say Washington is deliberately ignoring the dollar's plight to force West Germany and Japan to inflate their economies.

Women who love women

To the Editor:

Julie Melrose's editorial in Tuesday's Collegian, "Choosing Up Sides", misses the point in discussing the differences between lesbians and heterosexual women in the women's movement.

All women have much in common, and much to gain through working together. This working together cannot come, however, at the expense of denying our differences, or refusing to examine the implications of our different positions under patriarchy and capitalism. A women's movement which does not challenge itself around the issues of race, class and heterosexual privilege will never accomplish much — and challenge means hard work: examining our privileges, being honest with ourselves and changing ourselves and others.

The issue between lesbians and heterosexual women is not, as Julie presents it, lesbians' irrational dislike and mistrust of heterosexual women. The issue is heterosexual privilege and how heterosexual women choose to deal — or not deal — with it. Challenging heterosexual privilege requires understanding, for women, what they gain by identifying themselves as heterosexual. If you need to understand what heterosexual privilege consists of, try being a lesbian for a week. Tell your boss, your teachers, your friends and your family that you are a lesbian. Walk down the street or around campus with your arm around another woman, try and dance with a woman in a straight bar, try to get your woman lover covered by your insurance policy which does cover spouses — but not lesbian ones. Understanding also means not saying that "lesbians are women who have found that relationships with men just don't meet their needs" or that lesbians "opt for a lesbian lifestyle because they view traditional heterosexual relationships as destructive and masochistic for women." LESBIANS ARE WOMEN WHO LOVE WOMEN — as bravely and proudly as is possible in a society which does its best to deny women the joy and strength of being committed to the woman in ourselves and to other women.

Until heterosexual women can face up to the implications of their own decisions, stop being defensive about their choices and make efforts to understand their privileges, communication will be difficult between lesbians and heterosexual women. It is not the role of the lesbian in the women's movement to reassure the heterosexual woman that her choice is ok, or politically correct, anymore than it is the role of the third world woman to reassure the white woman, or the working class woman to reassure the middle or upper class woman.

"Traitors" to the women's movement are those women who refuse to question their privileges — as heterosexuals, as white women, as middle or upper class women. This questioning and challenging is the basis of feminism and essential to the liberation of women.

No Miners Sellout in '78

To the Editor:

Last Friday night, Pres. Carter announced that an agreement had been reached between coal operators and the United Mine Workers bargaining council. But the strike is far from over. The next ten day ratification period ending with a vote by rank and file miners will be the time of the most intense struggle since the strike began. Miners will be scrutinizing that contract making sure that the main demand is met, the Right to Strike.

In spite of threats by Pres. Carter to enact the Taft-Hartley Act if the miners don't exercise their "democratic right and vote yes," thousands of miners are standing firm and saying no sellout in '78! The past couple of days have been marked by rallies in Detroit, Indiana, and So. Illinois, where 2,000 rallied against the contract. And it's not just the miners who are standing up. Workers all around the country are sending letters and donations of support. Students, led by the RCYB, took over a building at Purdue University in support of the Miners strike when the administration shut down the university due to "lack of energy because of the strike."

This week is a crucial time for all to support the miners in this battle between labor and capital. A letter of support is being circulated for all to sign, and donations are being collected. This Sat., March 4, a demonstration is being called by the Nat'l United Workers Organization at Eastern Coal and Gas, Boston. A truck loaded with petitions, money donations, and canned goods will be sent off to join a car caravan from various cities in the east coast. They will be met in West Virginia by a rally of striking miners.

This is the time for active support. Anyone interested in attending this demonstration can contact the Revolutionary Communist Youth Brigade at our table in the CC, or call

Meaningful rewards for RA's

To the Editor:

As concerned Heads of Residence, we wish to respond to the misconceptions fostered by the cartoon which appeared in the February 16 Collegian. While we recognize student concerns about the rising cost of education, we feel it is unfair to direct their frustrations toward their peers who are the lowest paid, most overworked yet most valuable paraprofessional employees in the residence hall system.

Even an abbreviated R.A. job description underscores the many and diverse services provided to the dormitory residents by this staff. Resident Assistants and Assistant Heads of Residence are trained and expected to perform in the following areas: Personal peer counseling, crisis intervention, referrals, alcohol and peer sex education, human awareness training and programming, damage identification and control, enforcement of house discipline policies, administrative tasks such as key control, inventories, room assignments, etc., and opening doors for locked-out students. They present workshops, colloquia and films, and they provide continuity for house governing bodies. They must attend weekly staff meetings and participate in on-going training. They provide duty coverage for their houses which alone constitutes from twelve to sixty hours per week.

If the University is to respond to the basic question of salary-job expectation parity, the issue of real loss of services to dorm residents must be addressed. It should be made equally clear that Heads of Residence, who presently work 60-85 hours per week, cannot assume the additional burdens inherent in a cutback in R.A. service delivery.

In order to provide a meaningful context for a discussion of the role of the residence hall staff, it is clear that the role of dormitory living must be examined in depth. The costs for the residence hall system services must be clearly articulated. It is obvious that residence hall staff are caught in a conflict between demands of residents and expectations of the institution.

In view of the considerations we have listed we feel that the following points must be given real consideration by students and administrators:

1] Parity between hour involvement in the position and renumeration must be reached.

2] A realistic job expectation for house staff must be promulgated, based on clear articulation of the mission of the residence hall system.

3] Resident students must understand that the people holding staff positions have their own lives to lead, and that they are employed by the University. These are jobs and not ways of life.

4] Training for R.A.'s must be improved. R.A.'s returning to the position should not be subjected to the same level of training year after year. There should be a sequence of training designed to increase the R.A.-A.H.R.'s skill and maximize their value to the institution. Additionally, R.A.-A.H.R.'s should be given some type of merit increase for demonstrated experience and skills.

5] "Alternative rewards" must be examined with care. It is obvious that academic crediit for mandatory training is of limited value to students already taking a full or over academic load in their discipline.

6] Meaningful rewards for the position must be offered. A single room is not a meaningful reward.

Other University employees are not "rewarded" with a space in which to do their jobs, such as an office, classroom, etc. Monetary rewards are clearly what is appropriate, whether this takes the form of tuition waivers, board or room rebate, or increased direct renumeration. The argument that any increase would require direct student funding is unsound. If that is the case, the students should directly determine those services they are willing to fund. If the University recognizes that the positions are of value to the institution, it should be charged with uncovering sources of funding.

More Senate inconsistencies

To the Editor:

Last semester a button was circulating the campus with the inscription "Let the Students Decide". The intent of the button was to convey the sentiment that a majority of students should dictate the direction of money and policies at UMass.

Yet, one student, former Speaker of the Student Senate Brian DeLima, consistently disregards the plural use of the word student and instead has embarked on a one person rampage to reorganize the SGA into his own personal fiefdom.

Recently, without any prior discussion or consultation with the Student Organizing Project [SOP], DeLima blustered a motion through the Budgets Committee and then the Senate which deleted the third full time position from SOP.

He did this only a few days before the position was to be filled.

DeLima argued it was too late in the semester to fill the position and that instead the money could be used to employ students.

On the surface DeLima's motion and arguments seemed responsible and well thought. However, when the motion is examined in a full context the "responsible" becomes self-serving and the "well thought" actually becomes twisted logic.

On December 6 the Advocacy Services Sub-Committee, of which DeLima is a member, unanimously made the hiring of a third person a number one priority. In turn, the Senate passed by voice vote the Sub-Committee's report calling of SOP to continue its search.

Acting on the Sub-Committee's mandate the Project commenced with a search which, until the motion was passed, incured over $750 worth of expenses.

When questioned about his sudden reversal on the subject, DeLima blithely replied, "better late than never".

If there had been serious reservations surrounding whether SOP should have filled the third position, the discussion should have been conducted during December in order that careful thought and consideration could have taken place. And, if at that time it was decided students should be hired, a comprehensive program could have been designed, thus maximizing students abilities. Now, because of his ill-conceived agenda, students doing organizing will be without adequate direction or training.

It would seem reasonable to assume the best way to approach Mr. DeLima about his contradictory behavior would be through rational, mature discussions. However, it is somewhat difficult to converse maturely with an individual who threatens to punch other students in the nose because he does not agree with what they are saying. To his credit, DeLima later said he would not have really punched the other student, he was just making a point. Unfortunately, this type of adolescent behavior is more the norm than the unusual with DeLima.

Without doubt, DeLima will feel compelled to write a searing response to this letter. And I for one, do not wish to engage in a letter writing debate in the Collegian. Instead I invite any member of the student body to come by and talk with me in Rm. 426 Student Union and I will document my charges of DeLima's inconsistencies and questionable motives.

I trust that students will hold his impending rebuttal to equal scrutiny. I dare say will find him lacking, as I already have.

All in

By BILL RIORDAN

There are political of every groups of every shade and style imaginable in this country, but an unusual one attracted my attention last week. This one isn't Marxist or Maoist, socialist or capitalist, left or right or up or down. It is the Animal Liberation Front and it has struck at university laboratories and biological institutes in various parts of the Midwest.

Their aim is stated in their name: the release from captivity of animals, mainly the type used for biological experiments, which the A.L.F. considers inhumane and an offense to the rights of living things. It's the innocent simplicity of this mission of the A.L.F. that amuses and intrigues me. At the least, it's a refreshing brand of radicalism, it seems, especially today when the more radical a political group strives to be the more commonplace and unimaginative it becomes.

Though I sympathize with the A.L.F. in all its reverence for living things, I must attribute to the group a bit of childlike naivete. Though laboratory experiments are carried out in the most humane way possible, suffering, if you believe animals experience suffering, and it is quite apparent they do, is an inevitable aspect of operations and tests performed on rats, chickens, monkeys, etc. However, the knowledge gained through biological experimentation on non-human animals is regularly applied towards improving the quality of life of people in the form of new medicines and operative techniques. The zeal of the A.L.F. is noble, if not a little misplaced. And there is one undeniably negative consequence: illegally releasing laboratory animals results in the destruction of costly, time-consuming, and beneficial experiments.

In the psychology and zoology departments of UMass, thousands of animals are

Pierpont

To the Editor:

We the people in Pierpont are being unjustly harassed and taken advantage of by the University administration.

Southwest administration has decided to single out Pierpont and limit residency to freshman and sophomores only. This means that anyone who does not fall into this category will be forced out — dissolving what we consider to be "our home." We have put a tremendous amount of energy and effort in making Pierpont our "HOME." This is where our friends are. Pierpont is where our "roots" lie. Pierpont is where we want to live. We are responsible people seeking an education like everybody else here at UMas .

Marceau, meaning and money

Marcel Marceau
and his Partner
Pierre Verry
Presented by Ronald A. Wilford
UMass Fine Arts Center
February 24, 1978

Reviewed by JANIE PORTNOY

If silence is golden, then Marcel Marceau has the Midas touch. The problem with his performance on Friday night, however, was that he simply didn't touch us enough.

Marceau grossly cheated his devoted fans with a minimal performance that existed largely on his reputation as "the greatest living pantomimist."

The two-part show consisted of six sketches from Marceau's repertoire of Style Pantomimes and five sketches of Bip Pantomimes (Bip is a clown character created by Marceau as his alter ego -- the "Ziggy" of mime, with a red flower in his top hat).

The program opened with Pierre Verry's presentation of a card entitled "The Fisherman." Mr. Verry did a splendid job as Marcel Marceau's Presentor of Cards throughout the show.

The opening music faded out and the lights came up on Mr. Marceau. "The Fisherman" was short and pleasant. Marceau's hands holding, and simultaneously being the slimy, quivering creatures, was finely executed.

"The Painter" was quite humorous as Mr. Marceau mimed an Ed Norton-type artist, hesitatingly approaching his canvas. After applying the first spot of paint, he became so involved with his creative endeavor, that rapid foot stomping accompanied each and every stroke of the brush.

The interesting thing about Marcel Marceau's pantomimes is that each act, no matter how simple, has a plot and all the other requisites of a finely constructed story. He doesn't just 'do' a scene, he 'constructs' it with minute details and meticulous planning.

For example, in "The Angel," Marceau plays an angel who falls to earth only to face all of the tempestuous desires of the common earthling.

Differing light intensities and spiritual music encumbered by static let us know that he has entered a storm.

With arms flailing and lights flickering, the angel hits the earth and disposes of his broken wings. Festive, renaissance-like music begins. As the angel succumbs to the offer of an alcoholic beverage, the spiritual music returns just short of the glass reaching his lips.

And so it goes, with the festivities and heavenly servitude tearing him apart. Paradoxically, the devil takes over. The angel begins to drink, fight, and make love (all the fun stuff that angels can't do).

A clap of thunder and flashing red light signify punishment, and the angel regains his flight.

The remarkable aspect of Marceau's pantomimes is that they are successful, using only the raw materials of a little Frenchman, a stage, and special effects. The props are handed to our imaginations on a silver platter by Mr. Marceau himself.

My favorite of the Style Pantomimes is "The Maskmaker." Marceau smears on and wipes off changing faces characteristic of varying moods.

Stricken with the dilemma of a happy face that won't come off, Marceau's struggle at tugging the mask is superb. Picture if you will, his real face with a ghastly smile that we perceive as a mask that won't come off!

Marceau's face remains grin-ridden as he acts out embarassment, frustration and even tears.

After the intermission (which came unexpectedly too soon), we met Bip. Alas, Bip only did five acts for us, and was gone before we got to know him.

These characterizations included "Bip looks for a Job." "Bip commits Suicide," "Bip at a Social Party," and what I enjoyed most, "Bip plays David and Goliath."

By simply walking behind a vertical board, Mr. Marceau rapidly interchanged from the demure to the powerful, having the semblance of a quick-change magician, rather than as a pantomimist.

"Bip as a Soldier" was rather disappointing.. Although Marceau's portrayal was done with his usual finesse, the act had a depressing ending, whereby concluding the performance on a downbeat.

The soldier's poignant, yet futile attempt at buttoning his full length coat (unevenly every time) amused the audience. He inevitably encounters battle, and the show ends with his outstreched hand lingering upward as marching sounds bring the lights to fade.

What really upset me was how a respected artist like Marcel Marceau begged for a standing ovation. It seemed as though the lights would continue to flicker and he would remain on stage, until the audience rose, having the crass effect of an applause sign in a television studio.

I wanted to love Marcel Marceau's performance. Honest. It was a good show, but the flaws were too prevalent to ignore.

For one thing, he didn't do enough. Also, his act would have been more effective in a smaller setting. Marceau's facial expressions are extremely important in order to comprehend the pantomimes. Anyone sitting beyond the fifth section was severely hindered.

However, a smaller seating arrangement wouldn't have brought in the money needed to pay Mr. Marceau. But, what's money to an artist, right Mr. Marceau?...Mr. Marceau? Ah yes. Silence is golden.

The uncommon Common Womon

By LAUREN J. TRAUB

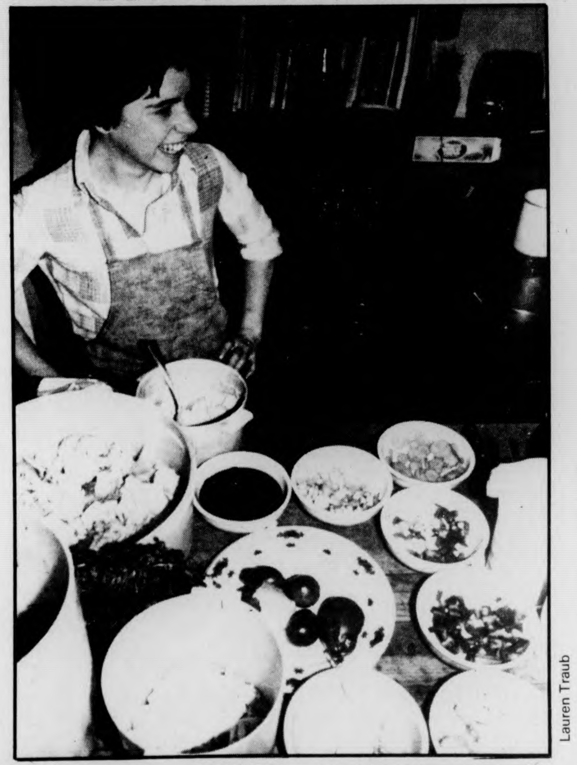
The Common Womon at 78 Masonic St. in Northampton is a membership club open to all women and dedicated to "exploring feminism and vegetarianism". It is run by a collective of six women who equally share in the ownership and work of serving the vegetarian menu. Members pay annual dues of $5.00 or whatever they can comfortably afford to pay and dues can be paid in cash or bartered for by doing odd-jobs around the club. No woman is turned away for financial reasons. Non-member women can be invited as guests of members or of the workers if they want to try the club out before joining. The members of the collective feel that eliminating waitresses by having diners place their own orders at a counter and bus their own dishes eliminates the oppression usually associated with this position, and members are encouraged to donate the money they would have used to tip a waitress instead for the continuation and support of the club. They also feel it is important for workers to have control over their work place, and since the owners and the workers are the same people, management policies and procedures are decided by consensus with each member of the collective having an equal vote

The women who started the restaurant just a little over a year ago decided that the area needed a place for women to be able to get together and explore womanhood. They wanted a space where women would be encouraged to appreciate themselves and others as women, and felt that making it open just to women would relieve some of the pressures and expectations that society has regading women. Although some will be tempted to label the club's policy "discriminatory", the founders make an analogy of their policy with affirmative action programs, where society attempts to equalize a long-standing inequality by bending a little farther in the opposite direction. And ironically, the club is located a pebble's throw from those two clubs that are impenetrable bastions of male separatism, the Elks and the Masons.

Lauren Traub



Lauren Traub

As for the vegetarian policy of the club, the collective feels that plant products make more efficient use of the sun's energy than animals, which are nigher up in nature's food chain. Animals must consume quantities of grain that could more efficiently be turned directly into food for humans. And since animals are higher up in the chain, they are felt to concentrate higher levels of chemical and pesticide toxins in their tissues. The collective also feels that animal slaughter is a violent act, and that eating red meat ties in with the "red-blooded, meat and potatoes" value system which is so anti-thetical to a peaceful egalitarian society.

The club itself is in a former house next to the Nutcracker Karate School and has an unobtrusive wooden sign over the door that you wouldn't notice unless you were looking for it. The front porch was recently renovated in a pleasant reading lounge by members of the club and community who volunteered their efforts. About 50 people can be seated in the three adjoining rooms that make up the dining room and the low ceilings and decorated walls lend a warm and literal homeyness. The walls are used to good advantage with the changing monthly exhibits by local women artists. Recorded background music is mainly, but not exclusively written or performed by women, and the club is a distributor for Olivia Records, a women's recording company.

The counter where diners write and pay for their orders juts into one room and the whole kitchen is open to view as if to say "we keep no secrets from our guests". Menus change daily and each one is headed by the amusing acronym; Feminist Offering of Oral Delights. The new (since January) menu format includes a couple of seafood dishes, a few crepes, and usually regular house specialties of eggplant parmesan, lasagna with white of whole wheat noodles and a quiche-type dish like spinach ricotta pie. The fish dish might be perch, filet of sole almondine, or baked stuffed scallops, and crepes may include one like broccoli -mushroom, crabmeat-avocado, or the ever-popular cheese-onion-herb crepe.

One crepe was extremely impressive in its innovativeness. The almond-nut crepe is a thin crisp whole wheat (as are all others) crepe filled with a spiced almond, walnut, and ricotta cheese filling and topped with a cranberry relish redolent of orange. It is seldom that such an original and unusual type of dish is found in a commercial establishment.

Salads, whole grain breads, garlickly hummus, and homemade onion soup are offered daily, and egg rolls, cream of butternut squash soup in the winter, and fresh fruit pies in the spring are some the the eagerly awaited specials. Homemade apple crisp, Indian pudding, yogurty-cream cheese pie, and fruit crepes with honey maple sauce have established legendary reputations as desserts of the club. Everything is homemade or baked and few selections include white flour or sugar. Prices of entrees are three or four dollars which is certainly reasonable for the quality ingredeints and tender care put into the food.

Sundays are special at the Common Womon because of the brunch menu featuring their famous homefries and because, Sunday evenings a visiting guest cook from inside or outside the club prepares a special dinner. Latin, Italian, Greek, Indian, Mexican, and Chinese feasts have resulted in the past. After dinner a cultural event open to all women is held, and films, poetry readings, concerts, discussions, and dances are not uncommon.

Since the closing of the Valley Women's Union and the Lesbian Gardens recently, The common Womon has become the only exclusively women's space in the area. The women who run the club had little or no restaurant experience before, and are rapidly learning how to provide better and better vegetarian meals in an atmosphere that feeds the body and the head.

Zora Neale Hurston: A Literary Biography
By Robert E. Hemenway
Forward by Alice Walker
University of Illinois Press

Reviewed by ZOË BEST

Zora Neale Hurston's portrait on the cover of Robert E. Hemenway's biography reveals pride. In the foreword, Alice Walker asserts her pride as a black woman and as a writer in Hurston's legacy, not withstanding her anti-civil rights stance in the final decades of her life and the atrophying of her literary work to a "reactionary, static, shockingly misguided and timid" state. Why? "Being broke made all the difference." So before we read one page of the biography, we are well on our way to being absorbed by the very questions that sent Hemenway on an eight year-30,000 mile quest. With dedication he collected the remaining matter of her life from letters, manuscripts, published and unpublished, known and obscure; from clippings, photos and interviews with relatives, her two ex-husbands, patrons, friends and enemies. Knot by knot he unraveled the mesh of her life and literature like Zora Neale Hurston pursued documenting tradition and art from her all-black hometown of Eatonville, Florida, from the jooks of Polk County in the Everglades, from the followers of Marie Leveau in New Orleans, the voodoo societies of Haiti and the maroon villages of Jamaica.

The cover photograph was taken by Carl Van Vechten who received a dedication from Hurston in Tell My Horse (1937). He gave "integrated" uptown parties knowing that to his associates this was the same as "a safari into an exotic jungle." Though not to Harlem, the recent commercializes T.V. presentation of Roots took viewers on another version of a safari—and they lived happily ever after emancipation. Hemenway cites that Richard Wright, Sterling Brown and others felt that Zora Neale Hurston, whether aware of it or not, was chauffering a white audience into the black south and Caribbean without revealing the daily occurances stemming from the destructive and expoitative vestiges of slavery. It is true that she did not select from any number of real events she knew of to be included in her stories or novels. Hemenway ponders, "Nowhere in Miles And Men was there a discussion of the stories told in Eatonville of the Ocoee riot of November 1920. Only a few miles away, in a scene well remembered by the community, black people had been denied their voting rights; when some protested, a white mob had burned and killed. One victim, July Perry, became legendary by defending his family and property, killing two white men before he was lynched and left swinging from a telephone pole beside the road to Eatonville."

Concurrently we learn from Hemenway's additive procession of revelations that avoids adhering to a linear chronology, the basis for concurring with Alice Walker, among many, that Zora Neale Hurston set lifestyle precedents as a woman and made literary advances as a folklorist and artist. As an anthropologist she conducted field research, usually alone, and by traveling countless dirt roads in her racy red Chevrolet. In Harlem she smokes on the streets, she displayed verbal improvisation— lying sessions even in Park Avenue apartments, she wore pants in public, she was the first black woman to enroll in Barnard, she collaborated with Boas and Hersknvitz, and unlike her contemporaries partaking in and making the Harlem Renaissance, like Arna Bontemps who was removed from Louisiana by one generation, "Hurston was not one generation removed...she was Eatonville." She was known to be a brilliant raconteur. She had style that turned heads—"when I set my hat at a certain angle and saunter down Seventh Avenue, Harlem City, feeling as snooty as the lions in front of the Forty-second Street library." All this opened doors for her at a time when 200,000 people were amassed in Harlem, scraping and hustling during a depression. In the midst of doing anthropological research she wrote. Jonah's Gourd Vine (1934) making public the idiom of her father's preaching. Language and metaphor resound,

"From the stroke of the master's axe
One angel took the flinches of God's eternal power
And bled the veins of the earth
One angel that stood at the gate with a flaming sword
Was so well pleased with power
Until he pierced the moon with his sword
And she ran down in blood
And de sun
Batted her fiery eyes and put on her judgement robe
And laid down in de cradle of eternity
And rocked herself into sleep and slumber...."

In this first novel, like many of her other works, she includes a glossary to help her readers translate.

Folktales, hoodoo and work songs with music appeared in Miles And Men (1935). Most of her material came from Eatonville. "As early as I could remember it was the habit of the men folks particularly to gather on the store porch of evening and swap stories. Even the women folks would stop and break a breath with them at times. As a child when I was sent down to Joe Clarke's store, I'd drag out my leaving as long as possible in order to hear more." From south Florida she gathered material from sawmill and field workers in the jooks. She transcribed verses to the song, "Ella Wall"and let the woman speak for herself before a switchblade fight ensued with another woman, "I'm raggedy, but right; patchey but tight; stringy, but I will hang on." Black women and all women must note and appreciate how Hurston shapes her women, how she presents them and how she composes striking metaphors relying on the strength and intelligence of her sisters.

In Their Eyes Were Watching God (1937), Janie like Zora made it to the storefront porch. Janie's grandmother, anny, "her head and face looked like standing roots of some old tree" explains why she didn't make it to the porch: "Ah was born back due in slavery so it wasn't for me to fulfill my dreams of whut a woman oughta be and to do. Dat's one of de hold-backs of slavery. But nothing can't stop you from wishin'. You can't beat nobody down so low till you can rob 'em of they will. Ah didn't want to be used for a work-ox and a brood-sow and Ah didn't want mah daughter used dat way neither. It sho wan't mah will for thing to happen lak they did. Ah even hated de way ou was born. But, all de same Ah said thank God, Ah got another chance. Ah wanted to preach a great sermon about colored women sittin' on high, but they wasn't no pulpit for me." Nanny explains how Janie's mother had been raped and had fled after Janie's birth. She concludes her session with Janie by expressing her dream, "Ah wanted you to look upon yo'self. Ah don't want you' feathers always crumpled by folks thrown' up things in yuo' face. And Ah can't die easy thinkin' mabe de men folks, white or black is makin' a spit cup outa you."

Janie Starks in Thier Eyes Were Watching God did not let Nany down. She maintained a real and positive image and exercised intelligence, flexibility and sensitivity. While Hemenway does not stress these aspects of her works, he does pay her respect by analyzing the dominant metaphors of the book. Like Hurston would want a critic to, he traces them through Janie's three marriages. He notes the "surrealistic scene, startling in a realistic novel,"of the ceremonial burial of a mule. He defends Hurston, "Some commentators have criticized this scene for being and imposition of folklore on the narrative; but it is as natural for buzzards to speak as for bees to pollinate flowers...." Again Hemenway does not underscore the significance of this on today's literature. The elements that Hurston fused in her literature are now utilized commonly by black writers and recently we have found myth, lore and verbal art in Toni Morrison's Song Of Solomon and in A Rainbow For The Christian West by Rene Depestre of Haiti, we see voodoo and revolution vibrate miraculously.

Janie revolutionizes the stereotype of black women. She leaves the secure existence of being a mayor's wife-widow and storekeeper with property to hook up with Tea Cake who is much younger. In Richard Wright's novels, flight is a pattern -- from slavery, from north to south, from the communist party in American Hunger and finally decides on his own, to Paris. It is significant that Hurston has Jane Stark leave property, prestige and social determinants to head further south with Tea Cake and to work and reside with migrants in the sawmill camps. Hemenway in a note mentions that there is an unpublished three act play written with Dorothy Waring in a Yale library, "Polk County: A Comedy of Negro Life in a Sawmill Camp" with authentic Negro music. In Her Eyes Were Watching God, Hurston's description of these workers and work rhythms is poetry:

"The brief, but infinitely graceful, dance of body and axe-head as it lifts over the head in a fluid arc, dances in air and rushes down to bite into the tree, all in beauty. Where the logs march into the mill with its smokestacks disputing with the elements, its boiler room reddening the sky, and its great circular saw screaming as it attacks the tree like a lion, making its kill."

Janie sees life and death but not tragedy. Hurston believed that tragedy gave rise to self-pity, which she despised. Janie loves the jook houses like Hurston did herself. Nothing north could compare, a jook house was "a fun house, where they sing, dance, gamble, love, and compose 'blues' songs incidentally." When proletarianization of the literature was being debated, Hurston put it into practice. At a time when renaissance artists and celebrities were making round trips between Harlem and Europe, Hurston's movements were always southward. Even looking for Africa, she remained on this side of the Atlantic. Many of her contemporaries did not think of looking to Africa.

Tell My Horse (1939) significantly reveals what no writer had yet accomplished -- because previously they had been white and could not get to the places or win the confidence of hougans in Haiti and maroon societies in Jamaica. Hemenway misses the potential impact of this book. He writes, "it did not sell well. It is Hurston's poorest book, chiefly because of its form." Even though Hurston did not get a PhD. from this book, she has provided a storehouse of literature and material that today still has not been utilized to its fullest. Hurston herself incorporated ritual, ceremony, lore, dance and song from her Caribbean field research in various plays, concerts, and performances. In Dust Tracks On A Road (1942), her autobiography, she tells of her efforts to share her findings from Haiti and Jamaica with those who ostensibly wanted their art forms to be authentically black. "On my return to New York in 1932, after trying vainly to interset others, I introduced Bahaman songs and dances to a New York audience at the John Golden Theater, and both the songs and dances took on.. I aimed to show what beauty and appeal there was in genuine Negro material, as against the Broadway concept." She continues, "The dances aroused a tremendous interest in primitive Negro dancing. Hall Johnson took my group to appear with his singers at the Lewisohn Stadium that summer and built his 'Run Lil' Chillum' around them and the religious scene from my concert, "From Sun to Sin." That was not all, the dramatized presentation of Negro work-songs in that same concert aroused interest in them and they have been exploited by singers ever since."

Appendixed to Mules and Men, throughout her novels and Tell My Horse, we find songs with music. "I had collected a mass of work songs, blues, spirituals in the course of my years of research. Offering them to two Negro composers and having them refuse on the grounds that white audiences would not listen to anything but highly arranged spirituals, I decided to see if it was true... And any musician, I don't care if he stayed at a conservatory until his teeth were gone and he smelled like old folks, could never eien approach what those untrained singers could do. Let The People Sing was and is my motto...." Again from Hemenway's notes we learn that in 1947 she reviewed Katherine Dunham's Journey To Accompong which providee Dunham findings from Haiti for her dance, costuming and choregraphy.

Hemenway unravels the controversy knotting Zora Neale Hurston's life. He articulates the debate and theory behind the artist-propagandists conflict among the Harlem Reniassance camps. He documents that Hurston plagerized from a book in preparing for an article about Cudjo Lewis, the last known survivor, at that time, of African slaves brought to the United States in 1859. In Dust Tracks On The Road, Hurston summarizes his life and her book length unpublished manuscript, on Cudjo Lewis, "Barracoon", is at Howard University. We cannot join in Hemenway's speculations until this manuscript is published. In bits and pieces we learn how Hurston helped fellow folklorists and Allen Lomax, among others, to get to places because she out-talked a sheriff, she insisted that they wear blackface to get by white authorities and made arrangements, i.e. told her stories, so that they could have some rapport while seeking song and folk lore from black informants. Her conflicts with the propagandists in the 30's that Hemenway sets forth, express themselves publicly in the 50's. She titled an article about Robeson, "My Race But Not My Taste." In 1951 she published her second article in the American Legion Magazine, "Why The Negro Won't Buy Communism."

If Hurston accused the NAACP of being a communist front, of Robeson being a Russian pawn, then she herself was used by racist reactionaries. She campaigned for George Smathers and newspapers eagerly published her disillusionment with the 1954 school desegragation decision. Hurston openly resented Dubois, Wright, and after their break, Hughes, who found literary ways of supporting their belief that class, economics and history shaped black life. She became victimized by economic conditions which hastened her death. From Hemenway and Walker we learn that Zora"had never held a job that lasted more than a year.", after a five year subsidy from Mrs. Mason ended in 1932. She never earned more than $943.75 in royalties and none of her books sold more than 5000 copies before going out of print. Hemenway's biography created the motivation with this reviewer to search out Hurston's writings and read all of them that could be found. These books are out of print and hopefully this biography will create a "market" for the republishing of her works.

Zora Neale Hurston's mother told her to jump for the sun. Because she did, we can find life in the literary treasures that she left behind. In 1960 she was Nanny,"Have some sympathy fuh me. Put me down easy,...Ah'm a cracked plate." And yet she was also Janie,"Ah'm back home again and Ah'm satisfied to be heah. Ah done been tuh de horizon and back an now Ah kin set heah in my house and live by comparisons."

Writer Nora Ephron

By JULIE MELROSE

Nora Ephron, author of "Crazy Salad" and a senior editor of "Esquire" magazine, will speak in the Student Union Ballroom Wednesday, March 8 at 8 p.m.

Ephron's talk, entitled "Some Crazy Things About Women", will be sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program as part of the International Women's Week activities.

In the preface of "Crazy Salad", her recent best-seller, Ephron wrote:

"I began writing a column about women in "Esquire" in 1972. The column was my idea, and I wanted to do it for a couple of specific, self-indulgent reasons and one general reason."

"Self-indulgent specifics first: I needed an excuse to go to my tenth reunion at Wellesley College, and I was looking for someone to pay my way to the Pillsbury Bake-Off. Beyond that, it seemed clear that American women were going through some changes. I wanted to write about them and about myself."

"Crazy Salad" and Ephron's first book, "Wallflower at the Orgy," are made up of essays based on her columns in "Esquire". Topics range from breasts and "feminine hygiene deodorants" to the Pillsbury Bake-Off and Julie Nixon Eisenhower.

Topics Ephron claims, in the preface, to have been "somewhat interested in" but never got around to writing about in "Esquire" include: tampons, panty hose, Bella Abzug, "The Story of O" and the integration of the Little League.

Her writing has been described as "truly funny and wonderfully wise" in the "Chicago Tribune," and Susan Braudy of "Ms." magazine refers to Ephron as "a brilliant, restless mind."

Ephron, who claims to have wanted to be a reporter "all my life; as long as I can remember," was raised in Beverly Hills, California. After graduating from Wellesley with a major in Political Science, she landed a job with the "New York Post." Five years later , she left the "Post" to try to make a living at free-lance writing.

In 1972, after selling stories to "Good Housekeeping", "Cosmopolitan" and the "New York Times Book Review", Ephron took a job at "Esquire", writing about women.

She joined the staff of "New York" magazine in 1974, but returned to "Esquire" as a senior editor one year later. Ephron now writes a monthly column on "The Media", commenting on its strengths, weaknesses and ethics.

Mother Jones

The Little Flags Theatre, a Boston based repertory touring company, will present "The Furies of Mother Jones" on March 7 in the Student Union Ballroom as part of International Women's Week.

"The Furies of Mother Jones" is a musical play dedicated to the legacy of Mary Harris "Mother" Jones, who devoted her life to the rights of American laborers. The play celebrates the culture and history of Mother Jones' activities in company mining towns throughtout Appalachia. The book and lyrics were written by Maxine Klein with music by James Oestereich.

The Little Flags Theatre is committed "to the advancement of positive cultural portraits drawn from the real world of work and the struggle for social change." The twelve multi-racial performer-musician-technicians under the direction of Obie-winner Maxine Klein, are currently on their second national tour.

Sweet Honey

By CANDY CARLON

On March II, Sweet Honey in the Rock will celebrate in song the close of International Women's Week in the Fine Arts Center auditiorium

Sweet Honey in the Rock, a black women's vocal group from Washington, D.C., was formed in 1974 as part of the D.C. Black Repertory Company. Since then the group has performed at funerals, weddings, schools and housing projects for the elderly. In January 1977, Sweet Honey in the Rock appeared with Pete Seeger at the Smithsonian Institute where they presented an evening of American protest songs.

Drawing from the many elements of black culture, these women singers and songwriters perform original and traditional children's game songs, prison songs of the rural South, gospel, blues, black women's songs and sociopolitical statements.

Sweet Honey in the Rock performs a capella with occasional instrumental accompaniment. Their musical arrangements are full of intricate harmonies and rythmic patterns. Each artist possesses a well-trained voice, yet their superb technical musicianship in no way inhibits the strength and spirit of the music.

Their first album, simply entitled "Sweet Honey in the Rock" on Flying Fish records, contains a song by Bernice Reagon about Joann Little,, a North Carolina woman acquitted after murdering the jailer who tried to rape her. The song expresses the outrage of all women for the oppressed condition of their sisters in a male-biased society:

Tell me what did she do to deserve this name
Killed a man who thought she was fair game
When I heard the news I screamed inside
Lost all my anger I could not hide
Cause now Joanne is you and Joanne is me
Our prison is the whole society

The name of the group derives from a traditional gospel song about "a land so rich, honey flowed from the rocks."

The gospel influence of Sweet Honey in the Rock is apparent throughout their album. The group performs such traditional gospel songs as "Jesus Is My Friend" and "Traveling Shoes".

The members of Sweet Honey in the Rock are Patricia Johnson, Louise Robinson, Evelyn Harris, Carol Lynne Maillard and Bernice Reagon. Reagon, who formed the group, is a music historian at the Smithsonian Institute's Division of Performing Arts.

The group's performance in Washington have beeen well received and reviewed. This will be their first appearance in the Amherst area.

Holly Near

By JILL ERICKSON

Holly Near will appear in concert at the Fine Arts Center on March 5 at 8 p.m., beginning the celebration of International Women's Week. Near is a feminist writer-muscician who has a devoted following of both women and men.

In 1971 she toured with the Free the Army show, a group of artists against the Vietnam War and rascism who travelled around the world performing for G.I.'s and service women. During 1972 and 1973 she participated in the Indochina peace campaign national tours.

As Near has become more woman-identified, her music has focused on women's lives. "Starting out Fine" on her "Alive Album" concerns a "hiking-boot mother" traveling with her daughter and her man. Once the woman realizes that the man is getting tired of her company, she responds,-"An old campfire gets warmer with you, but even when your gone it still cooks the stew."

"Free to Grow" is sung to all men who have trapped women in marriages and left them at home to take care of the kids.

"I've never found a man who could do it for me, I've never found a man who felt he could wait, while I was free to grow, free to go".

Near's performances are filled with energy and excitement as she magnetizes her audience. Each individual is drawn in by her stage presence, whether she is conducting the audience in a chorus of" Nicholia," or singing the joys of an" Old Time Woman".

Near's concert at the Fine Arts Center promises to be a dymamic opening to an exciting week of women's events.

Tavares, students stage success

The School for Wives
The University Ensemble Theater
Rand Theater. FAC
Reviewed by MARY BROWN

We live at a time when sexual freedoms seem to be more accepted than ever before. Sexual activity prior to marriage is acceptable by many in our generation, and, according to the wishes of the partners, even extra-marital affairs are sometimes condoned.

But our age is not alone in its acceptance of sexual freedoms. Moliere's The School for Wives, now being presented by the University Ensemble Theater, discusses the subject as it appeared to 17th century Parisians, and the discussion is delightfully funny and entertaining.

The central character in the play, Arnolphe, is a fortyish, bourgeois resident of Paris who scorns the sexual permissiveness of the age. He has never married, and is known for his constant mocking of men who have married, only to find their wives involved in adulterous relationships. The husbands, then, become cuckolds, something Arnolphe detests.

Arnolphe, ably played by professional actor Eric Tavares, is not without desires of his own, however. He has fallen in love with a peasant girl, and has financed her upbringing until she has reached the age where he can marry her.

But Arnolphe has been very careful with his wife-to-be, Agnes, played by Jane Perkins. So strong is Arnolphe's repugnance of cuckoldry, that Agnes' education has left her naive and innocent in an effort to keep her away from the worldly intrigues in which she is soon involved.

The trouble begins with the arrival of Horace, a young, overdressed dandy, who is in the process of beginning an affair with Agnes. He confides, than brags, to Arnolphe about it, not realizing that it is to Arnolphe that Agnes is to be wed.

Jay Charbonneau plays the character of Horace superbly. His exaggerated bows and overdone love declarations are extremely humorous, especially when matched with Tavares' more prudent and sarcastic Arnolphe.

It is on Horace, also, where costume designer June Gaeke's work shines. Horace is the dandy of the dandies and is suitably dressed in white and gold. Not even the shocking pink dress his father wears outmatches his uniform.

Arnolphe plots and schemes to get rid of Horace, confronts Agnes on the impropriety of her actions, and directs her to study the Ten Maxims of Marriage, which describe the somber conduct of a prudent wife. But Agnes, with her naivete and innocence, simply tells Arnolphe that she cannot marry him, and is in love with Horace.

Arnolphe is alternately heartbroken and enraged, and only an unusual twist in the the plot saves him from the shame of cuckoldry.

The supporting characters' roles were also well executed--most notably Chrysalde, friend of Arnolphe, played by George W. Angell III, and Arnolphe's servants Alain, Rick Martin, and Georgette, Debora Beerchert.

Director David Knauf has made good use of scenic designer Jeffrey Fiala's stage, and keeps the actors in close proximity to the audience.

The translation from the French was done by Richard Wibur, a writer-in-residence at the Smith College English Department. Wilbur has translated other plays by Moliere, and is a winner of the National Book Award , Pulitzer Prize and the Edna St. Vincent Milley Memorial Award for his volume of poetry Things of This World.

Dramaturg Virginia Scott, in charge of doing research on both the play and 17th century Paris, has prepared a 20-page booklet playgoers receive with the program, highlighting Moliere's career, the history of the play and the process by which the Ensemble Theater produced The School for Wives.

For the $2 admission fee the theater charges students, The School for Wives is a rare entertainment bargain ($3 for non-students). Two final performances are scheduled for this weekend-Friday and Saturday nights at 8:00. The Rand Theater box office is at 545-3511.

Some alto, some soprano

ABBA
The Album
Atlantic
Reviewed by TOM ANDERSON

If someone had told me two years ago that I would be giving a favorable review to Abba, I probably wouldn't have believed it. But, I've got to hand it to Frida, Anna, Benny and Bjorn -- this album is not bad at all. The substantial improvement over their previous albums can be credited, at least in part, to the fact that the cuts are all on the long side. While in the past Abba's albums have consisted of mostly 3-minute songs with intelligent titles like "Dum Dum Diddle", there are no cuts on The Album under 3½ minutes. The expanded length seems to give the group more time for musical development, and hence a better overall sound. The most impressive tunes here are the opening "Eagle", the current hit "The Name of the Game", and a three-part peice titled "The Girl aith the Golden Hair", described as "3 scenes from a mini-musical". There's even a rocker called "Hole in Your Soul", which may be the most energetic effort from the group since "Waterloo".This album will do much to attract listeners previously turned off by Abba's sometimes rather dreary sound. The title needs some explanation: ABBA The Album is being released concurrently with Abba-The Movie. Advance reviews of the film seem to indicate a considerably better-than-average rock documentary. For my part, this album is impressive enough to sustain an interest in Abba that was only slightly increased by their last album, Arrival. The Album is also good enough to make me look forward to The Movie.

Emmylou Harris
Quarter Moon In A Ten Cent Town
Warner Bros.

Reviewed by MARK HARRIS LEVITAN

Emmylou Harris' new album doesn't break any new ground stylistically, so she and producer (and husband) Brian Ahearn rely on her ever-stronger voice phrasings to pull the album through. As expected, the result is enjoyable to listen to. There is the mixture of country songs, pop ballads and rock and roll that is also expected, yet there are fewer standout cuts than on her previous releases. Susanna Clark's "Easy From Now On" is one that does stand out. It's a ballad of a woman rising above the lost love syndrome, a welcome departure from falling apart. The two rockers, "I Ain't Living Long Like This" and "Two More Bottles Of Wine" tell of hard living and drinking, and they allow the Hot Band to warm up a little. But there's no cooking to speak of; instead there's a distant feel that leaves an emotional void.

The only song to stir emotion is Dolly Parton's "To Daddy." Mama raises the kids and lives a lonely life while Daddy lives it up. Daddy never offers the love mama needs. The lilting tone of the song has you believing that Mama will die unfulfilled. Suddenly, Mama packs and leaves Daddy with the kids and it's"GoodbyeTo Daddy." Fuck you to Daddy. A great moment in woman's song.

Quarter Moon In A Ten Cent Town proves that Emmylou Harris is more sure of her talent and her audience, but she didn't really push herself for this one. That's why I'm looking forward to her collaboration with Ms. Parton and Ms. Ronstadt.

Jackie De Shannon
Your're the Only Dancer
Amherst

Reviewed by PERRY ADLER

Jackie DeShannon has been around in the music world for over 15 years. In that time she's had only two real hits: "What the World Needs Now is Love" and "Put a Little Love in Your Heart". She's written plenty for others, among them Brenda Lee, Marianne Faithful, and the Searchers. And she's given us two all time classics: her original versions of "Neeedles and Pins" and especially, "When You Walk in the Room." But she's never broken through as a star in her own right.

Her latest attempt is an obvious commercial ploy, as it's plugged her into the Fleetwood Mac Formula. Whether it will work or not remains to be seen; the single"Don't Let the Flame Burn Out", which might as well have been sung by ChristineMcVie, was only a moderate success. The album is pleasant enough, certainly better than most of the pap on the airwaves. The tunes are very good, even the obligatory oldie is inoffensive. But it's all so damned restrained; there's nothing here that anyone who knows "When You Walk in the Room" will find even remotely comparable.

JACKIE DE SHANNON
YOU'RE THE ONLY DANCER

I guess it all depends on what you want from music. I want to be involved, moved, overwhelmed; to involuntarily crank it up and sing along, or dance, or whatever. "You're the Only Dancer" lacks that biting edge that elevates Fleetwood Mac above the level of nice background music. The mass audience does seem to be able to tell the difference,;witness the wide margin in sales . Rumours has over the other easy listening" rock". Jackie DeShannon has so much potential, it's tragic to see radio programmers reduce her to this. Still and all, better this than a disco album.

Mary Travers
It's In Everyone Of Us
Chrysalis
Reviewed by BRETT MILANO

It too often happens in the record industry that artists have to compromise their standards to get their music through to the mass audience. The average record collection is full of jazz artists who've had to discoize their sound to make it more accessible, and once-potent rockers (take a bow, Rod Stewart) who've had to soften their music's rough edges to make it sell. Mary Travers's new album (not coincidentally, her first for a new label) strikes me as one of those uncomfortable compromises. She went to L.A. to record it, got herself a pop-oriented producer (Vini Poncia, of Leo Sayer and Ringo fame), and emerged with an album which is far more slick and accessible than anything she has recorded to date. The simple purity of her voice is often overshadowed by the elaborate arrangements and the songs by such diverse writers as Nils Lofgren and Dan Fogelberg don't always suit her. Mary Travers is still a singer of taste and integrity, and she does shine when she is given a song to match (Robin Batteau's "The Eye of the Day" is this album's best). But on the whole, this album will probably appeal most to those who couldn't appreciate the purer folk sound that Mary produced so well on her earlier albums.

Blondie
Plastic Letters
Chrystalis
Reviewed by PERRY ADLER

A lot of people have been thrown for a loop by this one. Blondie's first album (one of the first, and best, New Wave LP's) was a thrilling extension of the classic girl group styles of the early 60's, with, at the same time, the least pretentious, most fun organ-based sound since Question Mark and the Mysterians (or at least the Doors). The new one sounds very different at first, but it's a grower.

Plastic Letters is less derivative, more "progressive". The tunes are more complex, less accessible. They're still short and-fast-paced though, and after getting beyond the weirdness through a few listenings, quite enjoyable. The album is very original and thus it's still hard to tell how it will ultimately stack up against the first one (which, incidentally, has just been re-released on Chrysalis and is a must for anyone fond of 60's rock, and if you're not would you please stop ruining the record charts).

One thing can be said, however. Blondie's modified direction combined with ABBA's decline makes it imperative that we get those new Ronnie Spector and Shangri-Las (pant, pant) albums we were promised.

Song Lyric

Now the voice of the "gentle sex" rises in anger.
Our eyes are wide open...we've kicked off the blinds.
And the force of our power will topple
the tower that men have been building.
We're speaking our minds.

We feel for your dignity lying there wounded;
We weep for your misery, 'cause you can't cry.
But we won't bleed for your industry;
earth-killing factory,
The one that's been painting black lines on the sky.

The nation of men's been a nation that failed us.
The fault's in yourselves, brothers;
not in your stars.
But the nation of women is newborn and hopeful.
You forfeited your turn; now this one is ours.

Our hopes are as high, but our goals are more human.
We reach for the sky, but there's no bombing sound.
For we want our new nation to find a foundation
In the womb of creation; right here or the ground.

JULIE MELROSE

The Women Warriors

The women warriors
will not come daintily prancing on matchstick heels

They will not paint "venceremos" on their eyelids in Maybelline,
Or cross their hearts with Living Bras.
They will not come in silence.
They will not check the mirror as they shoot.

Their faces will be masks of force with sweat as their perfume.
The blood of children unconceived will flow unhindered down their legs to prime the battlefield canvas.
With breasts held proud by cartridge belts their hips will swing to the rhythm of rage and the voice of the sistersong bugle.

JULIE MELROSE

To A Friend

What you are facing takes great courage
You are facing a child with your eyes and with your quickness to understand
You are looking at me through the eyes of motherhood,proud and confused
You have not nourished this child with your whole being for some time
Will the same sweet pain return to your breasts; a child is always hungry for love
But you know this, for you, yourself are starved for a mother's tenderness
You are facing your link to womanhood and you do not like what you see
This woman, your mother, is weak and weakens you
And you cannot walk away

CANDYCE CARLON

The Pilgrim Adulteress

I lie here- Over here! - where the sun's rays ne'er settle; here under the tangled canopy of the weeping willow.
No engraved tombstone of marble
denotes my resting place;
no flowers or carpet of greener adorn.
I yearn for the splendor of recognition:
a modest, immutable monument to my memory.
But because of a mere act
of passion, of love,
I lie here, outside the sanctified
gates of the cemetery;
still denied my final repose
since feet so often shuffle over me, unawares.

KATHRYN DANIELS

the name of science

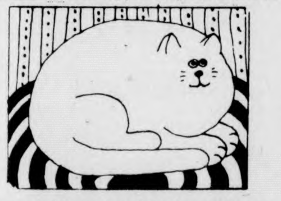
sacrificed yearly. I am a zoology major and I have literally lost count of the number of frogs and rats and chickens I have done in in the name of science, yet it still bothers me to do it. I was on the receiving end of a funny sort of unintentional revenge a couple of weeks ago while working with some chickens. In a lab, I had to inject a drug into the bird's heart to kill it. First, though, blood had to be withdrawn, just for practice and as a way of determining that the needle was penetrating the heart. There was a lot of fumbling and struggling and wing-flapping and teeth-gritting. I finally got the blood out and the drug in, and seconds after the chicken went out, I went out. It was dead; I had only fainted. I felt pretty embarrassed, of course, until my "colleague" Wendy told me she wished she could have fainted, that she should have, given the circumstances. She too feels a little of twinge of conscience every time she kills something. There is a general form of irony that zoology students have to endure: while a fascination for living things supposedly led us into our field, a lot of animals end up getting killed in the process.



The really heart-rending episodes occur in the psychology department, though. They use monkeys in Tobin for behavioral studies. Rhesus monkeys are used because they are social animals and their responses to stimuli and deprivation quite closely resemble our own. Even the most unfelling person tends to turn away from the sight of one of these monkeys that was separated from its mother at birth. It's pretty pathetic. Still, these experiments are easily justifiable on the grounds that they enhance our understanding of ourselves.

Rhesus monkeys are going to be harder to come by soon. India supplies the vast majority of rhesus monkeys used throughout the world. India's agreement to supply monkeys to U.S. labs was made with the stipulation that experiments of a military nature not be performed. Well, the Army broke that promise and there are a lot of radioactive monkeys running around, although they don't run for long. They also make ideal subjects for germ warfare research. India is a Hindu country, and Hinduism preaches a deep-seated reverence for all living things. Thus, the government there is making plans to end the export of the monkeys.

Though I sympathize with the needs of biologists, I can't help but admire India's concern for the primates. Not all religions have such an all-encompassing perspective on living things. It was a type of species-based chauvinism that inhibited the acceptance of evolutionary theory for nearly a century. It's revolting to a true Christian to consider that he or she is related by ancestry to things that crawl on the ground and swing in the trees. But I am fond of the notion. Sometimes I think we could all do with a reminder that we are as much a part of the ecosystem as the plants and animals are. It is forgetfulness of that fact that has allowed us to push into extinction hundreds of species of living things, and pollute our air and water.

I feel a special sense of urgency over the plight of dolphins and whales. In a very real respect, they are the marine counterparts of human beings, having achieved their evolutionary success through the development of superior intelligence and a complex communications system. To wipe them out to the very last one before fully appreciating their uniqueness would simply be a moral crime.

The way in which we treat other living things reflects our general attitude about life — and ourselves. A disregard for the things that walk and crawl and fly and swim about on Earth can only lead to further and further alienation from the natural world — and the spiritual one. The destruction of our physical and organic environment reflects a contempt for life and is incompatible with our very survival. Before we realize it, we may upset irreversibly the balance of living and non-living things, a system whose intricacy and complexity is beyond our comprehension. That achieved, all our advances in science, including biology, would become useless; and all those millions of frogs and rats and monkeys would have died for nothing. But then again, they may have the last laugh.

The Orange Disc

Jerry Rogers

My orange Super-pro Frisbee is not the only orange disc floating around the Collegian office. Gulf oil sends the Collegian a copy of its bimonthly magazine — The Orange Disc — right on schedule every time the shareholders and employees of Gulf receive the magazine.

The January-February issue features a cover shot of a large bull moose. Apparently, the Gulf companies are, in their own small way, bullish on "Alberta's Wondrous and Uncommon Energy", as the cover story is titled. Along with articles on Korea since the war, vanpooling (an idea whose time has come, we are told), the revolutionary new vortometric burner and the meeting between Gulf's management and some financial analysts, the reader is inundated with what Gulf pretentiously considers news.

The Orange Disc, the Insider, an insert FordMMotor Company pays us to have included in the Collegian, and Nutshell, which Datsun fills with valuable information and then distributes free to students, may indeed contain some interesting or useful information on occasion. But, regardless of the magazines' contents, their primary and obvious function is public relations and advertising.

Despite the negative image accorded much "Madison Avenue" type advertising, there is a place for advertising and public relations in the media world. And it would not bother me at all if Ford decided to put an Insider in the Collegian every day. We can certainly use the advertising revenue, and they certainly have the right to advertise through the established media.

What irks me however, is the way large companies spend a small fortune (and believe me, to put out a magazine with color photography like the Orange Disc is no small expense) to have their advertising legitimized because it is portrayed as news. Datsun, on the other hand, benefits more by having its name associated with the wondrous experiences of the traveler — which Nutshell reports — than it does by simply advertising its cars' gas mileage. Selling a product is often thought of an an oppressive task, but selling the vehicle that can bring you to the foot of the Rockies is slightly more positive. Sales through positive association is the route these companies are attempting to take.

Back to the Orange Disc. Gulf attempts to portray oil exploration in Canada's winter wonderland as no real threat to the ecological balance of the area. And the symmetry of an oil refinery in Korea provides a beautiful silhouette when the sun sets. Some of you might not agree, yet time and time again, multinationals have shown themselves quite impervious to the verbal attacks of this country's citizens.

The Orange Disc article on financial analysts and their meeting with management proclaims "communication is a two-way affair" and uses a question and answer format to show the dedication of Gulf to open communication.

I can't agree, but because any company has the right to advertise in any manner it considers effective, I can't condemn the Orange Disc. I hope its readers will be as critical about its insidious methods as those who criticize a lack of fair and impartial reporting in the more legitimate news media. And I wish Gulf would stop using the name The Orange Disc for its public relations magazine — it's bad for Frisbee.

Massacre at Iki Island

By GEORGE SOMMERS

For some time, Japan has been a target of environmentalists' wrath because it permits the killing and exploitation of whales. Every other major industrial nation except Russia realizes that the number of these animals is being severely depleted and has taken steps to limit or ban whale kills. A recent bloody event has given the environmentalists a renewed, acute concern over the policies of the Japanese government.

Last week, a fishing cooperative quietly organized to lure one thousand dolphins near shore and club them to death. The fishermen, natives of the southern Japanese island of Iki, claimed the action was necessary because the dolphins were cutting into the catch of yellowtail and cuttlefish. Reports said that the beaches of Iki were stained red with blood after the slaughter.

Dolphins are not an endangered species as of yet. The sea mammals are exceptionally intelligent, however; some claim they rival man. It has been proven that dolphins communicate with each other through a well-developed language. Scientists are experimenting with the idea of breaking the language barrier between man and dolphin.

Since man first sailed the seas, an affectionate bond has existed between him and the dolphin. The ancient Greeks believed that dolphins were the souls of humans lost at sea. There exist innumerable accounts of dolphins saving the lives of drowning people. They have even been known to rescue people from attacking sharks by butting and killing them. To many fishermen, the presence of dolphins is considered good luck. Some fishermen have jumped into the sea to untangle dolphins inadvertently caught in their nets.

One species of this beautiful creature was until recently a victim of American industry. The spinner dolphin frequently associates with schools of tunafish. Thus, the massive American tuna take invariable included an alarming percentage of dolphins. Environmentalists pressured Congress to take action. A new law forced the tuna industry to limit dolphin kill to a quota, the size of which is reduced by half every year. The industry has been complying with the quota; and new technology for prevention of accidental dolphin capture has not put a dent into profits.

For their efforts, the Japanese fishermen involved in the Iki bloodbath were given twelve dollars per head bounty by the government. Takashi Hashimoto, chief of the Japanese provincial Fisheries Division, defended the slaughter as "an act of self-defense." It is estimated that one-third of the potential catch is taken by the dolphins. Hashimoto at least acknowledges the animals' intelligence, saying that perhaps they will "learn a lesson" and stop stealing the fishermen's catch. Some cynical environmentalists have suggested that similarly appropriate lessons be given to Hashimoto and the Iki fishermen to "teach" them to stop cutting into the dolphins' catch.

Vietnam Vets meet March 25

To the Editor:

On Saturday, February 25th, 1978, members of the Massachusetts Vietnam Era Veterans Association met at Boston State College in Boston, Massachusetts. This meeting was the second in a series of gatherings for this new organization, Mass. V.E.V.A., which is seeking to identify and propose solutions for the wide range of problems related to the Vietnam Era Veteran. The meeting was attended by veterans and their representatives from ten [10] Massachusetts colleges and from three [3] State Veterans Organizations, from Rhode Island, New York and Mass.

The days agenda consisted of addressing the many problems for the Vietnam Era Veteran, including the following: P.C.E. Tuition Exemptions, Vietnam Vets adjustment problems — emotional and economical, and Discharge Upgrading. Also addressed were the upcoming V.E.V.A. March and Tent-In in Washington, D.C., and the Proclamation for Vietnam Veterans Day, March 29th, 1978. Several work groups and sub-committees were formed to deal with other pending or proposed rulings which would have a potentially adverse effect on the Vietnam Veteran.

The spirit of solidarity displayed on Feb. 25th is an element sorely missing here on the University of Massachusetts campus. The degree of willingness to share ideas and past experiences was, in itself, an interaction that contrasts greatly to the general veteran apathy and lack of enthusiasm on this campus. It should be known, therefore, that there is a need at this moment, for the UMass veteran population to make an honest commitment to themselves as vets and to Mass. V.E.V.A. as our potential voice in the statehouse. We, the members of our own campus veterans organization — V.S.O. — will begin now to arrange information and hopefully transportation to the next statewide conference, March 25th, 1978. We urge UMass Vets to set aside that date on their calendars. V.S.O., Room 411, Student Union, has further information on the meeting and Mass V.E.V.A. We are confident that Vets on this campus and statewide will reunite in 1978.

Matlack vs. Pierpont

To the Editor:

Regarding the proposed restructuring of Pierpont House, I would like to bring certain political ramifications of the controversy to light. First, the word is out that the Southwest Administration will undergo a shakeup following this semester. Jim Matlack, denied tenure by the English Department, is now completing his 'period of grace' as Master Director of Southwest. The triumph over Pierpont would greatly enhance Matlack's bargaining position, seeing as he has only held his present post since September.

The Inquiry Program, based in our dorm, would also benefit from this restructuring. Like other special programs, I.P. faces funding cuts as both student and Administration interests wane. This proposal would help their image greatly by establishing their validity on campus as a viable alternative means of education. The fact is that Pierpont and the Inquiry Program are no longer synonymous. At present less than one-third of Pierpont's population is enrolled in I.P. The program has in addition been largely at odds with our community on such basic questions as going student-run as a dorm, and continuance of GENESIS, Pierpont's student newspaper. I.P. was formed with the intention of helping students to develop social conscience and a sense of self-determination. Thus, by their refusal to date to take a stand in this controversy, they are repudiating their very aims.

Finally, the biggest gain would be Whitmore's. For years Pierpont has been a thorn in the Administration's side, felt as recently as last fall when the dorm's lounges were planned for freshman housing. We dared to stand up for our rights publicly, and they haven't forgotten. This proposed action would finally take care of the unity and tradition of lawful dissent present in Pierpont for years, but perhaps this is the hidden intention of Jim Matlack, C.D.C., and others with greater influence and power. Implementing the restructuring of Pierpont House would displace those who remember that you can fight city hall, and win.

Basketball blues

A tradition was being built here at UMass on the sports scene. Ever since I've been here (and I've been here a 'few' years) the Minutemen have always played a decent brand of basketball when their season rolled around. While the hockey team went through hot and cold seasons, playing before sparse crowds at Orr Rink, students have always made the long trek from as far away as Sylvan to reach their common destination — the Cage.

It got to be a Saturday night ritual: head to the Dining Commons for supper, and then on to the Cage. Following the game, it was a race to the Bluewall for a 'few' brews (the smart ones had gotten their stamp before the game and now didn't have to deal with the long line) before calling it a night.

The crowds got super psyched for most of the games (excepting those 'automatic' wins over Northeastern, Maine, UNH, etc.). Then the Redmen charged through a lifesize circle across the court amidst deafening applause. Jack Leaman got a separate ovation when he appeared on the scene shortly thereafter.

The BIG games were encounters with the Huskies of UConn, the Rams of URI, and lest' we forget, BC (Boston College for those of you of the naive race). It seems UMass always lost to BC in football, so it was left up to the hoop squad to get even.

Things have changed a lot since then. Naturally the Skinners, Duartes, Endicotts, Pitinos, Burkes, and Murphys of yesteryear have been replaced. The Eldridges, Haymores, Pyatts, Claibornes, Steveskeys, and Kohlhaas have taken over. Only Leaman has stayed the same.

In order to upgrade the program, the Minutemen dropped out of the Yankee Conference. At the time it seemed the right thing to do; UMass had won the YanCon title every year since the 1970-71 season (except when URI took it in the '71-72 season). Rutgers, and Penn. State were added to the schedule, while those teams considered to be less competitive in the YanCon now only had to be faced once a year.

The transition in the schedule was good, but something has gone sour. That old U of M spark is fading.

The team came out flying for the 1977-78 campaign and reeled off win after win, until they had eight straight. Granted, a couple of those came at the expense of non-powerhouses (a la Harvard, Vermont, Bentley. UMass toyed with Bentley, a team that should be erased from further schedules, and came away with the expected victory.

Being 8-0 showed UM followers that maybe, just maybe, this team could go places. They had the talent and the potential. Leadership and direction may have been their only recognizable weakness. Up to this time, that is.

Rutgers and Villanova knocked off the Minutemen. And then, the first in a series of 'should've-been-wins' went by the boards, when a Whelton-less UConn dumped the Minutemen. Considering what UMass had done to UConn with Whelton earlier in the season, this was unheard of. But all was soon forgotten when UMass played an excellent game against Providence, only to fall with ten seconds remaining in the game.

Fans got an early Christmas '78, when Ronnie Perry Jr. and his boys from Holy Cross lost at home on an unbelievable Eric Williams shot. UMass basketball looked revived again.

In the long run, however, that has proved to be an on and off issue.

UMaine dumped on the Minutemen in Orono. Northeastern fell just short of success. UNH created an 'early exit' for UMies from the Cage, and URI added icing to the cake. Those non-competitive Yan Con teams have shocked UMass into being competitive.

O.K. so the team has had its problems; it was hit by the flu, players didn't appear for certain games, etc. The intensity needed to win the big games as well as those against YanCon teams has gone. Whether it's the players, the coach, or both, would be speculation. Only they know that.

I will say this: it's been a frustrating season; the high points such as the Villanova and HC conquests somehow are diluted by memories of UConn, UNH, and Maine. To think that a team with so much talent has wasted it for a season barely over .500 is sad.

As a friend commented after the UNH loss, "the Minutemen can't claim to be a good team. The best they can claim to be is a little better than mediocre."

Though I can't totally agree, I can't help wondering, with all that talent, and potential, where did all the wins go?

BAKATUR WAS NOW MORE POWERFUL THAN THE CELT; BUT HIS POWER NEEDED 100 YEARS TO INCUBATE. SO, HE SEALED HIMSELF IN A STONE VAULT, FROM WHICH HE HAS ONLY RECENTLY AWAKENED.
THE CELT WAS ALL-WISE. HE KNEW THAT HE WOULD NOT BE ALIVE 100 YEARS HENCE TO BATTLE BAKATUR. SO HE CONSTRUCTED A DIAMOND BELL; WHICH WHEN RUNG WILL DESTROY BAKATUR, ONCE AND FOR ALL.
IT CAN BE RUNG ONLY BY AN ELF OF NOBLE BLOOD, AND EIM IS THE ORPHAN SON OF THE LATE KING AEMIR. YOU SHALL HELP US REACH THE BELL. IT WAS MOVED BY BAKATUR, FROM ITS ORIGINAL RESTING PLACE, TO HIS CASTLE: THE DEMON CRAG. BUT FIRST, YOU

THURSDAY, MARCH 2

Born today, you are purposeful, and do not like to undertake anything that doesn't have a definite and profitable goal. There is nothing vague about you. Even as a child you will strike others as knowing precisely what you are doing. Not especially precocious academically, you are decidedly ahead of the field emotionally.

You cannot bear to see others suffer. One of your prime goals in life, regardless of your career, will be to alleviate whenever you can the pain of your fellow men. You have an aptitude for gaining trust and confidence. That you do not use it for your own advantage but, rather, in the service of others is much to your credit.

You are not interested in monetary pursuits, though you realize the importance of being solvent. Nor are you particularly interested in affairs of the heart. You enjoy the company of others but are not eager to go through life in tandem; you far prefer your emotional and intellectual independence.

FRIDAY, MARCH 3

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) — To relieve worry and stress, consult a professional. Self-diagnosis may be harmful.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Cooperate with new employees. You can make or break yours and another's careers this morning.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Low energy creates a situation at work which could lead to a change in employment.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) - Carry out plans for a change in routine. This is a good day for rediscovering old pleasures.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — A disappointing meeting with one you trusted may leave you emotionally exhausted. Rest at evening.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) - Confide in one whose interests lie in the rightness of your coming decision. Trust the young.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) — Don't offend one less proficient than you by showing off recent awards. Be tactful.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) — Career associates may have more wisdom to offer than you anticipated. Listen carefully.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) — A romantic problem haunts you early today. Bear facts in mind.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) — Erratic behavior early today causes concern among those who have your best interests in mind.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) — Try to be flexible. It may hamper your progress considerably to insist on old methods.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) — A new solution to a problem you thought ended occurs in time to counter ill consequences.

John Riley plays on— a plus for icemen's goal

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

When John Riley finished the 1976-77 hockey season, a season he spent as backup to Dana Redmond, he thought his college career was over. "When I took off my shirt after the last game, I thought that was it," said Riley.

Last summer Riley found out he had another year of eligibility. To say he made the most of that year would be an understatement.

Riley, who said that just getting the chance to play this season was the highpoint of his UMass career, led the team in spirit this year and played his heart out from the opening face-off against New England, till he was taken out with eight minutes left in the finale against Salem State.

The Minutemen did not make the playoffs this year, as the flu and injuries to key players spelled disaster. They did have an excellent year however, as they beat Army, Holy Cross, Merrimack and other top schools and took the fight for the final playoff spot in the Western Division right down to the last weekend.

They were a team often compared to the Bruins of the NHL. They, like the Bruins, are not a team of supporters. They won their games through hard work, solid team play and the development of solid forechecking, badchecking and tough defense. John Riley was the key to the system.

Before the season started, coach Jack Canniff and all the Minutemen knew that this was not the kind of team that could win a high scoring game. If they were to win, they would have to put four or five points on the board and hope Riley and the defense could hold off the opposing scorers.

The defense faltered at times, but Riley was consistently magnificent. His clutch goaltending sparked the UMies to eight wins and a five game unbeaten streak at the start of 1978.

Riley first starting playing goal, perhaps the most dangerous position in all sports, in sixth grade, when, according to Riley, his coach put him in the net to "get out of the way of the rest of the players."

Under the tutoring of ex-Bruin netminder Tom Moon, Riley worked hard at his position and soon became an excellent goaltender at Lexington High.

"My family has season tickets at Boston Garden," said Riley. "I used to go to games and do nothing but watch the goaltenders. When I got home from a game and my mother would ask me how the game was, I couldn't tell her."

An All-Scholastic goalie as a senior at Lexington, Riley was heavily recruited. He cast aside two opportunities to play for Division I schools Vermont, Providence and Boston College and chose instead to come to UMass, a then Division II powerhouse.

In his freshman year, Riley started for the JV team and led them to an excellent 9-1 season. Then came three years of frustration as a backup. Three years of watching, waiting and learning.

When he came back last fall, Riley had to beat out senior Paul McCann for the starting spot. He worked hard in preseason practice and was in the starting line-up for the opener against New England.

The Minutemen beat New England, 4-2, with Riley as the key. They then lost five straight, and appeared headed for a dismal season.

"It took us a while to get together," said Riley. "We were a young and inexperienced team, and it took us a while to mature. A mature team would have won some of those games."

It was Riley who brought the team together with his best game of the year, a shutout against the high-scoring Cadets of Army at West Point. "Shutting out Army was probably the biggest single highpoint of my career," said Riley.

If the Army game was the biggest for Riley, the contest against Merrimack early in February couldn't have been far bhind. Riley held off the highly talented Warriors in the third period and then in overtime and paved the way for the most exciting win of the year.

The Minutemen were still playing solid hockey when the flu and costly injuries bought an end to playoff hopes. For Riley however, it was still a satisfying way to finish up a fine career. "I'm glad we had a good year," said Riley. "The administration was thinking of possibly dropping the hockey program or dropping it to Division III. After what we did this year, I don't think they will."

When asked if he thought his future plans included pro hockey, the 23-year-old English major said that he hadn't given it much thought, but "if the opportunity presents itself, I'd like to give it a shot."

Transplanted Haymore finds home at UMass

By SHELLY SPIEGEL
Collegian Staff

Why have sports fans in Cleveland, Ohio recently become interested in UMass basketball?

Because Cleveland is the hometown of UMass center Mark Haymore, still one of the top field goal percentage shooters in the nation at .642, according to the latest statistics released by the NCAA.

Haymore, a 6'8", 223 lb. junior transfer from Indiana University has done a remarkable job for the Minutemen. The team's record now stands at 15-11 with Haymore averaging 14.3 points a game along with 6.8 rebounds.

The Minutemen's wins and losses have been unpredictable. During the season, the team has come within a point of defeating nationally ranked Providence College, beaten New England power Holy Cross at the buzzer, and come from behind to beat tough Villanova and Pittsburgh squads, but have also lost games to UMaine, UConn, Penn State and UNH.

Haymore, a high school All-American and a graduate of Lutheran East High School was recruited by more than 400 schools, including Notre Dame and the University of Maryland. Maryland was Haymore's first choice, but he eventually chose Indiana because of the school's Big 10 schedule and prestige.

But he left the Hoosiers after two seasons.

Why did Indiana Head Coach Bobby Knight let Haymore go? The answer is actually a simple one — Kent Benson. For two seasons, Haymore was Indiana's second string center behind the All-American Benson, and he played only 90 minutes. Haymore was informed by Knight after Indiana captured the NCAA championship in 1976 that he was not going to get a chance to play for the team next season.

Haymore got along well with Knight, as did the other members of the team. "He treated us well, he treated us real good," Haymore said. "I really didn't have a relationship with him, I just respected him as a mechanical coach. The only time I saw him as a person is when we lost to Kentucky and he cried," said Haymore. During his two seasons at Indiana, the team lost only one game, to Kentucky, 92-91.

Although Benson was at Indiana, Haymore felt that Knight was honest with him when he recruited him. "In the big time college scene, the best don't always play. It's political who plays," said Haymore.

After deciding to leave Indiana, Haymore contacted Lefty Driesell, Head Coach at the University of Maryland. He had spent previous summers at Driesell's basketball camp and had become close friends with him. Driesell suggested that Haymore work as a counselor at a children's summer camp in Davidson, North Carolina, and at the same time look for a school.

Haymore decided to take the job as counselor. "The kids were really sincere and really played hard," he said.

During the summer, Haymore met Ray Wilson at Davidson College, who had recently resigned as the Minutemen's assistant basketball coach to take a similiar position at Davidson. Wilson told Haymore he had just left UMass and if he was interested in the school, Jack Leaman would be happy to have him join the team.

Not only did Wilson succeed in bringing Haymore to UMass, but he decided to return as the Minutemen's assistant coach the following season.

"We knew he (Haymore) was going to transfer and we assumed that if he was at Indiana he was a pretty good basketball player, because Indiana had won the national championship," Leaman said.

Although the Minutemen are not nationally ranked, Haymore is happy to be part of the team. The Minutemen have given him an opportunity to do what he does best, play basketball. "This is the only team I've been on since high school where everyone got along. I can feel the unity, win or lose," said Haymore.

UMass has been known to play its best games against the stronger teams this season. Haymore said publicity is an important incentive when UMass plays teams such as Rutgers, Holy Cross and Providence. He explained when UMass plays the nationally ranked teams there is a lot more at stake. A UMass win over Providence would give the Minutemen the publicity they lack, he said.

Haymore credited West Virginia's Maurice Robinson and Villanova's Alex Bradley as the players who have given him the most offensive trouble this season. Bradley, a 6'6" freshman is a "good jumper with a nice soft touch," he said.

Haymore is optimistic about the rest of the season. He said the Minutemen can compete with anyone, as long as each player puts out his best effort for the entire 40 minutes of the game. "If we are to continue to win games, it's a matter of getting consistent intensity," he said.

Although the EAA tournament is the deciding factor as to whether the Minutemen get an NCAA playoff spot, Haymore said the regular season is very important. "I just want to win as many games as possible and improve my physical skills and mental toughness," he said. "If the team plays the way we did against Villanova, an NCAA playoff berth is definitely not out of reach."

UMass sets sights for EAA title

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

PITTSBURGH, Pa. — "There's no question we can win this tournament," said UMass junior center Mark Haymore. "It's a question of how bad do we want it and I think we want this very badly."

Tonight, at 7 p.m., UMass will square off with the Duquesne Dukes in the quarterfinals of the Eastern Eight Championship. The winner of this game will advance to the semifinals tomorrow night against the winner of the Rutgers-West Virginia game.

The final two teams of this second annual eight team tournament will converge Saturday to determine who will represent the EAA in the opening round of the NCAA playoffs.

Other games to be played today will feature Villanova vs Penn State (1 p.m.), Rutgers vs West Virginia (3 p.m.) and Pittsburgh vs George Washington (9 p.m.)

The consensus around this tournament is that it will eventually be a Rutgers-Villanova final, but many outside observers view UMass, GW, and Pitt to be darkhorses.

"The tournament officials view this tournament to be determined by either Rutgers (league champs 7-3, 21-5 overall) and Villanova (7-3, 18-8)," said UMass coach Jack Leaman.

"But," he continued, "it's anyone's horse race. I feel that anyone of the eight teams here is capable of getting hot and winning the whole thing."

The best example of Leaman's statement was represented by Duquesne, which last year compiled a losing record of 12-14 but pulled major upsets over Penn State, UMass and Villanova to win the championship.

This season, again, John Cinicola's Dukes have played less than .500 ball with a 10-16 record. They finished fifth in the EAA, with a 5-5 record, having beaten Penn State twice, West Virginia, Pittsburgh and UMass. Its only other major victory against a team outside of its league was a 63-61 win over South Carolina.

But for UMass, the Dukes have been a thorn in its side for the last three seasons. The Minutemen have won both games played at the Springfield Civic Center (98-94, 100-97), while the Dukes have won two at the Pittsburgh Civic Arena (100-69, 83-70) as well as the 89-82 upset decision in the EAA semifinal game a year ago.

But in the most recent game, the Dukes received a 27 point game from 6'2" guard "B.B." Flenory, who had finished the season with a flourish of five straight 20-plus efforts against the likes of St. Bonaventure, Richmond, Pitt, and Cincinnati.

It was a nightmare for the Minutemen in their encounter with the Dukes a little over a week ago, as senior guard Alex Eldridge hit the floor, sprained knee ligaments and was lost to UMass for three straight games.

Haymore was called for three technical fouls for holding on to the rim after slam-dunking the ball, and like Leaman, as from the game. Haymore collected 23 points before he exited with 11 minutes to go in the game.

"The Dukes," said Leaman, "other than Rutgers, are the team that likes to run the most. They outrebounded us tremendously, 58-43 and are very quick and aggressive.

"But if they are not shooting the ball, they can be easily blown off the court, and in the course of their run and gun offenses, they throw the ball away a lot."

Other than Flenery, averaging 16.1 per game the Dukes have only two other double digit shooters in 6'3" guard Lonnie McClain (11.6) and 6'7" forward Rich Cotten (11.5).

In the triumph over UMass, McClain had seven points while Cotten had 14. But what Duquesne does best is rebound the ball. With Cotten, 6'7" center Jesse Hubbard and sophomre 6'6" forward John Moore, the Dukes finished third in the league in rebounding (40.2).

"The thing we have to do against them," said Leaman, "is to slow down the game and to rebound the ball better. Lenny Kohlhaas, Eric Williams, Mike Pyatt and Mark Haymore are going to have to play better defense against their forwards."

The Minutemen, on the way down to Pittsburgh, were loose, easy and confident of beating Dusquesne.

"This is the first time in a long time the whole team is healthy (except freshman forward Jay Stewart who did not make the trip because of the flu)" said Mike Pyatt.

"We just have to produce. There just aren't any excuses anymore," said Pyatt, a 20-plus scorer over the last five games.

Sports shorts

While anxiously waiting to see what UMass Athletic Director Frank McInerney has to say in his article in tomorrow's Sports Plus [part of The Boston Globe], permit me to entertain you with a whole drawer full of sports tidbits that I've been meaning to get rid of:

Leave it to Reggie Jackson to blatantly promote tooth decay in the guise of a new candy bar bearing his name.

Pardon my ignorance, but did the Bruins ever get around to retiring Bobby Orr's uniform number? For you trivia buffs it's number four, by the way.

While on the subject of trivia, here's a good one to ponder while waiting to have your ticket torn off at Worcester Dining Commons: Who was the Los Angeles Dodgers' first regular shortstop after their move from Brooklyn? The year was 1958. Answer below.

Won't the Red Sox be rather embarrassed this spring if reserve infielders Bob Bailey, Tommy Helms, and Denny Doyle outperform "super" free-agent acquisition Jack Brohamer in preseason training?

I hope that this will be the year that I can go to a Little League baseball game without being subjected to seeing adults making fools of themselves.

Now that the very capable Peter Gammons has left Sports Illustrated and has been given back his old baseball beat with The Boston Globe, what will happen to Bob Ryan, the man who previously covered the sport?

Holy cow, what is all this baseball nonsense? Is it that time of the year already? Locally, the UMass baseball team will head down to Florida on March 16 for spring training. The junket will consist of twenty-five people, including two coaches and a trainer. By the way, coach Dick Berquist has made reservations on a "group 40" rate and has ten or so openings left. If you're interested in a ten-day trip to Florida for only $165, then call Berquist at 545-2759. In preparation for the trip, the baseball team has been training in Boyden for the last four weeks.

The lacrosse team, a.k.a. Garber's Gorrillas, has been training in Boyden, too...
...I'm going to miss John Havlicek...

As far as winter UMass sports are concerned, this weekend is a definite biggie. The Lea-men will be in the EAA tourney in Pittsburgh, the grapplers will be in the New Englands at URI, the mens' swimming team will be in the New Englands at Springfield College, and both ski teams will be participating in championship competition. Monday's Collegian sports pages ought to be popular...

Foot-in-Mouth Department

During the state high-school wrestling championships in Springfield last week the coach of the University of New Hampshire wrestling team, on a recruiting trip, was rumored to have told a prospect that his team had beaten UMass. Not only did UMass pound the Wildcats 30-15 on Monday, but the victory was the tenth consecutive UMass win over UNH...

Speaking of wrestling, the Minutemen should have an interesting team to follow next season. Coach Dave Amato will have nine out of ten starters returning, as co-captain Tim Fallon spot is the only vacancy to fill. That spot may go to Steve McLarney or Mike Caroll, two freshmen who have been impressive in spot duty this season. Of course, even the returnees will have to earn their jobs back next year. Amato has this knack of recruiting good talent...

Oh, one more thing on wrestling: I have misspelled grappler Bob Radowicz's name as "Radiwitz" about twelve times this season and the good-natured Sunderland native never bothered to mention it to me. Sorry, Bib...

Answer to trivia question: If you said Pee Wee Reese go stand in the corner. The Little Colonel played in only 22 games at shortstop for the Dodgers in 1958, his last season in the bigs. The regular shortstop was current Red Sox manager Don Zimmer, whose playing weight for 1958 is listed at 165 pounds. Who said the knees go first?

Welcome back to Kenmore Sq., Tommy Harper...

Tufts trustees hold vet school

By MARTHA KIMBALL
Collegian Staff

Tufts University trustees this weekend again postponed their approval of the New England Regional Veterinary School, which would establish the first veterinary school in New England.

Final decision by Tufts' trustees is set for April 29. According to Henry T. Wilson, director of public relations for Tufts New England Medical Center, postponement was due to an extensive agenda at the trustee meeting.

Over two years in the planning stages, the organization of the veterinary school changed dramatically from the original concept of intensive shared resources between all six of the New England land grant colleges to an operation controlled totally by Tufts University.

The revised vet school program involves spending the first two years at the Tufts Medical Center in Boston. Third year study will be spent in small animal clinical work at Angel Memorial Hospital in Boston, and in large animal clinical work at Grafton State Hospital. The Grafton facilities were donated by the state, but facilities will be funded and constructed by Tufts.

Students' final year will be dedicated to specialization. Possibilities to work at Woods Hole for those interested in aquatic animals has been suggested.

Originally the vet school concept involved spending the first two years at Tufts and the last two years at one of the six New England land grant colleges.

Dr. W.A. Cowan, head of the Dept. of Animal Industries at the University of Connecticut and chairperson of Connecticut's state Committee for a School of Veterinary Medicine and Surgery, said, "The original concept has turned around 180 degrees. Now states must contract with Tufts University for a number of student seats at the vet school. It has not been decided how the number of seats will be distributed to each state."

"Tufts has the entire ball game," said Joseph Cusker, executive officer for the Council of Presidents of the New England Land Grant Colleges. "I'm under the impression that the vet school will be entirely self-supporting largely from tuition."

With the contract system New England state legislatures must appropriate money to sponsor students. Deborah Addis, press coordinator for Massachusetts' Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, could not speculate how this state's legislature will respond to this demand.

Involvemen from the six New England land grant colleges has been limited. Ross W. Whaley, dean of the College of Food and Natural Resources at UMass, said "We have had only a small amount of involvement with Tufts. I established a task force here at the University to discuss possibilities of a joint relationship between UMass and Tufts, but we have gone nowhere. There is a lot of uncertainty."

Dr. Douglas Stearn, UMass professor in animal science, said, "The task force has not accomplished much. We have discussed the option of a faculty exchange with Tufts and arrangements for teaching some specialties at UMass."

At the University of New Hampshire, Joseph Cusker said the university has talked with Tufts a couple times, but there has been no discussion of common interest.

John Wolford, chairperson of the Dept. of Animal and Veterinary Science at the University of Maine at Orono, said, "We have been contacted and will be meeting this month to be brought up to date. Here we have our own committee evaluating the situation."

Tufts will also completely control financing of the vet school. To date they have received a $10 million grant from the federal government for planning and initial construction. A $25,000 grant was recently donated to Tufts from the Mabel Louise Riley Trust of Newton to be used in the final planning stages. No capital input is asked from the states except in the manner of contracting seats.

The object of the New England Veterinary College is to provide a vet school with a large percentage of New England students. Twenty-five per cent of the seats will be reserved for students from other states and foreign countries.

California chancellor may lead list of candidates for UM presidency

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

The chancellor of the University of California at Berkely is now believed to be the leading candidate to succeed former UMass President Robert C. Wood.

Sources earlier this week told the Collegian Chancellor Albert H. Bowker is the leading candidate for the presidency among a field of seven or eight remaining candidates.

Wood resigned as UMass president effective Jan. 1.

UMass Presidential Search Committee Chairman Stephen G. Breyer yesterday refused to comment on the report that Bowker is the leading candidate for the post.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery and former UMass Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs and Provost Robert L. Gluckstern are still being considered, another source said.

"I'm not commenting on any name," Breyer said. "If you ask me if Jimmy Carter is being considered, I'll tell you the same.

"There is no leading candidate," he added.

Meanwhile, Bowker also refused comments on the reports and directed inquiries to a UCal public affairs spokesman.

"It's very unlikely he'll comment on that," said spokesman Richard Hafner. "He won't have any comment either way."

Breyer said it is not true the field has been narrowed to seven or eight. He said 15 candidates would be a "ballpark figure."

The Presidential Search Committee earlier this year narrowed the field of candidates from approximately 40-50 down to 25.

"We're not dealing with formal lists," he said. "Names are being added and subtracted."

Bowker is a native of Winchendon, Mass. He has served as UCal Berekely chancellor since 1971. Prior to that, he served as chancellor of the City University of New York system for eight years. the CUNY system has 18 campuses and some 200,000 students.

Bowker also served as a faculty member at Stanford University for 20 years. He received a bachelor's degree in statistics from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and a master's degree from Columbia University.

MBM probe drags on

Ex-state official's denial contradicts testimony

BOSTON [AP] — A top official in the administration of former Gov. Francis W. Sargent has denied meeting with former Gov. Endicott Peabody prior to the signing of a $6 million consulting contract, contradicting Peabody's sworn trial testimony of a year ago.

Albert Zabriskie yesterday told a legislative committee probing the McKee-Berger-Mansueto contract he never met with Peabody until after the contract was signed.

Zabriskie was deputy commissioner of administration and finance at the time in question. Peabody was both lawyer and lobbyist for MBM, a firm which has admitted paying out thousands of dollars to Massachusetts politicians.

Zabriskie said that during 1969 he might have seen Peabody in the state office building garage or when he came to meet with then Commissioner of Administration Donald Dwight.

He also denied meeting with Peabody prior to a 1971 legislative investigation into the MBM contract.

"When the order for an investigation was filed, Mr. Dwight called me in and asked me not to discuss the situation except with the committee," Zabriskie said.

Rep. Gerald Cohen, D-Andover, chairman of the Post Audit and Oversight subcommittee conducting the probe, told Zabriskie in no uncertain terms he thought he was lying.

"We have evidence that Peabody contacted you relative to the House order even before the legislative commission was set up," Cohen said.

Peabody testified during the trial of former Sens. Joseph DiCarlo and Ronald MacKenzie, both convicted of shaking down MBM for $40,000 in connection with that earlier probe.

Peabody's records introduced at that trial indicate the former governor met with Zabriskie Feb. 12, 1971.

Just before the contract was awarded by Dwight to MBM, Peabody testified he "made a very strong advocacy for MBM" to both Zabriskie and Walter J. Poitrast, director of the Bureau of Building Construction.

Poitrast also appeared before the committee yesterday to "correct" his earlier testimony.

Poitrast had told the committee last week he could not recall any meetings with Peabody prior to 1971. Yesterday, he said he remembered a meeting, possibly in the fall of 1969, at which Peabody, accompanied by a salesman for MBM, Martin Heyman, discussed the firm's work with him.

Elvis Costello

Costello breaks instruments in controversial Ballroom concert

By K. STEPHEN SHAIN
Fine Arts Staff

The much anticipated Willie Alexander-Elvis Costello concert in the UMass Student Union Ballroom Wednesday night ended in a controversy almost as intense as the music itself. In a dramatic display of anger and frustration, Elvis and his band, The Attractions, broke from their usual routine and exited after 37 minutes, leaving a trail of broken instruments and smashed sound equipment behind them.

Starting almost an hour late due to technical difficulties and transportation problems (Elvis' bus broke down enroute from Maryland) the concert began at 9:00 before an anxious and enthusiastic crowd of 900 fans, critics, and curious onlookers.

Willie Alexander and the Boom-Boom Band opened the evening with an energetic set of straight forward rock n' roll. Looming over the crowd and, at times, cowering before it, Willie generated a presence and a personality as wild and as curious as his music. Supported by Severin Grossman on bass, Billy Loosigian on guitar, and David McClean on drums, Willie sang and danced with the best of them, rendering a surprisingly simple and seductive version of the classic, "You've Lost That Lovin' Feeling," as well as his own, "Radio Heart," presumably a rock n' roll tribute to culture, American style.

Anxious for Elvis, the fans did not give Willie a chance to perform a well-earned and much-deserved encore by chanting "El-vis, El-vis" over the Dee Greaze-led, "We want Willie" cheer. Hurt by this rude affront to his dignity (Willie opened the show exclaiming, "It's so great to be back in Massachusetts!" Willie let his set stand at an even 40 minutes without an encore.

After 20 minutes of disccuion and debate among the audience over CBS' oppressive "no cameras" policy and a half-hearted attempt to collect them, Elvis bee-lined for the stage, his band behind him, and in one fell swoop, to everyone's surprise, broke right into "Mystery Dance." Without losing momentum, Elvis followed up immediately with a new version of "Less Than Zero," specially reconstituted for American audiences.

Playing short, tight numbers charged with the zeal of the best of the new wave and the rythmic intensity of reggae, Elvis raced from one song into another, amazing everyone with not only his immaculate guitar playing but his lyrical grace and staged presence. Backed by Bruce Thomas on bass, Steve Manson on keyboards, and Pete Thomas on drums, Elvis took the crowd through seldom-trod corridors of the mind, exploring sensitivities they never knew existed.

All was not well however, and no matter what Elvis tried to do, the audience was still too inhibited to dance. Exhorting the crowd to "Stop lookin' at all the scenery", and dedicating songs to people too stoned to dance, Elvis tried but couldn't move the audience out of their rut of spectator awe and madness.

Elvis was plagued with technical difficulties as well. The sound system was on the fritz and half-way through the set the organ broke down, leaving the keyboardist with an inadequately wired acoustic piano to complete the set. Finally, and most importantly, after only 29 minutes of Elvis, the amplifier stacks on the right of the stage collapsed, leaving the band with only half a sound system and the audience with an excuse to stand up. Originally rising to gawk at the destruction, the audience finally got the beat and proceeded, all too late, to dance.

Insulted by this gesture that seemed to indicate that only destruction would budge the crowd, Elvis rushed to conclude the set with a rocking number that ended on a fitting note. In a display of frustrated anger unknown since the Who's early days, Elvis and the band smashed their equipment before their hasty departure from the stage.

Grabbing his guitar by the neck in an "instrumentalicidal" attempt to choke its supposed life out, Elvis flung it into the stage knocking mikes and stands over. After the band had demolished its equipment, they stormed off the stage, once again led by Elvis and in single file, left the once enthusiastic crowd dazed and stunned...but definitely wanting more.

When asked why he destroyed the equipment, the fledging star responded, "Because it was no fucking good." When asked why he didn't do an encore, El quipped "because we smashed the bleeding equipment." Once again, in his own peculiar way, Elvis Costello approximates genius.

'Illusions' a spiritual play; focus on good and evil

By TERRELL EVANS
and ANGELA THOMAS
Collegian Staff

The play, "Illusions, A Ceremony" opened last night at Bowker Auditorium. Written and directed by Carlos Anderson, "Illusions" is a spiritual play dealing with the opposing forces of man's conflict and misunderstanding about the opposing forces of good and evil, and the relationship between the two.

Good and Evil, represented by Christ and Lucifer, respectively, revealed to man that the two forces could not and do not exist without the other. In order for one to become physically, mentally, and spiritually clean, one must first know and experience uncleanliness, uncleanliness being the misdeeds, lies, and hatred that people inflict upon each other.

In the role of "Composite Man," Anderson represented the mixture of good and evil. Anderson in the role of "Composite Man," staged a dramatic performance as the medium for the forces of good and evil.

With the help of Lucifer (Bob Ruder), his accomplice, Christ (Norman Lewis), and others, "Composite Man" was taken to various stages of awareness until he came to the "Ultimate Lessening," and learned of the relationship between good and evil. "Composite Man" learned that Lucifer and Christ are brothers, and both are creations of God.

The songs in "Illusions" were beautifully done by Carlos Anderson, Terry Jenoure, Walter Howard and Rhonda Anderson Gordon. Costumes were brilliant in that they drew very clear distinctions to what characters played which roles, and what force they represented.

"Illusions" will feature two more performances, tonight and tomorrow at 8 p.m.

Student pleads innocent to charges of assault

NORTHAMPTON — UMass freshman Peter A. Dionne pleaded innocent yesterday to charges of rape and assault and battery in the Hampshire County District Court here.

Dionne, an engineering major from Wilbraham was released on $1,000 bail pending his hearing on March 16, a courthouse spokesperson said.

The Gorman dormitory resident was arrested in connection with a reported rape of a UMass freshman on February 24. This is the first reported rape on the UMass campus this year, according to a campus police spokesman.

UMass Sgt. Philip Cavanaugh, who arrested Dionne Wednesday afternoon, refused to comment yesterday saying he is prohibited from discussing cases of alleged sensitive crime offenses.

BU President Silber wants medical students to pay

Boston University President John Silber, a vocal critic of the budget operations at UMass-Worcester Medical School in the past, yesterday said he would like to see graduates of both public and private medical schools pay for their subsidized education.

Chairman of the state Senate Ways and Means Committee James Kelley, D-Oxford, earlier this week suggested the UMass Board of Trustees reconsider its plan for UMass medical school graduates pay for their subsidized education, either by an $8,000 payment or a year's service as a doctor in the state.

Silber said he suggested six years ago graduates of private institutions like Boston University pay the total cost of their medical school education, but he said administrators of other institutions opposed the idea.

Silber yesterday said within the next few years more medical schools in both the private and public sectors will strongly consider proposals to have graduates pay for the total cost of their education. He said Boston University spends $15,000 for educating a medical student who pays $5,000 tuition.

Estimates of how much UMass spends in the education of a medical school student include $15,000 by UMass officials, $30,000 by Kelley and $44,000 by Silber.

Archie Shepp's family hurt in automobile accident

SUNDERLAND — The wife and sons of Archie Shepp, UMass Afro-American professor and Black classical music performer, were treated for facial and abdominal injuries at Cooley Dickinson Hospital following an automobile accident here yesterday morning, Sunderland police said.

Garth Shepp, 37, received lacerations on her chin after the car she was driving was struck by a vehicle driven by 20-year-old David Case on Rte. 116 according to police.

Police said Case is being charged with four traffic violations: operating to endanger, failure to grant the right of way, operating a vehicle without a registration and failure to keep to the right of a line before turning.

Shepp and her 18-year old son, Pavel, were treated and released from Cooley Dickinson in Northampton but her 15-year-old son Accra suffered abdominal injuries and was kept in the hospital last night for observation, according to a hospital spokeswoman.

Physical plant exterminates cockroaches from Grayson

Physical plant workers yesterday exterminated cockroaches from an Orchard Hill dormitory, evacuating its residents betwee 9 a.m. and 5 p.m.

According to Grayson House Head of Residence Joyce Chestnut, the seventh floor north was infested with cockroaches. "People have said that they've seen them in other parts of the dorm too," said Chestnut.

Dorm residents were asked to clear all wall space by placing furniture in the center of the room. They were also asked to remove the dresser drawers from their cubicles.

Chestnut and several R.A.'s accompanied the exterminators through the dorm rooms. Bathrooms and storage rooms were also sprayed.

Chestnut indicated that the exterminating problem was not over. "As far as I know, the plan is to spray again over the semester break," she said.

State Rep. Collins to hold office hours on campus

State Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, will hold office hours on campus tomorrow from noon to 1:15 p.m. in the offices of the SGA presidents, room 430 Student Union Building.

Collins, the vice-chairman of the Committee on Education, has held monthly office hours on campus since he was first elected to the legislature in 1972.

"My UMass office hours provide me with an opportunity to talk to individual students and groups about problems and issues that concern them," Collins said. "In most cases I can help the student myself but if not I probably can get in touch with someone who can."

End of UMW predicted if pact fails

[AP] — On the eve of the first balloting to ratify a contract that could end the 87-day-old coal strike, United Mine Workers president Arnold Miller went to West Virginia coal country yesterday and warned that rejection could kill the UMW.

In Washington President Carter urged the miners to accept the proposed contract.

Most rank-and-file miners vote on the pact this weekend, but some locals vote today, others as late as Monday.

Because many miners have expressed reservations — and even anger — about the pact, Miller and other union officials have been airing radio and television ads since Tuesday to urge ratification yesterday, he and UMW vice president Sam Church were in West Virginia, urging ratification in a state where 60,000 of the 160,000 striking miners live.

In Ohio, Illinois, West Virginia and several other states, hundreds of UMW locals were meeting to discuss the proposal.

Reaction ranged from flat denunciation to resigned acceptance, and it was difficult to predicting how the vote might go.

In a telephone interview with The Associated Press from Oak Hill, W. Va., Miller said that if the pact is killed, the union could find itself bankrupt and negotiating separately with 2,600 coal companies.

He said the Bituminous Coal Operators Association, with which the UMW reached its tentative agreement last Friday, has said it won't negotiate further as a unit if the contract is turned down.

"I don't see how we can go back to the bargaining table," Miller said. "We'd have to have a huge number of bargaining councils. It would cost us $15 million to bargain under those conditions."

Miller also said that if the contract were turned down, he expects Carter to take action to force the miners back to work. But he said the miners would refuse to work under a Taft-Hartley injunction, and that would mean he and the union would be fined: "A fine to the union — that would wipe us out," he said.

In Washington, meanwhile, Carter said of the UMW members: "I hope they will vote affirmatively,"

At a news conference yesterday Carter also defended his handling of the strike as "a carefully balanced judgment...Had we precipitously imposed our will in the coal strike deliberations, that effort would have been counter-productive."

The proposed contract would raise wages from an average $7.80 by a maximum $2.40 over three years. The most controversial provisions would make miners pay part of the cost of some medical treatments that have been free, would make the health plan company-run rather than independent; would continue a pension plan that gives recent retirees larger checks than other pensioners, and would allow companies to penalize leaders of wildcat strikes.

Even if the miners ratify the contract, it would not automatically end the strike. The UMW is negotiating with the American Bituminous Contractors for a separate contract to cover an estimated 30,000 construction miners.

Senate reaction varied on spring concert plans

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

Reaction yesterday by student politicians to the Student Senate decision on holding a free Black American Music Festival ranged from calls to begin preparing for the concert to consideration of an injunction to halt preparations for the festival.

The agreement reached by the Senate on Wednesday night proposed a festival with no admission for UMass undergraduates who pay their Student Activities Tax. All others would pay $6. A donation will be made to the Edward Kennedy (Duke) Ellington Foundation under the condition that the Senate is repaid its investment of $44,880, the cost of the concert.

No money will go to the Foundation until the Secretary of the Commonwealth incorporates the New York based organization. The treasurer of the Senate and the chairman of the UMass Afro-Am Department must sit on the board of directors of the foundation. The talent will be chosen by a committee consisting of one member of the Union Program Council, one member of the festival committee and the senate treasurer.

The general outline for this proposal was presented by former Student Government Association co-President Paul Cronin. Cronin made this proposal after another plan for two events was defeated. This motion, sponsored by Senator John Foley, proposed a free, "traditional" spring concert and a Black American Music Festival with a $3 admission fee. The vote on the Foley plan was defeated by a vote of 35-34.

Third World Senator John Yong said "the most important thing" was that "the theme, which was for an educational and good cause," was preserved. Yong said "If the Festival is pushed as a position and creative endeavor it will be successful and everyone will enjoy it no matter where you come from."

Student Senator Jay Milander said he has "good grounds for an injunction." However, he said he "will not do it if people are happy with" the Senate decision. Milander based his consideration for the injunction on his belief that "this concert could lose upwards of forty thousand dollars ... The Senate can't guarantee the loss this concert might take."

Milander added he was in favor of the Festival. He said "the potential rewards of two shows are greater." Milander was "livid at the Senate ... for acting as rude as it did" on Wednesday night.

He referred to Senator Lynda Ciano who was "laughed off the floor." Milander said he was angry at "the whole Senate," not "any one faction."

Third World Senator Renee Mobley said she was, "pleased the concert is still on and the Senate lived up to part of its original commitment." However she said she was not pleased "because the chances of getting a profit is very slim."

Foley said the Third World caucus "sold out the concert of a BAMF" by allowing beer concessions at the event. Foley said this "allows it to become a beer blast." Foley added that "anytime you go against the black community they call you a racist."

Senator Yong said Foley's "sellout" statement was based on "misassumptions." Yong said "a lot of white liberals" fail to understand that cultural and experiential backgrounds are different." He added that "white people are not sensitive to what Third World people are about ... Ignorance of (this) experience is racism."

Yong also said the lack of understanding "causes people who would like to think in integrated, non-racial terms to be missing the point."

Senate Treasurer Priscilla West, when asked if the concert could return the student government investment as outlined in the agreement said "no way Jose."

Senate Speaker Pat Whelan said "talent is still entirely up in the air." He said he was "looking forward to experiencing this event." He called it "an excellent opportunity to experience an art form not predominantly available to students on campus."

Carter makes promises to prop up sagging dollar

WASHINGTON [AP] — President Carter tried to prop up the crashing dollar yesterday by touting investments in the United States, promising less consumption of foreign oil and predicting that U.S. trading partners will be able to buy more American goods.

He pledged to take direct action to support the dollar if necessary but said it would stabilize and "remain in good shape" without help once European money markets weigh his statements and start realizing the dollar's actual worth.

The president spoke at a news conference as the dollar encountered renewed pressure after plunging to a record low on foreign exchanges. The drop means imported products such as automobiles and television sets are likely to cost more in the United States.

It also means Americans overseas will get less for the dollars they spend.

Carter met with reporters at the National Press Club in an unusual session where questions were submitted in writing to conform with club tradition. The questions were selected by the president of the club, Frank Aukofer of the Milwaukee Journal.

Usually at news conferences, reporters get the president's nod, stand and ask their questions personally.

Students' New Orleans trip lead topic at BOG meeting

By JOHN REESE
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center-Student Union Board of Governors last night heard a report by a Campus Program Council member on the trip of five students to the National Entertainment Conference for Colleges, held last month in New Orleans.

David Kantor cited the cost of the trip at $1200. The convention, according to Kantor, was designed to expose and educate the various college representatives to the various aspects of the entertainment industry.

The convention offered workshops in booking, concert organization, and publicity. Kantor said the representatives also were able to meet a number of people in the entertainment industry.

"The campus should be in for some pretty exciting stuff," said Kantor. According to Kantor, "The personal contacts we made were priceless." "We were able to meet a wide variety of people in the industry and they expressed a real interest in working together with us in bringing quality, national entertainment to UMass."

Kantor pointed to the recent Elvis Costello concert and the upcoming J. Geils Band and Maria Muldaur concerts as examples of "name bands" contracted by the Campus Center Program Council to appear at UMass this semester.

Kantor said no bookings were made for the Black American Music Festival.

The board of governors also passed a motion allocating a maximum of $300 for International Women's Week interpreters for lectures and workshops.

A motion was passed designating the music room as a no smoking area and requesting the Campus Center administration to construct the appropriate no smoking signs.

Black Affairs

The American Music Festival, a conflict of interest?

By THE BLACK AMERICAN MUSIC FESTIVAL COMMITTEE
Special to Black Affairs

In view of the heated controversy concerning the Black American Music Festival, the stiff compromise motion made here last week which was subsequently vetoed, we are faced with a conflict of interest; economic, political and ideological although not necessarily in that order.

The first thing that comes to mind is the obvious contradiction in the Senate's past and present behavior. Did it not seriously consider and unanimously support the proposal each and every time it was presented? Have not the supposed major objections to sponsor an educational program documenting Black music as a paid benefit, the proceeds of which would go towards the establishment of the Duke Ellington Foundation, been accepted facts since the initial proposition in November of 1976? The Black American Music Festival was never intended to be the "traditional spring concert" which is totally different in form, content and significance.

The opposition has placed such tremendous emphasis on tradition. From every corner we hear "This has never been done before." Are we to assume that nothing changes? Being reluctant to think and act progressively no one can conceive of an alternative to what has been tradition. Senators have been more responsive to a backlash reaction which could have and should have been avoided had any attempt been made to present the Black American Music Festival to the campus population in a positive light.

The Festival does not seek to alienate white students nor to become a spring concert in blackface. The Festival is a new concept for which the University is ready if only its student politicians were not in fact giving credence to reactionary, backwards behavior.

There is no rational reason why a concert of Black talent cannot be both educationally and commercially successful. Of course this requires a little more vision and commitment on the part of Student leaders who must recognize that changes in consciousness shape thoughts that direct actions and ultimately alter history. We can safely assume that even UMass is subject to this universal dynamic.

With the festival comes an opportunity to illuminate Black American culture which the final analysis is the essence of Black people, in a universally popular arena that attracts all racial and ethnic groups. However, this legislature chooses to hide behind tradition, ignoring the possibilities for change, for growth. There is no excuse for maintaining ignorance.

What is required to change that reality is certainly within the capabilities of everyone present.

The first requirement is a co-operative effort towards producing and promoting the Black American Music Festival, the second is an understanding that the festival is an investment made by the entire UMass community towards a shared goal.

Now questions arise as to what is the nature of this investment both financially and sociologically?

The financial investment is simple enough. The Student Senate allocates X amount of dollars towards producing the event to incur expenses for talent, publicity, security, etc. The student body purchases tickets at nominal cost, the general public pays a higher admission fee and a percentage of the proceeds are donated towards the establishment of the Duke Ellington Foundation. Suddenly there is an uproar concerning agreements which have been clearly articulated for the past eighteen months.

Nevertheless, the questions arise: Why do students have to pay money?

Because, benefit concerts are designed to raise money, and the BAMF is a benefit program.

Then, to benefit whom? Why the Duke Ellington Foundation?

The answers to these questions enter the realm of sociological investment or more simply will this project have an impact on society including the immediate community of UMass. At this point it seems appropriate to review the Foundations proposal and even to familiarize ourselves with who was Duke Ellington, and why do we choose to pay such great tribute to this individual. Perhaps this information will give more meaning to the decision made here in support of such and endeavor as the Duke Ellington Foundation.

For the particulars of Duke Ellington's phenomenal music career, this should have been homework for everyone who expects to make an informed decision on this issue. As for his music it is played somewhere in the world on an average of every twelve minutes and shouldn't be too difficult to find.

Edward Kennedy Ellington was one of the greatest artists of the twentieth or any century, he was a Black American and his musical heritage Black American Music is one of the only art forms indiginous to the United States.

This should be an area of interest to any intelligent citizen of this nation certainly it should be part of the curriculum of anyone studying at the University level. Racism lives as viciously in apathy as it dies in oppression, nothing is going to make us aware if we do not choose to learn, nothing is going to move unless we take the first step.

PURPOSE

It is fitting that the home of Mr. Ellington, perhaps the greatest international ambassador of Black music, serve to permanently commemorate the massive achievements of Black music in America. To that end, we propose to establish:

—an historical museum devoted to the procurement, care, study and display of objects and events which reflect the development of Black American music.

—a musical archives to house and preserve popular and rare recordings and written music.

—an educational division which will utilize experts in the musical and ancillary professions as staff, consultants, and volunteers, to provide instruction to youth through music. This division of the Foundation will have an outreach component, which will develop formal ties with public, private and community-based schools and other educational centers.

—a scholarship fund for aspiring musicians.

—a funding sources for agencies and individuals performing research in areas related to the aims and interests of The Foundation.

'I have a proposal'

By TERRELL EVANS
Black Affairs Staff

At this time I propose a Classic American Music Festival, and not a "Black American Music Festival." This festival to be at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst, will be held sometime in the spring of 1978. The festival will focus upon music which was born, perfected and to some extent popularized here in America.

This festival will feature music that, through its own diversity has been the underlying strain of all other music created in America.

The festival will have American musicians, born and bred in the United States, who have to a certain extent continued to practice American Classical Music" in its original form. Let it be known that this festival is to be billed not as a "Black American Music Festival," but a 'Classic American Music Festival.'

There shall be a charge to all who attend, the proceeds will go towards establishing a foundation that will preserve and perpetuate the only original music art form created in these United States, since the first European set foot upon this land.

The music in the proposal was created by Blacks. Therefore, a "Classic American Music Festival" would have to be a "Black American Music Festival." The festival is not culturally limited because the music has effected every type of music ever created in America.

Leftfield

As for the student senators who claim their "constituents" do not want a Black American Music Festival, they have a job to perform. That job is to determine whether their "constituents" have taken a "racist" approach to the idea, an "honest" approach, or perhaps a "honestly racist" approach. If it is the first or the last choice, then it is the senators job not to allow this approach to influence his or her decision, due to its nature. After all they are senators, a part of the student government, who represent much more than their "constituents."

From my point of view, UMass is still living in the sixties. Therefore UMass is a testing ground to see if politics without violence will work. It is up to the people of UMass to see that it does. If it doesn't there is another society that knows what to do. This society I will write about next week.

Student Senate report

By RENEE MOBLEY
Black Affairs Staff

The Black American Music Festival has finally become a reality, at least within the confines of a Student Senate commitment.

After 7¼ hours of tense debate, often laced with racial overtones, the Senate this past Wednesday, March 1, committed itself and $44,880 of its funds to the production of a Black American Music Festival (B.A.M.F.).

This festival is to be free to all UMass undergraduate students, while the fee for all others set at six dollars.

The festival, when it was first introduced as a proposal in December of 1976, was never intended to be a replacement for the spring concert. The festival was originally planned to take place in the fall, but problems in the senate bureaucracy made it impossible to sign talent during the summer break in time for the fall semester.

Because of the type of publicity the concert received and because of the fervor generated in some constituencies over the issue, the festival began to be looked upon as a threat to the tradition of a spring concert.

The rising conflicts in past weeks resulted in a proposal, made by John Foley, that was meant to appease both sides.

Foley proposed that there be two concerts, one the B.A.M.F. to be held on a Saturday and the other spring concert to be held on the following Sunday.

Those who supported this proposal argued that it would be the best solution in light of the controversy. They further claimed that a spring concert, which would share production costs with the B.A.M.F., would help to insure a minimal loss, if a loss was to be incurred.

Opponents to this proposal found it unlikely that the spring concert, which has for the past two years lost large sums of money, could help the B.A.M.F. financially. Debaters went on to state that a free concert on the day after the festival would hamper ticket sales for the festival.

Kwaku Saunders, a main advocate for the festival, pointed out that the rain date of the B.A.M.F. had been set for the same day that Foley proposed to hold the spring concert. Thus there would be a conflict if it rained on Saturday.

John Foley's proposal was amended by Paul Cronin. The new proposal called for one free concert, the Black American Music Festival.

Since the main, apparent opposition to the festival had been the $3.00 charge for UMass students it was thought that this proposal would be acceptable.

It became clear that the amount of money was not the main issue. One senator, representing the Greek area, made this clear when she stated that her constituents felt that it was unfair to use their SATF money to fund an all black concert.

Cross debate occurred when a Third World senator agreed that Third World students payed SATF funds year after year to support concerts which they had no interest in at all.

It was at this time that Speaker Pat Whelan called for a five minute recess to allow tensions in the room to subside.

The final motion that passed on the senate floor, shortly before 2:30 a.m., allowed for the B.A.M.F. to receive an allocation to produce the show.

It was decided in subsequent amendments, that all concessions monies, earned at the festival, would go to the Edward Kennedy (Duke) Ellington Foundation, as well as all profits over and above the production costs.

This money would remain in a special senate account until such time as the foundation is incorporated in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The amendment also stipulated that the chairperson of the Afro Am department and the treasurer of the senate be seated on the board of directors of the Ellington foundation.

Stan Kinard and Kwaku Saunders questioned the feasibility of such an amendment since the foundation would be based in the state of New York. The foundation might not be able to receive tax exempt status in New York if it were forced to incorporate in Massachusetts.

Regardless of the opposition the amendment passed and became a binding requirement to be filled before the foundation can receive the money from the special senate account.

The festival now is in its final stages. All that remains to be done is the signing of the talent.

In the words of senate speaker Pat Whelan "We're going to have ourselves one hell of a festival!"

High Notes...

WHO IS THIS FELLA? Since American label Mercury has picked up the masters of his "Zombie" LP, Fela Anikulapo Kuti has begun to stir up some interest on the music scene here in the states. The question on some lips is, "Who is Fela Anikulapo Kuti?". To begin with, he's also Fela Ransome Kuti. He's recorded other material with that name (mostly on Makossa Editions) and the change in middle names is most likely due to a history of harassment from Nigerian officials.

Fela tells us about it somewhat in "Everything Scatter" where he speaks of his band's van being ransacked and the band arrested for being Amugbo people (marijuana smokers) and whisked away to a mosquito-infested swamp that serves as a prison camp.

To some, Fela is a coward as he keeps a low profile (when not performing an occasional concert) and has recently constructed an electrified fence around his home. To even more people, he's something of a folk hero singing about his oppressors and avoiding their retaliation all the while. Fela is the Proverbial "fly in the face" of those who pursue him. For them, he will live to sing another day. His mother spoke out for him saying that her son was not a coward in the January issue of Black Music, a magazine published in the United Kingdom. I, for one, believe her.

The music of Fela (which is what his many fans call it) is Afro Beat. It's very percussive (as is derived from its traditional African roots). Not only in the use of drums, congas and other traditional instruments, but in the horn arrangements that seem to cry out from behind the drums. Afro Beat conveys not only messages for Fela (and other artists) but it also conveys plenty of excitement, as anyone who has seen Fela and his Africa 70 Band will tell you. A Fela performance, I'm told is something to behold.

The level of excitement can be felt even on his recordings. While Zombie (from what I've heard of his music) is some very infectious music, it's not his best or most exciting. I've had the joy of hearing "Roforo Fight", one of Fela's most exciting and moving pieces. The music here, again, is percussive with a very hypnotic element. Before the listener becomes entranced though, he may be awakened by a stinging horn riff or by Fela himself and a vocal outcry. Fela will also do a little hypnotizing, as some of his vocals are smooth, crowing chants that he will repeat rapidly and take to a climax.

Fela and the Africa 70 Band is the best Afro beat band in the business. They were also voted such by many of the more knowledgable Black music periodicals. Fela is an amazing talent with not only his performing but also his writing. Fela writes all his material so all the messages are his. From "Zombie" and its attack on the regimentation of the military to "Fe Fe Nii Fe Fe" from his "Creole" LP.

Fela is not a debut act by any stretch of the imagination. Many have likened him to Bunny Wailer and Bob Marley because of his protest style but the truth is that Fela has served as a guage for judging this genre of music. Fela precedes these gentlemen and will probably outlast them with the Afro Beat as Reggae seems to be opting for more danceable arrangements and carrying (in some cases) less of a message, while Afro Beat is highly danceable and in Fela's case carries an uncompromising message.

Announcements

CCEBS

On Thursday, March 9, 1978, at the Placement Office, a representative from Proctor & Gamble will be interviewing for a sales position. Interested CCEBS students, especially graduating seniors, should contact Brian Maher in room 209 New Africa House immediately.

Fashion Show

The Third World Women's Center will sponsor a Spring Fashion Show, to be held April 29. Volunteers for male and female models are needed. All are welcome. A list for signatures will be posted inside the New Africa House lobby.

Art Exhibit

The Sylvan Cultural Society would like to sponsor a Third World art exhibit. The exhibit is tentatively scheduled for the second week in March. Any Third World student who has works they would like to have shown should contact Renee Mobley at 6-4278.

Drum

DRUM — a student run literary and arts magazing is asking for contributions for the Spring issue in the areas of Art, Photography, Poetry, Essay, Fiction, Reviews and any information relevant to the student body. All articles must be typewritten and double spaced. The deadline is March 17th. Submit articles to Afro-Am office, New Africa House, UMass, Amherst.

Benefit dance held tonight

There will be a benefit disco on Saturday, March 4, from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. on the 10th floor of the Campus Center at UMass, Amherst. Proceeds from the disco will go towards defraying expenses for EXPO-CUBA '78, a national poster contest-exhibit.

There will be Latin, Salsa, and disco music at the event. There will also be a poster display. Donation is $1.50 at the door and there will be a cash bar.

EXPO-CUBA '78 is being held nationally as a cultural exchange between Cuba and the United States. Cuba's silkscreen designers have attained international prominence in the field of poster are by their use of vibrant colors and bold designs.

The national contest-exhibit is being coordinated by Western Massachusetts artists.

Music will be provided by William "Shady" Grady, winner of last year's "Battle of the DJ's," held at Amherst College.

McNamara residents to lodge complaints

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

Residents of McNamara dormitory last night sent a petition to six University officials demanding the addition of four assistant heads of residence positions for the dorm and the conversion of the basement floor into an open space for community needs, according to Rene Fleurent, vice-president of the McNamara dorm council.

This petition is a reworked edition of an earlier petition that demanded in addition the resignation of Area Director James C. West and Asst. Director Leevon Connor. That edition was changed after members of the dorm council termed its language too extreme.

The second petition is scheduled to be delivered to West, Connor, Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury, Area Management Coordinator Sandra L. Anderson, Director of Residential Resource Management Robert L. Campbell and Director of Community Development Sally A. Freeman, according to Rene Fleurent, vice-president of the McNamara House Council.

Members of the dorm council said last night they could not produce a copy of the new petition, but said it contained the same demands as the first, except for calling for the two resignations.

The original petition claimed the "human and social needs" of the students have been "immorally neglected."

"McNamara is like an office building. There are no social or community activities due to no place in which to have them in. You say you are loosing (sic) money on this dorm; it's because it offers nothing. It is a dumping ground for freshmen," the petition stated.

The petition based the demand for the additional heads of residence on the ratio in the Sylvan Area of assistant heads of residence to students.

"At present there is only one (asst. head of residence) for every 135 students as opposed to one for every 30 students in Northeast. Even with the additional four assistant heads of residence the ratio still remains at only one staff to 65 students," the petition states.

A spokeswoman in the office of Housing yesterday said the capacity of McNamara is 466, and there are presently 384 students living there. That leaves a ratio of one staff to every 96 students, a ratio the spokeswoman said is high in comparison to the rest of the dormitories on campus.

City nixes reevaluation

By ARNOLD WARSHAW
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — After tabling a similar proposal at its last meeting, the city council here last night voted 5-4 to continue taxing city properties at their present assessed values, rather than the new re-evaluations taking place this year.

A second vote on the issue however, will have to be taken at the next meeting before the council's decision goes into effect.

Councilor Paul Bixby, who porposed the order, said he was not looking to permanently put a hold on the reevaluations.

"What I'm asking for is a delay until after the referendum," Bixby said.

The statewide referendum, to be held in November, if passed would cause properties to be assess differently, according to what they're used for.

Opposition to the proposal came from a number of councilors, but the most vocal came from Frances McNulty.

"We really aren't doing the taxpayers a favor because we're moving farther away from 1968 and there'll be a bigger disparity," McNulty said.

All properties in Northampton are being reevaluated this year at 100 percent of their market value. This is the first reevaluation in Northampton since 1968.

This years' property taxes are being based on the reevaluations. McNulty said she was told by the city assessors that using the present assessed values could cause a delay in sending out the tax bills in November.

This is because the city has recently switched from a manual to a computerized system of handling its finances.

Also last night, the council, on a voice vote, appointed city Superintendent of Public works, William Warren to represent the city in an attempt get a $3200 reimbursement from the state for contracted snow removal costs incurred during last month's snowstorms.

Debaters arrive for tourney

By ELLEN DAVIS
Collegian Staff

Seventy students from 12 colleges and universities will be arriving at UMass today to participate in the Minuteman Spring Debate Tournament sponsored by the UMass Debate Union.

From this afternoon until Sunday, the students in teams of two will discuss the issue of whether or not U.S. law enforcement agencies should be given significantly greater freedom in the investigation and-or prosecution of felony crime in debates held in the Campus Center. The debates last two hours each and are open to the public.

Each team will debate eight times, four in favor of the proposition and four against it, before a judge. Final rounds will be held Sunday.

This is the tenth year UMass has sponsored the tournament, which is designed to bring schools with different ideas together and to put students into an atmosphere of intellectual challenge, according to Dave Donovan, assistant debate coach.

This year's tournament will be slightly different from last year's because novice as well as varsity debaters can participate, said Donovan. Most of UMass' eight teams will be made up of novices who joined the program in January.

"This will give them a chance to see if they like the activity or not," said Donovan. Donovan isn't making any predictions about how the UMass contingent will do. "Winning isn't the main objective," he said. "Our focus is to teach students how to argue and speak. Students get something out of debate they cannot get in the classroom. After a year or two of debate you can talk about almost any issue of importance."

This tournament marks the end of the season for many of the 30 students involved in the debate program, which starts in September and consists of two events, tournaments debate and public debate.

Although no team records are kept, on the whole the team is doing as well as last year, according to Donovan. Last year, as well as for the past five years, some UMass debaters have qualified for the National Debate Tournament.

The debate union has been in existence since 1909. It is essentially student-run, with the aid of faculty advisor Ronald Matlon and assistants Donovan, Bob Corn and Lynne Reeck, all of whom are from the Communication Studies Department. The union's funding comes primarily from the alumni association. Student president of the debate union is Nicholas Burdett, who is the coordinator of this weekend's tournament.

Debate has been on the upswing here, especially since Matlon came ten years ago. "Lots of students are becoming concerned with their public speaking ability," said Donovan. "Traditionally, most debaters wanted to become lawyers, but now we have students in environmental design, human services, and pre-med," he said.

This is the fourth event the debate union has sponsored here this year. In October, the union held a debate with students from Oxford University on the subject of pornography. In November the National High School Debate Tournament, probably the largest in the country, was here, and in December a winter novice debate tournament was held.

Commissioner rules out change

FRAMINGHAM [UPI] — Public Safety Commissioner John F. Kehoe said Thursday despite claims of inhuman treatment from several State Police Academy dropouts, the method of training troopers will not change.

The candidates told the Boston Globe Tuesday they quit the academy because of "degrading and inhuman treatment."

"We've investigated all those charges, and they're false," Kehoe said.

Kehoe said one dropout's charges that academy staff members tore his bedding apart and made him drag it through the showers in the men's room were inaccurate.

"What really happened," Kehoe said, "was that the recruits had not made their beds according to the regulations and the staff pulled them apart and told them to make them over.

"At the time, another officer inspected the men's room and found it a mess. The men were summoned there to clean it up and brought their bedding with them."

Kehoe said the agency was "semimilitary" and that all recruits knew what they faced when they entered the academy.

News in Brief

Area owners deny 'three martini lunch'

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (UPI) — Restaurant owners and business people in the area say President Carter is all wet about the three martini lunch, which he wants Congress to trim tax deductions for in his tax reform package.

"There just isn't that much drinking at lunch," said Frank Banks, owner of the Yankee Pedlar Inn in Holyoke. "Most businessmen in here are all on diets. They're eating salads and fish. The bar is never crowded at lunch."

"The businessman we get here can't go out and booze it up at lunch. He can't produce if he does."

Security National Bank President Wallace Burnett said "there are very few businessmen in town who could drink three martinis and even think about working."

"It's just that most people that drink martinis are liars," said John Kelly, who said he was a self-employed businessman from Connecticut. "They don't want people to know they drink their lunch."

House bill denies abortion benefits

BOSTON (UPI) — The House, after more than two hours of emotional debate, passed legislation yesterday denying abortion benefits to state employees covered by state-funded group health insurance.

Passage of the amendment to an $18.4 million deficiency budget came after a series of proposals by Rep. William G. Robinson, R-Melrose, were defeated by wide margins. The anti-abortion amendment now goes to the Senate for further consideration.

The amendment, authored by Rep. Charles V. Doyle, DBoston, would prohibit legislators, state employees and their dependents from getting state-funded abortion coverage except in cases where the mother's life would be endangered.

The Robinson proposals were designed to soften the Doyle amendment by allowing abortions under certain conditions, such as rape and incest and cases in which two doctors determined that the health of the mother would be severely damaged by having a baby.

The Doyle amendment was separated this month from the deficiency budget to allow other provisions of the money bill to be passed without delay.

Last year the House and Senate enacted legislation that denied state-funded abortions to Medicaid patients and state employees. The measure was vetoed by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis. The House overrode the veto, but the Senate sustained it, thus killing it for the 1977 session.

Final enactment of the Doyle amendment would clear the way for state assumption of increased group health insurance premiums. The state currently pays 75 percent of those premiums. Under the proposal, the portion covered by the state would be hiked retroactively to 80 percent on July 1, 1977 and 85 percent on Jan. 1, 1978.

Commission charges deficiency of gains

[Hersay News Service] — The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights has issued a 129-page report charging that there was a "disturbing" lack of economic gains for women and minorities last year.

The Civil Rights Commission said women's rights were severely set back by congressional restrictions on abortions and the failure of states to ratify the Equal Rights Amendment.

The Carter Administration received some praise from the report, however. The commission acknowledged that the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, the Labor and Justice Departments and the Civil Service Commission all had made some "initiative to improve the enforcement of civil rights laws."

Coast Guard orders oil tanker removed

SALEM, Mass. (UPI) — Owners of the 682-foot Greek tanker Global Hope, grounded Feb. 6 during a blizzard, yesterday began another attempt to comply with Coast Guard orders to remove the vessel from Salem Harbor.

A Coast Guard spokesman said the latest salvage plan involves patching holes, refloating the ship next week at high tide and towing it to Boston for repairs. Last month, tugs were unsuccessful in pulling the ship cut to sea during high tide.

Copies of the salvage plan have been sent to the Coast Guard Marine Safety Office, Environmental Protection Agency, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, state Department of Water Pollution Control and Salem city officials.

Coast Guard spokesman Dale Gardner said the salvage operation will be "closely monitored." Holes in the ship engine room were being patched yesterday. Next, ballast water was to be pumped out to lighten the vessel.

Tugs will try to pull the vessel father offshore at high tide on March 9. "One of the reasons for picking the 9th is that we are expecting an unusually high tide then," Gardner said.

An estimated 10,000 gallons of oil spilled into Salem Harbor the day the Global Hope ran aground.

Five men aboard a pilot boat drowned when they attempted to near the vessel during the blizzard.

On Feb. 8, the tanker shifted position and a large rock punctured another hole in a tank. An additional 5,000 gallons of oil was lost.

The Fish and Wildlife Service estimated about 35 birds in the harbor were killed by the oil spill. Much of it drifted out to sea, but an estimated 4,000-5,000 gallons ended up on Cape Cod beaches.

Ten women to climb high Himalayan peak

[Hersay News Service] — A group of ten of the most experienced female mountain climbers in the U.S. are planning to climb Annapurna in the Himalayas next August. Annapurna is the 10th highest mountain in the world and has been climbed only three times before.

The women, ranging in age from 26 to 45 make up the American Women's Himalayan Expeditions, Inc. If they succeed, they will be the first Americans ever to climb Annapurna and the first American women ever to reach a peak exceeding 26,000 feet. Annapurna is 26,545 feet.

Senate committee accepts Miller's nomination

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate Banking Committee yesterday voted 14-1 to approve G. William Miller's nomination to be Federal Reserve Board chairman — just minutes before the government sued Miller's company, Textron Inc.

The full Senate was expected to confirm the 52-year-old business executive today, although disclosure of the suit filed by the Securities and Exchange Commission could complicate the matter.

Banking committee chairman William Proxmire, D-Wis., Miller's chief critic during the lengthy hearings, cast the lone negative vote.

"Although Mr. Miller has been a smashing success in the business community," Proxmire said, "he is not qualified for this particular job. The nation is not well served."

Proxmire cited what he said was Miller's lack of experience in dealing with the economy as a principal reason for his objection.

The Federal Reserve acts as the nation's central bank by controlling credit and interest rates. The chairmanship, held by the controversial Arthur Burns since 1970, has been referred to as "the second most powerful post in Washington."

Miller was nominated by President Carter last December.

His confirmation hearings became stalled while the committee extensively investigated a $2.9 million payment by Bell Helicopter, a subsidiary of Textron, to a sales agency in Iran that was secretly controlled by the head of the Iranian air force.

The Iranian company, Air Taxi, assisted Bell in landing a $500.1 million contract to sell 489 helicopters to the Iranian army. The payment, Miller said, was to settle past services and future claims by Air Taxi.

Proxmire termed the payment "a bribe."

Miller repeatedly denied any knowledge that the Iranian general controlled the company or that he knew of any bribe attempt.

Meanwhile, the SEC has been investigating the Iranian payment as well as several other matters involving overseas payments by Textron.

On Feb. 16, it subpoenaed various company documents. But Textron told the agency in a letter Tuesday it "must decline to produce those documents without a court order protecting their confidentiality."

It said it would comply if secrecy was assured.

The company initially informed the SEC last Friday of its decision. Miller made no mention of the decision when he testified Tuesday. But he did say he was convinced the SEC inquiry would not show any "wrongdoing' by Textron or raise questions about "my integrity."

Soviets blast Czech cosmonaut into space

MOSCOW [UPI] — The Soviet Union blasted a Czechoslovak cosmonaut into space yesterday — the first non-American and non-Soviet spaceman — to join two Soviet comrades who will break the U.S. space endurance record.

Radio Moscow said cosmonaut-researcher Vladimir Remek, 29, of Czechoslovakia, and Soyuz 28, commander Alexei Gubarev, a Russian, were rocketed into space from the Baiknour launch site in Central Asia at 6:28 p.m. 10:28 a.m. EST.

The were expected to rendezvous with the Soyuz 26 cosmonauts aboard the Salyut 6 space station before 9:35 p.m. today — when the 84-day endurance record set Feb. 8, 1974, by astronauts Gerald Carr, Edward Gibson and William Pogue will be broken.

Remek, shown baldish and plump-cheeked in a still photograph broadcast by television, issued a statement before the launch saying he was "honored to be a member of an international space crew" and proud of Czechoslovakia's role in space exploration.

The Soyuz 28 mission, expected to last about a week, was a first time anyone other than a Soviet or an American traveled in space. The United States plans to send up a Western European scientist in a space shuttle flight in late 1980.

The official Tass news agency said, "With the launching of the Soyuz 28, a new stage is opened in the exploration and use of outer space for peaceful purposes jointly by the socialist countries under the Intercosmos cooperation."

Polish and East German cosmonauts would be launched into space later this year and "space flights are also planned for cosmonauts of other Communist countries," Tass said.

The Soviets have also trained Cuban, Mongolian, Romanian, Hungarian and Bulgarian cosmonauts.

Tass said Remek, born in Ceske-Budejovice Sep. 26, 1948, is a military pilot with the rank of lieutenant and a member of the Czech Communist Party. He has been enrolled at the Soviet cosmonaut training center named for Yuri Gagarin, the first man in space, since December 1976.

Gubarev, 46, commanded the Soyuz 17 mission that spent a month aboard the Salyut 4 space lab in 1975. His crewmate at that time, Georgy Grechko, is one of the Soyuz 26 cosmonauts aboard Salyut 6. Both were awarded gold medals Wednesday by the Soviet Academy of Sciences.

Tass said earlier yesterday that Grechko and Soyuz 26 Commander Yuri Romanenko, whose — physical and mental adaptation to life in the weightlessness of space have been praised by Soviet space medical experts — will remain aboard the space lab after the Soyuz 28 mission returns to earth.

Retirement bill favors elderly

WASHINGTON (UPI) — House and Senate negotiators agreed yesterday on a bill to allow millions of Americans who now must retire at 65 to work until 70 if they want to.

Rep. Claude Pepper, D-Fla., chief author, said the measure is of "monumental significance" to elderly Americans.

He predicted the House and Senate quickly will give it final approval and that "within a month or two" it will be signed by President Carter and become law.

The bill forbids private employers and state and local governments throughout the country from imposing on most workers a mandatory retirement age under 70. Now many require retirement at 65.

The bill would become effective Jan. 1, 1979, although additional time would be allowed for management and labor to renegotiate retirement provisions of collective bargaining agreements.

For federal workers, the bill removes the present mandatory retirement age of 70 next Oct. 1, leaving no upper age limit for them.

Costello concert bungled

To the Editor:

I am severely irritated with the latest effort of the Program Council, to wit, the Elvis Costello concert of March 1. I arrived at 7:30 and began waiting in a long line. The concert was scheduled to start at 8:00, but the doors did not open until almost 9:00. The wait wasn't that bad compared to the conditions awaiting us in the SUB. By the time I got in, there were no more seats. There were around 200 people jamming in around the chairs, trying to find a place. It was obvious that an absurd number of tickets were sold, with no regard as to the number of seats. Finally, I managed to get a chair from the storage area. After these chairs were gone, around 100 people were still left, milling around, blocking aisles and people's view. I consider it highly irresponsible of the UPC to over-sell a concert by this much and jam people into the hall in this manner. The most obnoxious thing about the concert was the temperature in the SUB, which was around 85 degrees the whole night. It was very difficult to get excited about the music while sitting in a stiflingly hot, packed hall.

I asked one guard about opening windows, and was told "I just do tickets". An intelligent move would have been to turn off the heat and open the windows before the crowd arrived, to offset the huge amount of body heat coming in. So then the first band came on, at 9:00. Willie sound much better in the Hatch, probably because of the terrible acoustics in the SUB. The band was not very well received, probably due to the fact that everyone was sweltering.

At the break, we were treated to an obnoxious person advising us that, "Elvis won't play if he sees any cameras", followed by a plan to have people turn in their cameras. Since the heat and crowding were doing wonders for tempers, it was no surprise that this suggestion was met with hoots and curses. I suppose that it would have been asking too much for this policy to have been publicized beforehand. Anyhow, Elvis was Fantastic, but played for barely 45 minutes. I felt that the audience was as enthusiastic as any performer could ask, especially under the circumstances, yet even after 5 min. of standing "O" there was no encore.

Perhaps Costello was disgusted by the heat in there too. Net result of the evening was a barely 2 hour concert for $3.50. I feel ripped off by the UPC, for the overcrowding of the hall, the heat, and the short concert. I get tired of hearing about negative student behavior. When we are treated like cattle, talked to as if we were idiots, and ripped off continuously what do you expect? There was a lot of litter at this event, both in and around the SUB, but never, ever do I see extra trash barrels put out for these events. There have been enough concerts on this campus so that you might expect that one might be organized properly. The Elvis Costello concert was terrible, and if the UPC keeps this up, I'd be surprised if we see much good talent performing here in the future.

Today corporations operating in South Africa get the highest rate of return on investments anywhere in the world. This fact in and of itself indicates the reason why U.S. corporations will go to any length to stay in South Africa. Apartheid provides cheap labor and high profits. It is therefore in the interests of the corporations to maintain that system, which they do with the taxes they pay to the racist minority government. The tax money goes to support South Africa's massive army. The corporations also in many cases support the South African military machine directly, as in the case of the G.M. plant there which is designed to be easily convertable to military transport production.

All corporations in South Africa must obey the South African laws; laws which mandate starvation wages for Black workers and declare that no Black can hold any job above a white.

The corporations argue here in the United States that their influence has an effect of gradually decreasing the brutality of apartheid. What are the facts? In the period of the most massive economic growth in South Africa, from 1961-1971, 98 new racist laws were passed; in the same approximate period [1960-1975] U.S. investments went from 286 million to 1.6 billion. So we see that as the role of foreign corporations increased, so did the repression of Blacks. In 1960 the majority of the population responded to increased repression with peaceful demonstrations. In the town of Sharpesville the South African police opened fire and 69 persons were murdered; hundreds were wounded. This demonstration was specifically against the Pass Laws, which require Blacks to carry photographic I.D. passes to record their every movement for purposes of control.

In June 1976 students in the all-Black township of Soweto demonstrated against the introduction of their oppressors' language as the medium of instruction. These demonstrations grew to a massive work stoppage. The South African government responded with bullets.

Last October 19th a massive crackdown on all dissidents was instituted: many people were arrested; 19 publications were banned; Steve Biko, the leader of the Black consciousness movement, was beaten to death in jail; and Donald Woods, a white editor and self-described 'conservative' was placed under house arrest. He later escaped South Africa and has declared publicly on numerous occasions that the only course is for the U.S. to impose an economic blockade on South Africa.

The bloodbath that Trustee Willard Wirz mentioned is taking place daily. The blood flows from the Black miners forced to work 12 hours a day in the world's most unsafe mines; it flows from the mouths of starving children, over half of whom die from the effects of malnutrition before the age of five; it flows from the Black freedom fighters who die for demanding their rights.

It is said that corporations and their major stockholders care more for profits than for the lives of Black people.

Director's reply to editorial

To the Editor:

Allow me to make a brief response to your editorial in 2 March issue. "The real problem of the drug traffic" is one that worries me and to which I seek appropriate solutions for all of Southwest, not just Pierpont. No solution [other than external busts by narc agents] is possible without the cooperation of area residents willing to give information about dealers. The power to curtail the drug trade lies with students themselves.

No major shifts in the occupancy of Pierpont could have been carried out over the summer. Any such change would have to be in effect for room choosing this spring. Throughout my discussions in formulating a proposed shift in Pierpont occupancy, I made it clear that I would speak first to the residents of Pierpont before implementing any such proposal.

I have been criticized for shaping my proposal "with a minimum of student input." The process of my decision-making is explained in the long statement I took to the Pierpont community meeting last Monday. A copy is available upon request from my office. I should add that, among the many persons with whom I talked prior to last Monday, I consulted with Student Government Association leadership. My proposal as outlined met with no criticism but with explicit approval in that conversation.

The outcome of Monday night's long session was mutual agreement between myself and Pierpont residents "to pursue a possible alternative approach to achieve the improvements in the House which I deem imperative." In a statement issued the morning after, I went on to say, "I look with hope toward the creation of an organic and viable alternative which can and will engage the full support and sustained commitment of those who live in Pierpont. The goal in view — needed improvement in the House ... — is more important than the exact means of reaching it."

Amherst reporting not objective

To the Editor:

Sean Horgan's article on the open meeting with the Amherst College Trustees on apartheid openly sided with the Trustees, and was clearly not an attempt at objective reporting. The argument presented for Amherst College [and the United States as a whole] to get out of South Africa was factual and coherently presented by the students at that meeting; the overwhelming majority of those in attendance clearly supported withdrawal.

Horgan's reiteration of the outrageous statement that keeping stock in corporations in South Africa represents a "responsible middle ground" flies in the face of the reality of South Africa.

Pierpont: A dorm with character

To the Editor:

Pierpont: Home. These two words are synonymous for several students here at the University. These people, the residents of Pierpont, are comfortable in their dorm; and freshmen, sophomores, and juniors choose to return each following year to the place they call "home." They come back because they know that they can be most productive in an environment where universal ideals and respect of human achievement are held high. They have also built solid friendships in their home; they come back because they have their roots set deep in the community. That's quite an important word: community. But it is not as strong a word as it is a concept! The residents of Pierpont have worked hard at developing a sense of community in the dorm. This "sense of community" is a healthy atmosphere in which to live. It makes each and every resident feel a part of his or her environment. This "sense of community" is what gives the dorm character! Isn't it grand that we can think of at least one dorm in the Southwest area as something a great deal more than just another of the typical brick-and-cement boarding houses? Yes, because this dorm has character! That is, it does ... until, oh, about the end of May.

Supposing Mr. Matlack succeeds in implementing the plan which he himself has termed "simpleminded," "clumsy," and "inadequate." I sense a new problem will arise: What of this "sense of community," so vital to the existence of a residence hall? Resident Assistants are key elements in developing a sense of community. Although upperclass RA's will be allowed to stay, their friends must leave. Mr. Matlack, how enthusiastic and constructive should an RA be? Do you think that next year a sophomore RA is really going to give a damn about beautification and the improvement of Pierpont? What is there to strive for? Who will be there to reap the benefits next year? How effective will an RA be knowing full well that his-her friends are not welcome back?

I myself live in Pierpont, and whether or not I wish to return in the future should be totally my decision; I am conducting my life in a civil, orderly fashion. The main issue at stake here is basic human rights. This unprecedented administrative action perpetrated by Mr. Matlack should not be tolerated. It is a low blow aimed at dissolving the unity of the one dorm that has had the courage and the collective conscience to raise a critical voice on the UMass campus. I repeat: This oppression should not be tolerated, for if this plan succeeds it does set precedent, and this type of atrocity can and will happen again. Your dorm could be next!

Jim Morris

What's he doing in here?

To the Editor:

First, let me state that I support and carry a deep respect for the equality of women, and find the value of porn graphics in men's rooms tasteless and vulgar, to say the least.

But what Mr. Kadar openly credits himself for is the fact that he is an amateur of this ageless art. If he had ventured, as I have, into the ladies' quarters of Toilet Land on the UMass campus, he would have found not poetry inspired by Lessing and Woolf, but sexist quotations from Jong and Steinem.

Yes, Mr. Kadar, when equipped with magic markers and number two pencils, these poor mistreated feminists can match or better any grotesque drawing that the men on campus have drawn.

In conclusion, I suggest that Mr. Kadar search for an invitation to the ladies room, and there he'll witness the same inspiring true-to-life drawings and poetry that I have come to love. Maybe he'll even find his name next to the diploma roll.

The problem's in the attitude

Paul Cronin

The February 24th edition of the Collegian carried a story on the Faculty Senate meeting which was held the day before. The Senate was debating a motion which proposed a change in the Fall Semester academic schedule by starting classes after Labor Day and adding a Saturday as a class day to make up the lost time. In response to the proposal, Professor Irving Rothberg of the Department of Spanish and Portuguese is quoted as saying that a Saturday class day was "an ideal in Plato's heaven." He went on to suggest that students would just take the day off. These statements indicate, in a not-so-subtle way, that Prof. Rothberg has a rather jaded view of students attending the University. Remarks such as these continue to damage the University's reputation and reinforce the inferiority complex which pervades the University community, especially the student body. This attitude fuels the critics of the University who charge that students do not appreciate their opportunity at an education and that the Amherst campus is a $120 million a year playground. Often, comments such as Prof. Rothberg's are made half in jest or in passing. However, they hurt, and hurt deeply. They insult the student who comes here with hard earned money for what is, when all the costs are totalled, a fairly expensive education. They belittle the students who care about their classes, who work hard, and who expect a quality education.

While some faculty members have a low opinion of their students, the view from the other side of the fence is not particularly encouraging, either. The Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office (SAREO) conducted a survey which examined student attitudes on various aspects of campus life. Data from the April, 1977 CYCLES survey shows that of the 414 students surveyed, 61.7 per cent reported being satisfied with their academic experience at the University. However, 76.9 per cent were dissatisfied with faculty responsiveness to student needs, and only 27.2 per cent expressed great or very great satisfaction with their average course.

Very little will be gained fron engaging in a tit-for-tat discussion, such as wondering out loud if any faculty members will be interested in leaving a warm bed at 8 a.m. on some cold Saturday morning. For sure, there are people at the University only because they have nothing better to do. They belong to all the various member groups of the University, students, faculty and staff and would best serve the University by going elsewhere. It is the duty of the caring people at the University to encourage the uncaring to seek another vocation.

What is disconcerting is that attitudes such as Professor Rothberg's are becoming more noticeable among faculty members. Some individual faculty members' descriptions of the student body, contained in some of the support documentation for the University's reaccreditation process, were far worse. Students were characterized as intellectual neanderthals, dysfunctional, and credited with a host of other unflattering attributes. The question arises over these faculty members' propensity to place the total blame on students for poor performance and lack of motivation. Motivation among students appears to be the lowest when a faculty member poses as the fount of knowledge, set on a marble pedestal. Motivation is often the highest in a class with a faculty member who avoids putting on ivy-covered airs, and who tries to deal with students as partners in learning. A professor need not be a sterling orator, nor possess a dynamic personality in order to excite students. What really counts is the ability to exhibit enthusiasm for the subject matter.

The contention here is that students do care. Referring again to the April, 1977 CYCLES survey, 63 per cent reported being engaged to a great or very great extent in intellectual activities, with 90 per cent engaged to at least some extent during the previous two weeks. 31.9 per cent reported being involved in physical activities for the time period, not surprising for the start of spring. The mean response for hours per week engaged in academic work, excluding class time, was 24.6. Of course, numbers alone do not prove the point. There are more visible indications of student concern for their education. A stroll through the University library on any weeknight or weekend afternoon will reveal a substantial patronage. Even the Hatch, the refuge for many a class truant, is frequently a place where people get together on class work. Many a cup of corrosive coffee has been spilled over papers being proofread. During the Legislature's consideration of the University budget students were a very visible and vacal lobby. There is a bulky file in the Student Government Association President's Office filled with letters from legislators expressing admiration and thanks for the students who contracted them about the budget.

The issue is not whether students will show up for classes on a fall Saturday. Hundreds of students miss class every day of the week. They miss 10:10's on Wednesdays and 11:15's on Thursdays. Missing a 12:30 on a Saturday is not definitive proof that students don't give a damn. Some faculty members have to realize that they are part of the problem, and that some deep soul-searching is needed.

China's 'socialist new things'

Charlie Bagli

The past several years have seen a growing struggle in China over "socialist new things". In recent months the New York Times has claimed that the "socialist new things" which arose during the Cultural Revolution have been essentially eliminated by the present leadership. At present much debate is centered on how to rectify the damage the Gang of four heaped on these "new things."

"Socialist new things" arise out of mass surges of enthusiasm for socialism and a new way of life and relations between people. During the Cultural Revolution many of these new things were initiated, nourished and developed, for example: genuine manual labor for Party and government officials; sending educated youth to the countryside; barefoot doctors; three-in-one Committees (old, middle-aged and young); revolutionary committees; educational reforms; and the creation and popularization of revolutionary model operas, to name a few.

Education was the first mass battlefield during the Cultural Revolution. Under Liu Shao-chi, capitalist roaders had increasingly tightened their grip on the educational system. Politics was divorced from education, and book knowledge held superior to manual labor — before the Cultural Revolution only one middle school in all Peking had a policy of part-time productive labor for its students. Teaching methods and course content were not designed to arm students to change the world. Higher education tended to reproduce capitalist class relations by turning out experts and intellectuals with bourgeois and feudal values and by "objective" admissions criteria which favored the children of cadres, the urban petty bourgeoisis and national bourgeoisie and kept the working class and peasantry greatly underrepresented.

During the Cultural Revolution many students rose up against these conditions. Out of this struggle came reforms like combining productive labor with studies; throwing away old textbooks that obfuscated a subject more than enlightened it; sending educated youth to the countryside to teach and learn from peasants; recruiting working class and peasant youth for school; studying Marxism; and streamlining courses and doing away with impossible tests as a bludgeon against students.

Under the "gang of four" this fresh air blowing through education was turned into something stale. Wuhan University, for instance, had 5,000 students in 1965. Today it is finally moving to rectify the criminal luxury of having only 3,000 enrolled and a one to three teacher to student ratio!

The rebellion against the old severe tests that kept out or flunked out many students was turned into an anarchistic rebellion against all tests. What did this result in? Shanghai recently gave college graduates in science working in local scientific and technical departments a middle school test in their specialties — 68 per cent failed basic math, 70 per cent physics, and 76 per cent chemistry! [The Economist, Dec. 31, 1977, pp 29-30) This created a situation in which two of China's new steel plants are 18 months behind schedule because they don't have the engineers to solve the construction problems.

The Group of Four's bad policies flowed from their semi-anarchistic politics. The Gang were bad communists. Tests in general are not inherently bourgeois in character. They are extremely useful as a means of evaluating how much a student has learned, how well a teacher has taught, and where a graduate should be placed to make best use of his or her capabilities or to further develop them. In the absence of tests as an objective gauge of such things, the use of "political line" as the single decisive critereon encouraged abuses both by individuals trying to "go by the back door" and on a broad scope of opportunists like the Gang.

Other forms of educational institutions developed both before and during the Cultural Revolution (in spite of the wreckage by the Gang) provide education for workers and peasants, such as the Kiangsi Communist Labor University; provide part-time schools attached to factories; combining productive labor with study; and allow for the study of Marxist — Leninist theory. They are being maintained and their enrollment increased.

Culture is another major point of contention. The Cultural Revolution saw a tremendous growth of revolutionary popular cultural forms that stood in stark contrast to the old imperialist and feudal culture which had promoted all kinds of decadence, from binding women's feet (small is beautiful) to individualism and drug addiction in China.

Under the slogan "let a hundred flowers bloom" revolutionary model operas were developed. Writing and painting groups were organized in the various factories and communes that produced some beautiful art (some of which is on exhibition now in NYC museums). The groups were designed to teach many people the "artistic skills" that were once the property of only a priviledged few, as well as bring political content to popular forms.

An examination of Chiang Ching's (one of the Gang of 4) role in Culture shows how some of these great beginnings could be turned into reactionary things. Revolutionary model operas were developed directly under the leadership of Chiang Ching.

In the hands of Chiang Ching revolutionary model operas were transformed into the absolute measuring stick and used to bludgeon initiantive and the peoples enthusiasm for socialist culture.

This stultification appeared in the worker peasant writing and painting groups also. Some were promoted throughout the country to the point that they became divorced from labor and other people, and their art suffered. In some factories these groups and other "non-productive" laborers constituted about 17 per cent of the total work force. Under the Gang, these groups were bloated to 40 per cent, totally divorced from labor, and became patronage plums for the Gang. Again, the Gang turned a good thing into a bad thing.

It was in this manner that the Gang of Four did tremendous damage to many of the "socialist new things" in China. Their phony brand of communism has resulted in much of the wreckage that must be cleared away. However, it is clear upon close examination of the actual conditions in China that many of the "socialist new things" amid tremendous struggle and debate) from before and during the Cultural Revolution are being continued and promoted.

Bernstein Festival's real creator

To the Editor:

I was delighted to learn in yesterday's Collegian of the Leonard Bernstein Festival of Music which will take place this summer. As you note, "the idea has been kicked around the University for awhile" and its origins seem to have been lost. In fact, the idea originated with the late Terry Schwarz, who for some years brilliantly managed the Fine Arts Program at the University. It was his original proposal to bring Leonard Bernstein here to inaugurate the Fine Arts Center. For all of us here who remember and appreciate Terry Schwarz's contribution to the cultural life of the University community, the Leonard Bernstein Festival will come as an additional if belated tribute.

...it's how you play the game

To the Editor:

This is a response to the dance contest last Sunday night. I have a few thoughts in my mind that I would like to share with you at this time. The first thing I would like to say is, I like the "idea" of a "Saturday Night Fever" dance contest very much. It brings people together, adds excitement to our lives, and gives the contestants a chance to perform in front of an audience. It doesn't really matter what the prizes are because most people are dancing just for fun, not to win. The main thought of my mind isn't the concept of the dance contest itself but, the way in which it is or was carried out. I feel the judges of the contest, just like a jury in a court case, should represent the people not be of one single interest group. I know the argument exists that "a white male can be just as good a judge of a Third World woman dancer as a Third World woman because after all they're just dancing."

I feel if the panel of judges was more racially and sexually balanced the audience and the contestants would see a much more fair and representative outcome. Many students feel the last contest was biased towards a white winner. I don't like to believe this theory but, when I look at it more thoroughly I find it hard to ignore the fact that the judges were all White. I hope that for the next contest coming up next week, we will see a change in the racial imbalance of the judges. I would really hate to see such a good intention as I believe you have, turn into a racial question. Poor Richard's is just about the only discoteque in the vicinity accessible to the UMass community, Friday and Saturday nights see an unbelievable crowd enjoying themselves. I would really be upset if after the next dance contest all socially aware and concerned individuals started boycotting the discoteque and giving Poor Richard's a bad "image".

Already tension is growing among those people involved in one way or another with the contest. I have been trying to rid my mind of this uneasy feeling and I decided, that the only way was to write this letter to you. I wanted to make you aware of the situation so you could correct it.

I would sincerely appreciate a reply of some kind so I can know that you read my letter and what your plans are. Thank you for your attention.

Carol Mandell

More 'Third World' controversy

To the Editor:

My letter is in response to both the letter of Patrick O'Donnell of 2-24, and the reply to that letter by Gilbert H. Caldwell on 2-28. Both of these letters deal with Third World racism.

Mr. Caldwell, in his response, has obviously misread Mr. O'Donnell's letter. Third World groups are not encouraged to disband, but rather encouraged to form. It is the Third World Delegation to the Student Senate which is objected to.

I indeed find it racist that Third World people have Senators because of their racial and ethnic background while the rest of us are represented by Senators by residence.

Racism is any practice which gives unequal treatment to any group because of its racial or ethnic background. Because Third World people have, in the past, been the victims of racism by non-Third World people does not mean that the reverse cannot happen.

If we are to end this racist practice, there are two options from which to choose. The Third World Delegation can be disbanded and have all of the Senators be elected by residence, or disband the residence Senators and set up an Irish Delegation, Italian Delegation, and so on. I feel that the former is a much more equal and fair way of doing things.

As Mr. O'Donnell pointed out, because a group has special interests, it does not mean that they should be given special privileges in the Senate, but rather that they should form an RSO group. This is what this program was designed for.

If Mr. Caldwell is against racism, as he says, I don't see how he can approve of retention of the current set-up as a means to combat it.

Areas face floods from snow

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some regions of the country face a spring of potentially dangerous flooding from the melting of unusually heavy snows that still cover large areas, the National Weather Service said Thursday.

Federal weather officials said at a briefing the threat to the country as a whole is not as great as last year when colder temperatures clogged rivers with ice and froze more ground.

But Dr. George P. Cressman, director of the weather service, said a serious flood threat would exist for several weeks in portions of southern Idaho, the upper Midwest and southern New England.

And, he said, "Heavy rains on the accumulated snow and unseasonably warm temperatures could compound the threat in these and in other areas, such as California and the entire Northeast and create a very dangerous flood situation."

Cressman said all federal disaster agencies were briefed Thursday on potential flood situations and that state agencies also have been notified.

Dr. John Schaake, chief of the weather service's hydrologic services division, told the briefing that the most serious conditions were in the Missouri River tributaries in southwestern North Dakota and northwestern South Dakota.

"We believe that the ground is frozen and that there is nowhere for the water to go but to run off," Schaake said. "The rivers also are frozen and there may be an ice floe problem.

"This could be the worst year for flooding since 1969 in the upper Missouri," Schaake said.

But he noted that water levels in the upper Missouri and in reservoirs were below noroal and that this might help ease the threat. Schaake said the principal tributaries affected are the Snake, Knife and Heart rivers.

Other areas with the potential for major problems if snow packs melt too rapidly are southern Wisconsin and northwestern Illinois along the Rock River and along the Red River, which borders the states of North Dakota and Minnestoa.

Southern New England, with more than 300 percent of its normal amount of snow moisture on the ground, and portions of southeastern Idaho along the Snake and Henry Fork rivers, are also facing a major potential problem, the agency said.

VEVEY, Switzerland (UPI) — Officials check the grave of veteran comic Charlie Chaplin after unknown persons dug up and stole the coffin containing his remains. The disappearance of Chaplin's coffin was only noticed today and it is not sure exactly when the theft took place. The actual grave is seen covered with pine branches at center of picture.

Evacuated gas victims grow close

MARIANNA, Fla. (AP) — For five days, families evacuated after a train disaster have slept on hardwood floors, killed time playing checkers and worried about abandoned pets.

But instead of complaining about their temporary home in a National Guard armory, the rural north Florida folks said yesterday they've been drawn together since the derailment Sunday that sent clouds of lethal chlorine gas drifting over their homes, killing eight people.

"I thought I knew most of the people in Fountain, but I've met a lot of people I didn't know," said Loraine Stanley, who runs a beauty shop near the derailment site. "It's going to bring us a lot closer, the fact that we've been through this together."

The towns of Youngstown and Fountain, both in the Florida Panhandle, were evacuated after the derailment.

Emergency workers hoped cleanup efforts at the site would be far enough along to let people return to their homes today. The last of the chlorine from the tank car punctured in the derailment was neutralized yesterday.

The 125 evacuees bedded down at the armory were some of the 3,500 people who fled when the 120-car Atlanta and St. Andrews Bay Railroad freight train derailed about three miles north of Youngstown.

The doors of dozens of local homes were opened for other evacuees. Some of the homeless stayed in motels at the expense of the railroad, but a railroad spokesman refused to say how many.

Six elderly evacuees, who require bedrest and nursing care, were taken to the infirmary at the state-run Dozier School, a facility in Marianna for delinquents. Sixteen more were taken to the Florida State Hospital at Chattahoochee.

Like many of the evacuees, Mrs. Stanley, 58, helped with housekeeping at the armory. She scrubbed cooking pots after 350 people were fed a free breakfast that took 60 dozen eggs, 25 pounds of bacon, 15 quarts of orange juice, six boxes of cereal and eight gallons of milk.

"I want to go home," Mrs. Stanley said as she shook soapsuds from her hands. "I've been here since Sunday. I felt it was all right to stay (home), but the highway patrol made me come. They said it was too dangerous.

"I couldn't believe something like that could happen," she said. "I didn't know they had anything so deadly on those trains going through town."

Howard Pugsley, a 52-yearold Fountain feedstore operator, was more worried about his seven German Shepherd puppies than the lingering danger from the chlorine gas. He took back country roads to go home for 15 minutes Wednesday.

"I just told the highway patrol at the roadblock that they couldn't stop me unless they declared martial law," said Pugsley.

Buckley makes finances public

BOSTON (UPI) Republican John J. Buckley is the first candidate for governor to make public his personal finances.

Buckley, the Middlesex County Sheriff, released his financial report yesterday, saying he had a net worth of $88,500.

According to the report, his assets totaled $118,100, including the current $80,000 value of his Belmont home.

Liabilities of $29,600 included a mortgage and a $15,000 bank loan to help Buckley finance his campaign for the GOP nomination.

He listed his 1977 income as $34,400, including his $22,400 salary as sheriff and his wife's $11,500 salary as a lawyer. Also included in the income were $500 in savings account interest and investment dividends.

Buckley said he received no gifts or honoraria in 1977.

Textile industry topic of series

A nine-week series of films and discussions to examine the textile industry in the south, labor unions as they relate to this industry, and the significance of the national boycott of products made by the J.P. Stevens Co. will begin Thursday, March 2 in the University of Massachusetts Campus Center. All meetings will begin at 8 p.m.

Each Thursday education programs will be followed by a work session of the local J.P. Stevens Boycott Committee. Participation by all members of the Amherst-Northampton community is invited. UMass students may gain academic credit by regular attendance.

The series will begin with a showing of the film "Testimony," produced by the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union. It focuses on the attempt by workers at the Stevens plant in Roanoke Rapids, N.C. to obtain a union contract and improve safety standards. On March 9, the film "Union Maids" will be followed by a discussion of union structure.

Other programs will include discussions of the history of southern textile industry and attempts at unionization on March 16, legal and practical aspects of picketing and boycotting on March 23, and use of the media on March 30.

Room assignments for the series will be posted beside all elevators in the Campus Center on the day of the meetings.

UM skimen fall on slope

By JEFFREY GLYNN
Collegian Staff

Overconfidence. Yes, that is the word which best describes what happened to the UMass men's ski team during the league championships.

After finishing the regular season with the phenomenal record of 39-1, UMass came to the Middlebury Snow Bowl in Middlebury, Vt. looking for an easy win. However, Plymouth St., Northeastern, and Boston College had something to say about it, as they all finished ahead of UMass, making the Minutemen a disappointing fourth in the competition.

It was the first race that killed them. This giant slalom race was won by Boston College, a team that had not won a race all year. Plymouth St., the only team to defeat UMass during the regular season, came in second. Northeastern placed third, WPI fourth, Nason College fifth, and UMass sixth. Seven points are rewarded to the winner, six to the second place finisher, and so on down to one. Therefore, UMass was already five points behind the leader after the first race, and with only two more races left, the Minutemen's only chance was to win the next two races, while B.C., Plymouth St., and Northeastern hopefully suffer a collapse.

The reason for the sixth place finish in the first race was that although Dale Maynard of UMass came in first and Ted Chrobak of UMass placed ninth, the next two Minutemen skiers were over 13 seconds behind the field due to falls.

The Minutemen improved in the second race, but still didn't win. Plymouth St. took the slalom race, followed by UMass, Northeastern, B.C., WPI, UConn, Nason, and B.U. The Minutemen placed all four men in the top ten, usually good enough to win almost any race of this sort. Jeff Lyons of Northeastern won this race, followed by Rick Frangilo and Charlie Cobb, both of Plymouth St. UMass' Dale Maynard, Scott Princle, Ted Chrobak, and Bob Grout finished 7th, 8th, and 10th, respectively.

Your Birthday

FRIDAY, MARCH 3

Born today, you are steadfast and persevering. Determined to succeed, you will give in to no urging and give up in the face of no obstacles. You possess excellent powers of concentration and recuperation, the latter often being needed after exercising the former.

You are popular with the opposite sex, when you care to be. Highly imaginative, you may fall victim to your own fancy. You have been known to frighten yourself into or out of some situation, as you have been known to overexert and overreact, all from believing in the figments of your imagination.

You have a desire to help those less fortunate than yourself, but you are often at a loss to know how. You are willing to share possessions and are always eager to lend a shoulder to cry on, but you often do not know what step to take next. Thus, true consolation does not occur.

SATURDAY, MARCH 4

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20) — Humanitarian pursuits lead to advancement at work. Direct energies outward.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Popularity with the opposite sex may come as a surprise today. Accept praise modestly.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — You should get your reward for action taken early today. Expect no less, and certainly no more.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Hindsight should give you clues as to how to behave with loved ones.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Literary talent can bring you joy and profit. Exploit your abilities; gains are coming.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) — You may gain considerable recognition today for work recently completed. Keep another's confidences.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22) — Your reputation as one of even and sunny disposition may be more valuable than you think. Demonstrate it.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22) — Avoid being alone early today. Seek companions who can prevent your worrying.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21) — There's sea travel today for you or a loved one. Don't prevent a young one's leaving the nest.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21) — You can handle a new project with flair. Evening fatigue may keep you from entertainment.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19) — High spirits and good humor mark home and work today. Take part in joint activities.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18) — Don't depend on being well liked. Make sure your work can stand scrutiny.

Thursday's Puzzle Solved

Thoughts of a pro wrestler

By STEVE ZACK
Collegian Staff

On Saturday night, February 25, at the Springfield Civic Center, new World Wide Wrestling Federation heavyweight champion, Bob Backlund answered questions on many aspects of his career.

Here is the interview:

When did you start wrestling as an amateur?

"I started wrestling when I was ten years old and I wrestled from fourth grade through college."

As a pro?

"My first area was in Oklahoma. There was a man named Danny Hodge down in that area. He was a great amateur wrestler and he wrestled on the Olympic team for the United States. He approached me because I did very well in college too and he wanted me to come down there and make sure I was learning the professional moves and holds right."

Bob Backlund

Is an amateur background an advantage for a professional wrestler?

"I've been a pro for four years now and I think my success kind of proves that there's a great advantage. There aren't too many people who have done what I've done in four years and I think it's because of the background that I had in high school and college and the great support all of the people have been giving me."

At this point, I began asking Backlund about his professional career.

How does it feel to be the champion? (Backlund won the title on February 20, defeating Billy Graham at Madison Square Garden.)

"It's hard to explain. It's the greatest feeling I've ever had. There were 22,000 people at the matches and winning the world's title is really something for me."

What about fan support?

"It's great to have all those fans behind you when you hear your named announced. It's just a wonderful feeling to have 22,000 or whatever amount of people there is at the auditorium cheering for you."

Do you ever get nervous when you are about to compete?

"I get a little nervous, which I like. Everytime I compete I get nervous, even when I wrestled in high school I got nervous."

How do you feel about being tagged with the nickname, "the All-American Boy"?

"I don't mind being called a boy. I maybe look a little boyish and I can thank the Lord and my mom and dad for bringing me up right and having me eat the right type of food and keeping me away from some of the bad things in life."

For a man of your size, about 230 pounds, you possess an enormous amount of strength.

"A little bit. I weigh between 230 and 235 and I work out every day on my strength. I've benched pressed over 500 pounds, and I think working out on the weights and just knowing how to control a man's body from amateur wrestling helps a lot."

How are you affected by the constant travel?

"It's tiring and since I won the title I've been travelling all over and getting phone calls from every country you can think of. It's pretty tiring; I have to take a little nap whenever I can. Catching planes in the morning and getting there and then wrestling, catching a plane that night or early the next morning — it's very strenuous. But I love what I'm doing. I really enjoy it.

Have you ever been injured?

"I just got over a real bad knee injury. Everybody in professional wrestling has gotten a back injury because of the body slams and stuff."

What about the legitimacy of professional wrestling?

"We're in a profession where people are watching us and the rules make wrestling entertaining for the people. I wish the rules could be like amateur wrestling but the people wouldn't pay that much to come and see that. Unless you know somebody in amateur wrestling or know a lot about it, you wouldn't come to see it; the crowds wouldn't be that big."

"The rules are for the people. In baseball a few years ago, they put the pitching mound up a little higher and changed the ball a little bit just for the fans, because baseball was taking a downward swing. In professional wrestling, if the fans falloff some, they change the rules to add a little excitement."

On this evening, Backlund was scheduled to wrestle Ken Patera.

In the evening's other title match, the Japanese tag team duo of Prof. Tanaka and Mr. Fuji successfully defended their championship against the popular twosome of Jay Strongbow and Peter Maivia. (Staff photos by Geoffrey Cohler)

"Ken Patera is a very, very strong man. He's one of the world's strongest men and he's a great professional wrestler. He is rough in his tactics and I don't expect a lot of scientific wrestling from him."

Bob Backlund entered the ring cheered on by the sellout crowd in attendance. His match with Patera was a brutal one. At the nineteen minute mark, Backlund connected with a series of flying dropkicks. Patera rolled out of the ring, never to return. At the nineteen minute and nineteen second mark of the match, Ken Patera was counted out and Backlund had succcessfully defended his newly acquired title.

Gym-women close season

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

The women's gymnastics team closes out its regular season against Towson State College in Baltimore on Saturday afternoon. The gymwomen sport an 8-1 record, after a strong win over UNH earlier in the week.

The Minutewomen learned yesterday that they have qualified for the EAIAW Championships with a season average total of 136.17 points. Towson is ranked seventh in the east with a 131.39 average. The top three teams are Penn State averaging 147.81, Clarion with a 146.24 total and the University of Pittsburgh with a 137.73.

Coach Virginia Evans hopes to go with her starting line up for the first time since the gymwomen opened their season against Penn State back in December. The Minutewomen have had problems with injuries and the flu throughout the season. "The affects of the flu showed up in our fourth place ranking behind Pitt," said Evans.

Stephanie Jones, Karen Hemberger, Susan Cantwell and Cheryl Morrier will be the UMass all around performers against Towson. Jones will be working all four events for the first time in two weeks. Jones opened the season strongly with a 36.10 four event total score against Penn State but has been unable to match that performance during the season because of reoccuring hip and rib injuries.

Hemberger has some how missed getting the flu and has not been troubled by serious injuries as many of the other gymwomen have this season. Hemberger has been averaging scores of 8.85 per event and is looking to pull it all together against Towson.

Susan Cantwell has been building all semester and scored her highest all around total of the season, 35.20, against UNH on Tuesday. At last year's Easterns Cantwell performed at her peak finishing seventh in the all around competition.

Cheryl Morrier returns to the line up after a three meet absence. When Morrier has been well she has been a strong contributor to the line up and Evans hopes she will be back at nearly full strength against Towson.

Freshman Karen Clemente has been filling in as an all around competitor in the absence of Morrier and Jones. She will be working three events against Towson - vaulting, bars, and on the floor.

Filling out the line up will be Kim Whitelaw in vaulting, Debbie Law on bars, Diane Laurenson and Laurie Knapp on the balance beam and Debbie Smith on the floor. All of the specialists have improved throughout the season and will add a depth advantage to the UMass team.

After traveling to Baltimore this weekend, the gymwomen will have one week to polish their routines before the EAIAW's which will be held in Pittsburgh on March 10 and 11.

Referee fined

NEW YORK [UPI] — Referee Richie Powers has been fined $2,500 and suspended without pay for three games by National Basketball Association Commissioner Larry O'Brien for waiving the league's rule against the zone defense in Wednesday night's game between the New Jersey Nets and Atlanta Hawks.

Powers confirmed that he had told both teams, through their coaches and captains, that he would permit the teams to employ zone defenses contrary to Rule 12, Section I.

Top trackmen

By KEVIN McCAFFREY
Collegian Staff

Seven Minutemen runners have withstood the test of the indoor track season, and will represent UMass at the Eastern Championships tomorrow at Princeton, New Jersey.

All track and field performances will be staged at Jadwin Gymnasium located on the Princeton University campus. The two day program features trials on Saturday, with the finals in the morning of the following day.

For the past week 440 runner Joe Martens has been nursing a hamstring muscle he aggravated in the New England Championships at Harvard according to assistant coach Arnie Morse. He is expected to board the van today, en route to his last indoor track meet in a Minutemen uniform. Accompanying him, and also sharing senior honors, will be Mark Healy and Fran O'Keefe, both competing in the 880. The veterans will utilize this meet as a means of redeeming themselves after uneventful performances in Cambridge.

Also journeying to the Garden State will be Yankee Conference high jump champion Don Dowden, New England 1000 yard runner-up Steve MacDougall, and two milers Stetson Arnold and Mike Morris. The selected batch of athletes all had to register convincing performances to qualify for this contest.

Can they do it?

Wrestlers set for NE's

By STEVE BUCKLEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass wrestling team will leave for Rhode Island and the beginning of the New England championships today at 1:00. Coach Dave Amato's lineup is as follows:

Dana Rasmussen (118 pounds) — This is one of the most competitive weights in New England with UConn's Joe Viola perhaps being the favorite. Raz' seems to wrestle better in practice than he does in actual competition, and if that means that there is a little nervousness clouding the Tewksbury native there will be no better time than this week to put an end to it. More wrestling and less clock-watching could lead to a New England championship for Rasmussen.

Keith Dixon (126 pounds) — The surprise of the season for the Minutemen, Dixon saw little action for most of the season, but the inconsistency and lack of ambition of other 126 pound squad members led to his introduction to the limelight. URI's Joe Davidson is a shoe-in to repeat as champion, but in the words of coach Amoto, "Dixon really impressed us with his win against UNH last week and there is no reason to believe he can't take third place if he wrestles hard."

Larry Otsuka (134 pounds) — In all likelihood, if UMass has only one champion by Sunday night, then this is the man who will be taking all the bows. An extremely aggressive athlete, Otsuka missed two weeks with a fractured rib. "That absence may have been the best thing for him," said Amato. "He had been a little flat but now I think he's ready to go all the way." Look for a final showdown between Otsuka and URI's Scott Arnel...

Charley Rigoglioso (142 pounds) Again, this is a URI weight class with the Rams' Frank Pucino being the man to beat, but most experts readily agree that Rigogioso, although only a freshman, is the only grappler capable of doing so. Nobody's going to do his work for him: Charley has to go out and beat Pucino. At the very least, Rigogioso will place.

Timmy Fallon (150 pounds) — "Fallon has beaten some very good wrestlers, and he's lost to some very bad ones," says Amato. Changing from 150 to 158 pounds at different intervals this past season has taken its toll on the Minuteman co-captain, but if he can put it all together he will succeed his buddy, Kevin Griffin, as New England champion. He finished third last year at 158 pounds and he won't be satisfied with anything less than the number one spot this time around.

Mike Carroll (158 pounds) — For Carroll, the name of the game is next year; although he is capable of placing. Like any freshman, he shows signs of brillience but lacks consistency.

Monty Payette (167 pounds) — Like Carroll, Payette is wrestling in a heavier class. According to Amato, Payette balked at wrestling off Carroll for the 158 spot; "sacrificing his own chances for the team." Translated, this means that the UMies are weak at 167 pounds and that although Payette belongs in a lighter weight class he may help the team point total by wrestling here.

Fred Rheault probably would have wrestled in this class had not a shoulder injury removed him from the action. He was used sparingly by Amato at the beginning of the season, but came on to handle most of the 167 pound duties midway through the campaign. Among Rheault's credentials is the fastest UMass pin of the season, as he took his foe in the Maine meet to the floor in only 37 seconds...

Bobby Clark (177 pounds) — Used mostly at 190 pounds this season, Clark has waged a winning battle to get down to this weight for the New Englands. He will have to wrestle better than he has been to make a name for himself this weekend, but Clark is in excellent shape and is priming himself for a third place finish.

Bob Radowicz (190 pounds) — the very fact that Radowicz is in the UMass lineup this weekend says something of the spirit in this freshman. Radowicz lost and regained his varsity spot a number of times this season and was in a spot where a lot of other grapplers would have called it quits. But he's going to Rhode Island today and that just goes to show you what determination will do. Again, this kid is wrestling in a heavier weight class and if he gets knocked out this year he's got some experience for next year.

John Allen (heavyweight) — The UMass domination in this weight class rolls on... "If Allen does not take the title," says Amato, "it will be because of overconfidence." Allen will be the number one seed in the tourney, having lost but two matches all season. His hottest competition will come from BU's Paul Davis and URI's John Mack.

Men swimmers send twelve to NE meet

By BILL TARTER
Collegian Staff

About 250 representatives from over 25 colleges and universities are competing in this year's New England Swimming Championships, which began yesterday at Springfield College.

The finest swimmers and divers from the six states will open the three day competition at 6 p.m. with the expectation of many records to fall, and eventually a new team champion to be crowned.

With the hope of savoring a few records for UMass, coach Bei Melamed has selected 12 of the swimteam's most qualified members.

Despite the teams successful 7-2 season, which Melamed considered their best in his five years of coaching, he said, "we don't have the overall depth to beat the top schools."

"University of Maine is the runaway favorite to win the team title, and dethrone defending champion Springfield College," Melamed said. "It should be a fierce competition for second Williams, Southern Connecticut, Springfield, and Coast Guard all in the battle," Melamed continued.

Analyzing his own teams chances, Melamed expects a definite improvement over last years 12th place finish, "It all depends on the performances of a few individuals," said Melamed. "I expect Russ Yarworth to score within his three events (the 200 yard butterfly and the 200 and 400 individual medley). So far this season he has been undefeated in the I.M."

Melamed said he also anticipates good showings from Harry Fulford, Tom Nowak, and Jim Leland. Fulford, will compete in his specialties, the 100 and 200 yard breastroke, where he has had great success. He was beaten only once in those events the entire season. Leland holds school records in both events. Tom Nowak is also expected to win in the 100 and 200 yard breastroke and relay events.

The teams status depends primarily on these men. Contributions from the others will be a bonus. Divers Jim Antonino, Dan Anthony, and Dan Conley are capable of placing high within either the one or three meter events.

Competing in the 500 yard freestyle will be Dave Hoffman and Bob DeConinck. Hoffman will try out his stamina by performing in the meet's longest event the 1650 yard free.

Freshmen Bill Tayler, probably the teams best 200 yard freestyler, is a doubtful participant for the Championships because of illness.

The events began yesterday will continue till Saturday. Finals begin tonight.

West Virginia upsets Rutgers

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — Sophomore guard Lowes Moore scored 23 points and senior forward Maurice Robinson added 18 yesterday to power bottom-seeded West Virginia to an 81-74 upset of league champion and top-seeded Rutgers in the first round of the Eastern 8 basketball tournament at the civic arena.

The Mountaineers, just 11-15 on the season, advance to the semifinals Friday against the winner of the Duquesne-Massachusetts game Thursday night.

Moore scored 18 of his points in the second half to stave off a frantic rally by the Scarlet Knights, 21-6.

It was the second straight year that Rutgers came into the tournament as the top seed, only to get ousted in the first round.

Despite the loss, the Scarlet Knights' James Bailey dominated the action, scoring 34 points, 22 in the second half.

In other games, Villanova trounced Penn St. 73-65, Pitt edged George Washington 85-83, URI downed Fairfield 71-69, and Providence silenced Holy Cross 71-67.

Baseball clinic

A baseball clinic featuring demonstrations and lectures will be held tomorrow, March 4, at the Curry Hicks Cage from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m.

The UMass baseball team will demonstrate various fundamentals of the game. Lectures and demonstrations will be presented by Coaches Rich Bedard (AIC), Tony Williams (Northampton) and Chuck Roys (Springfield).

Fall in OT, 76-69

Dukes spoil title hopes

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

PITTSBURGH — And so the season has ended for UMass, Jack Leaman, and his Minutemen. A season filled with so many scintillating peaks (Holy Cross, Villanova, George Washington, Pitt), and nightmarish vallies (UConn, Maine, UNH, Penn St.) is over.

But nothing hurts as much as playing well but succumbing to bad breaks and shooting slumps as the Minutemen were defeated in overtime 76-69 by the Duquesne Dukes in the opening round of the Eastern Athletic Association (EAA) playoffs.

The Minutemen were upset, as were the Rutgers Scarlet Knights, as West Virginia pulled a big surprise by defeating Rutgers, 81-74, which puts W. Wa. in the semifinals against the Dukes tonight.

Minutemen Mike Pyatt, shooting a blistering 28 points (13-17), singlehandedly pulled UMass back into the ballgame after the Minutemen fell behind at one point of the second half by 13 points.

Derick Claiborne, the senior captain, hit for 12 points, but more importantly, sent the Minutemen into overtime as he drove the full-length of the court and banked a 15 footer to tie the game at 64 at the end of regulation time.

See page 19
for other scores

Alex Eldridge, playing only 16 minutes, reinjured his knee in the first half and came out limping in the second. Leaman sat the 6'2" senior down and replaced him with sophomore Bill Morrison. Eldridge scored but six points.

Morrison displayed 34 minutes of fine defensive basketball as he stole the ball three times, scored eight points and pulled down four rebounds.

But in overtime, the Dukes flashy ball-hawking guard, Baron "B.B." Flenory scored eight of his 23 points, and guard Lonnie McClain and forward Jesse Hubbard hit jump shots as the Dukes outscored UMass 12-6 in the five minute overtime.

Sparked by Claiborne's game tying shot, the Minutemen scored first as Mark Haymore rebounded a Claiborne miss,aand tipped it in to give UMass a 66-64 lead.

McClain came back to hit a 20 foot corner shot, but UMass' Eric Williams' foul shot and a Morrison layup from Claiborne via the fast break, gave the Lea-men a three point lead with 3:20 to go in the game.

But that was the last time UMass would score for the season, as Flenery went to work. First he hit a 22 foot jumper and then banked in an 8 foot jumper with 1:56 to go in the overtime. He then connected on two foul shots and with 1:25 left, the score now read Duquesne controlled the ball and Hubbard tapped in a missed Duke jumper and for all practical purposes, the game was over with 18 seconds left.

Down by five, Claiborne and Morrison did everything they could defensively but Flenory was fouled and swished in two free throws to end the game as 7,865 Duke fans went nuts.

In the second half, Pyatt and Claiborne sparked the Minutemen from a 45-32 deficit to a 61-57 lead within a span of 11 minutes. Pyatt couldn't miss as he scored 19 points in a nine and a half minute one man onslaught.

The Dukes regained the lead late in the game but Claiborne dashed the length of the floor and hit his last second shot to give the Minutemen another chance. But in overtime it was all Flenory.

After the game, the UMass players dressed silently and quickly and were not available for comment. Only Eric Williams offered this: "The bed passes and the missed shots are the things you will remember for a long time."

Leaman, smiling but still disappointed, said after the game "I was very proud of the way we came back after being down so far in the second half, but was disappointed that we didn't play with a little bit more disciplined in the overtime.

"Mike Pyatt and Derick Claiborne gave everything they had, but it still wasn't good enough. It's been a very long, disappointing year and I'm glad it's over," Leaman said.

Minutewomen ready forces for hoop title

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

The first step in the UMass women's basketball team's hopes for post-season glory begins tonight, when the Minutewomen meet Northeastern at 6:00 on the campus of the University of Maine (Portland-Gorham) in the first round of the Eastern Association of Athletics for Women (EAIAW) regional tournament.

Following the game, Providence plays host team Maine at 8:15 in the other semifinal contest.

The winners will meet at 3 p.m. tomorrow for the right to advance to the Eastern finals next weekend at Queens College.

Three other four-team qualifying tourneys are taking place this weekend. The three winners from them will be added to the Eastern finalist field.

UMass, seeded fifth in the 16-team field, wants revenge against Providence, a team which defeated the Minutewomen in overtime early in February. The Lady Friars also took second spot in the New England coaches poll following a 63-62 win over first-rated Southern Connecticut last week. But Providence was then upset by Central Connecticut, to bring its final record to 17-4.

Before UMass, 13-7 and rated third in New England, can meet the Lady Friars, the Minutewomen must contend with Northeastern first. The Huskies were supposed to play UMass this season, but the game was cancelled due to the snowstorm which hit Massachusetts in mid-February.

Northeastern wrapped up its season Tuesday night with a make-up game against Rhode Island. Prior to that, the Huskies sported an 8-7 record.

Northeastern finished third in last weekend's state tournament. It lost to eventual champ Boston University in the first round, 62-52, but then defeated Bridgewater State in the consolation game.

"They have a nice little ballclub," UMass coach Mary Ann Ozdarski said of the Huskies. "They hustle and run a lot."

Leading scorer for the unseeded Northeastern squad is Beth Peterson, a forward who averages 19.7 points per game. Front-court mate Karent Kluttz hits for 11.5 ppg, while Julie Ryan pops in 5.7 points per outing.

Kluttz is the top rebounder (8.5 per game), while Peterson ranks second with 8.2 boards per game.

Northeastern lost to Southern Connecticut by four points, and was also defeated by Harvard in triple overtime.

The Minutewomen are not looking ahead of the game to a possible rematch with Providence, according to Ozdarski.

"We have to go out there and beat Northeastern first," she said. "We have to go out there and play the game. Naturally, we would like to meet Providence again, and it's the ideal opportunity, but they have to beat Maine too."

Ozdarski is pleased with her team's latest efforts.

"Southern Connecticut could have been beaten," she said. "But we've been having a super team effort and I can't be more pleased. We're playing hard basketball.

"The cliche certainly fits," she concluded. "There's no tomorrow now."

Bowie's house or horrors

It isn't often that a commissioner of a major league sport has to worry about job security. For Bowie Kuhn, however, this tendency towards the status quo is crumbling.

Initial reports cited nine clubowners who were allegedly trying to drum up enough peer support to hand Kuhn his ouster. Yankees' owner George Steinbrenner and St. Louis Cardinals' boss Gussie Busch have since denied their accused roles as conspirators.

Owner after owner, ballclub after ballclub has been contacted by the media for the express purpose of casting stones, for or against, Kuhn. There remains only one involved party who remains uncanvassed — Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn.

I went to Kuhn's New York office to see if he lent any credence to the reports.

Coming upon the front gate to the building, I heard a faint buzzing. An occasional spark flew across the medal bars. Here and there, along the base of the fence, were limp birds, dogs, rabbits and a cow. I couldn't put my finger on it, but something seemed to be awry.

Taking a step back to get a better view, I found myself in the middle of a busy street. A car, swerving to avoid me, crashed into the gate, knocking it down and causing what could only be termed as a minor atmospheric disturbance. Mere Fourth-of-July pyrotechnics. I hurried over to the vehicle to advise the operator that he should watch the road more carefully, but upon reaching the remains of the machine, one look at the wreckage led me to believe that the driver would not be an attentive listener. I continued on over the fallen gate.

The grounds surrounding the building were pitted with twenty-foot-wide divits. I duly jotted on my note pad that Kuhn was an avid golfer.

The front door of the building was quite unlike any I had ever seen. Instead of a doorknob, it was ornamented with a lever shaped like a miniature baseball bat. Above the lever was a placard instrucing 'pull'. I did so.

In a second, the steps had given way under me and I felt myself sliding down a passageway. "Spectacular," I marveled. "First a baseball bat and now a contraption to help one perfect the art of sliding. I must have gotten a hit."

The end of the passageway was completely dark. Through the gloom, a pair of eyes shone brightly. They blinked one. Twice. They they seemed to leap towards me. Realization flooded into me with sickening suddenness. I had missed the 'steal' sign. Maybe I could yet atone for my sin. I couldn't see second base, but judging the angle of the eyes as the third-base coaching box, I darted for the keystone sack, legs pumping high. At the end of my perfect hook-slide, I again felt myself falling.

Was I safe ... or out? There was a splash and water enveloped me. A rainout. The stolen base wouldn't have counted anyway.

While swimming for my life, I couldn't suppress myself from cursing the incompetent groundscrew which had neglected to put down the tarpaulin and let the field fall into this sad state of disrepair. Moreover, the field's drainage system must be deplorable.

Seeing an expose on drainage systems as a good story I dove down to take a look. Sure enough, the drain gate was blocked by a large wooden plank. I moved it out of the way and found myself carried into a roomy air duct along with an ample supply of water.

I waded along a slightly curving corridor until I came to a ventilation grid. I looked back along the path I had just traversed. No sharp rises or drops, only the slight curve. The building contractor obviously didn't have his stuff going for him when he made the thing.

Removing the grid and stepping into an anteroom, I was rudely confronted by a pair of armed sentries. One had his finger on the pin of a grenade.

"What do you want?" they demanded in unison.

"I need to speak with the commissioner to find out whether or not he sees the team owners' grumblings as a serious threat."

"No one can see Kuhn," said one of the guards mechanically.

"Look," I reasoned, "I'll give you double what Kuhn is paying you if you let me see him."

"We don't get paid," said the one with the grenade.

"No pay!" I said incredulously. "Why that's below minimum wage! Why do you continue to protect the man?"

"For the good of baseball."

Miners veto new contract

[UPI] - Union miners angrily rejected a new contract in a landslide of "no" votes yesterday, daring President Carter to take action to end their three-month-old strike. The administration's top economist said the coal crisis could lead to 3 million more layoffs by next month.

United Mine Workers from Alabama to Pennsylvania and from Maryland to New Mexico spurned the tentative pact by 2- 1 margins despite a promise that President Carter will act today to choke off the strike which has gone on since Dec. 6.

With 410 or 51.6 percent of 794 locals reporting the vote was 15,750 (31.4 percent) for ratification and 34,344 (68.6 percent) against.

The rejectionist trend which started on Friday continued unabated through Saturday and yesterday, spreading gloom within the administration and predictions of violence if Carter moves to force the mines to reopen.

It was a crushing defeat. Even some conservative locals counted on to strongly support the agreement voted "no" or at best provided only narrow approval in the balloting yesterday.

Some union leaders said the rejection could finish the UMW.

"It could lead to the breakup of the union," said UMW veteran John Bowen of Marion, Ill. "You can't let the men dictate to you; you've got to run it. The trouble with the United Mine Workers is that it has the same problem as the country ... no leadership."

Others such as West Virginia's John Davis forecast violence. "It's going to cause bloodshed. Some people are going to obey the (TaftHartley) law and some people aren't."

He said two things had beaten the pact, the lack of satisfactory health and pension benefits and the worker stability clauses —geared to discourage wildcat strikes — imposed by industry.

The three-year wage agreement offered to boost the average hourly wage for miners from $7.80 to $10.20. Money was not a problem.

The rejection could also lead to a spurt of company-bycompany negotiations with each union local — a bewildering prospect for union and management.

At the White House, the highlevel strategists who forged the last-ditch tentative settlement on Feb. 24, resumed deliberations on the next course of action.

This time, the the machinery is ready to go. Legislation providing for government seizure of the mines has been drafted, and the groundwork for a Taft-Hartley 80-day backto-work order has been laid.

White House economic adviser Charles Schultze said the defeat of the contract and continuation of the strike could force up to 3 million more Americans out of work by early April.

"Should no coal be mined over significant periods of time in the future: as we get into the second half of March, we would begin to get significant increases in unemployment, and sometime during that period it would rise above the million mark. And then as you go ... into the second week in April, it would be above the 3 million mark perhaps," Schultze said.

Under Taft-Hartley, a court would order miners back to work for 80 days while a board of inquiry and federal mediators seek to break the bargaining deadlock.

A combination solution is expected from the White House, drawing together:

—The back-to-work order.

—Seizure of the mines wherein the government would set "fair" wage and profit levels as the work resumed.

—And possibly some form of non-binding arbitration. Seizure and arbitration need congressional action.

Carter has bi-partisan support for his deiision, but some have warned the Panama Canal debate in the Senate could delay enactment of emergency coal strike proposals.

An administration source bemoaned the fact that miners "have been led to believe that if they turn this down, they would be better off under TaftHartley. That is so untrue..."

The low turnout was not unprecedented. In 1974, only 65 percent of the miners voted on a contract, approving it by only 56-44 percent.

An estimated 132,000 to 150,000 miners were eligible to cast ballots in the voting.

Refusal won't bust union

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

A representative of the United Mine Workers speaking at UMass yesterday predicted that miners' rejection of the pact negotiated between union leaders and coal operators will not lead to the breakup of the union, despite speculation that it might.

David Martin, union representative from Illinois local 989, said the Bituminous Coal Operators Association wants to destroy the union, but said, "I'm here today to tell you that's not going to happen."

"They'll never destroy the union; they'll never destroy the mine workers," he said.

The 38-year-old labor organizer told an afternoon audience of 110 that the Taft-Hartley Act, which some say President Carter will invoke to suspend the 91-day-old miners strike, "does not force you to go to work. What it does force you to do is not to strike."

There is an old saying among miners, he said; "We let Taft dig it, we let Hartley haul it."

Throughout his 50-minute presentation, which he repeated last night, Martin emphasized the complexity of the issues surrounding the strike and contract negotiations.

Miners want the right to strike at the local level over health and safety conditions, Martin said, which basically is "the right to not work in an unsafe condition" — a right he said is not guaranteed by the Feb. 24 pact.

He criticized national media for coverage of the strike. "There are a few things you haven't heard and haven't been told by the New York Times." He said it is wrong to think the rank-and-file mine workers are in revolt against union President Arnold R. Miller, although it is clear many do not agree with him.

"The union is made up of individuals for better or for worse," he said, and later added, "You know what Arnold's going to do if you're a unionist."

"There's nobody the coal miner can trust but the coal miner and the union," he said, maintaining that the miners cannot trust the government or the coal operators to insure miners safer mining conditions.

Martin described mining as the most dangerous occupation in the country, and more dangerous than it has to be.

When asked what the result would be if the National Guard was sent in to work the mines, Martin repeated another miner's adage, "You don't dig coal with bayonets." He questioned the success they would have operating a mine's "very sophisticated machinery."

Martin said he thought miners would be more willing to work were the mines seized by the federal government, where the profits would go into the U.S. treasury and not to the coal companies.

Martin was brought to Hampshire College and UMass yesterday by area students who compose the three-week-old United Mine Workers Strike Support Committee in Western Massachusetts.

He will now go to Boston where a rally in support of the miners is scheduled to be held March 12. The union president is also listed as a speaker.

City Manager kept quiet

UMass studied DNA

By STEVEN R. D'AGOSTINO

WORCESTER - A controversial type of genetic research that has ignited public outcry across the country has been going on here for two years without the knowledge of elected officials or most residents, Worcester Magazine has learned.

Last spring, City Manager Francis McGrath appointed City Health Director John Smith to represent the City on the UMass Medical School's Bio-Hazards Committee. That committee is responsible for making sure that there are safeguards for possibly hazardous biological experimentation.

McGrath told the City Council of Smith's appointment, but did not inform the councillors that recombinant DNA research was going on at the Belmont Street medical center. McGrath told Worcester Magazine he decided it was a "health problem" and not of immediate concern to the Council.

Mayor Thomas Early claimed to be "Surprised," and Councillor Jordan Levy professed to be "Shocked" upon learning from Worcester Magazine about the experimentation at the UMass Medical School. Early says he's going to talk with John Smith to find out more on the research, and Levy says he, too, will get more information and then file an order before the City Council to discuss possible dangers to the public from the experiments.

The controversial research involves taking the genetic material DNA, or deoxyribonucleic acid, from one species and infusing it in the intestinal bacteria from another species. Because DNA determines hereditary factors, the result is that a wholly new organism is produced.

Singer Holly Near kicks off I.W.W.

By JULIE MELROSE
Collegian Staff

International Women's Week at UMass was off to an exhilerating start last night as singer and cultural worker Holly Near performed before a capacity crowd in the Fine Arts Center Auditorium.

Irene Richard, Student Activities program advisor who is coordinating the week's activities, opened the event by announcing that it was the first concert sponsored by the Union Program Council for which child-care facilities and interpreters for the deaf were provided.

UMass student Aundre Clinton read an original poem dedicated to her mother and Byrdie Klix, workshop coordinator, gave a brief rundown of the week's activities.

Near and her accompanist, Judie Thomas, were greeted warmly by the audience as they came onstage. They opened the concert with "Old Time Woman" a song about conversation between a young woman who's just discovered she's pregnant and an old woman "propped up on a pillow, rockin' in a rockin' chair."

After the first number, Near said, "You're going to hear a lot of songs about women's lives tonight; mostly not the kind you'll hear on AM radio."

The women Near sang about were from many different backgrounds. Two of her songs, "Kentucky Woman" and "You Can't Just Take My Dreams Away" were sung from the perspective of women in Appalachian strip-mining country. After the first of these songs, Near urged the crowd to support the striking United Mine Workers.

"Kentucky Woman" was followed by a rewritten version of "No More Genocide In My Name," from Near's "Hang In There" album. Near urged the crowd to join her in singing the chorus.

One of the more recent compositions Near performed was a song about the Chilean women taken away from their homes by the junta and never seen again.

After intermission, Near and her sister Timothy, who currently works at Stage West in Springfield, performed three numbers together. Timothy interpreted the songs in sign language while Near sang. The rest of the concert was interpreted for the deaf by Maureen Leombruno and Marylee Washburn.

Songs in the second half of the concert included "Water Come Down," "Imagine My Surprise" and "Drops of Water", a song Near said was inspired by the courage of women and a legend she learned while touring in Vietnam.

Referring to the way in which women are now uniting to "make a safe home together," Near said. "There is no fear greater than a woman's will and right to live."

Throughout the concert Judie Thomas, who was filling in for Near's regular pianist after only eight hours of rehearsal, provided solid accompaniment for Near's strong rich voice.

The concert closed with "Nicholia" with the audience dividing into three groups to harmonize on the chorus. As they left the Fine Arts Center, they were still singing.

★ UMass genetic research bared

Chuch Medansky, a microbiologist at the UMass Medical School, is one of those concerned scientists. Last April, during the debate on DNA research in Shrewsbury, he told Worcester Magazine, "I'm concerned about recombinant DNA research because of the potential biohazards resulting from the incorporation of random fragments of DNA into the bacterium E. coli."

Many scientists hail this as a possible road to the long-awaited cure for cancers and other maladies that continue to plague mankind. Other scientists, however, claim that more diseases may be created for which there'll be no cures, and who further predict that someday a mutant will come lumbering out of a laboratory, the product of a botched intercourse.

The same type of genetic research is being conducted in neighboring Shrewsbury at the Worcester Foundation for Experimental Biology. In that community, though, the selectmen regularly get updates from the three residents who serve on the Foundation's Bio-Hazards Committee. City Manager McGrath says he's yet to receive a report from Smith on the research at the UMass Medical School.

Although Smith admits to Worcester Magazine that he knows "very little" about genetic research, he claims the UMass researchers are doing "a pretty fine job staying within the guidelines set by the National Institute for Health." He further claims that "all possibilities have been considered" such as a DNA experiment accidentally getting flushed into the public sewers. Smith gives his stamp of approval saying, "I'm satisfied that there are safeguards."

Both McGrath and Smith say they are mindful of the public outcry that took place in Shrewsbury and Cambridge when the residents first found out that genetic research was going on in their communities. Smith defends the handling of the matter in Worcester as having "reduced the emotions of people who would wonder what's going on."

Unlike in Worcester, there's been an open dialogue in both Shrewsbury and Cambridge between researchers and the community.

As one Cambridge City Councillor put it, "I think it's about time any politician anywhere re-asserts his right to know what's going on in his community."

UMass physics professor to head DNA committee

By MARK HORAN
Collegian Staff

The future of DNA research in Amherst will be decided largely by a special town committee appointed by the Board of Selectmen and headed by UMass physics professor Arthur Quinton.

The committee was formed last fall to "gather and disseminate information about DNA" and report it to the May town meeting and the general public, according to Quinton.

So far the committee has held four meetings and is still in the process of "talking with people," said Quinton.

"We've talked with two people who are planning to do DNA research," said Quinton, "and last week we spoke with two people who are 'cautious' about the research."

Professor Maurille Fournier of UMass and Professor Patrick Williamson of Amherst College, who both hope to do research in DNA, have appeared before the committee to discuss their projects and their view of the health hazards that the research might create.

Last-week Dr. Jonathan King of M.I.T. and Dr. Stephen Newman of City University of New York-Albany expressed their "cautious" feelings on the research to the committee.

Quinton said the committee is still in the information collecting stage but it will make a report to the town meeting in May and the committee may file some Town Warrant articles for the October town meeting.

Quinton commented that he personally did not think the committee would recommend a complete moratorium on DNA research, although he "could not speak for the rest of the committee."

If DNA research is approved in Amherst, two permanent bio-hazards committees will review and approve individual plans for research.

The Amherst College Bio-hazards Committee is almost ready to start meeting, according to Dr. Diana Stein, a UMass researcher who is on the Amherst committee.

Dr. Robert Gage, former UMass vice chancellor of Student Affairs and current public health professor, is a member of the UMass Bio-hazards Committee which he said is still "in the planning stages."

"To the best of my knowledge the University has appointed its members but the town has not appointed all its members yet," said Gage.

The two bio-hazards committees will be composed of both townspeople and institution representatives.

Ethics committee established

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

SOUTH HADLEY — The Mount Holyoke College Board of Trustees will soon take action on a student proposal calling for the establishment of an ethics committee to oversee the questions of college-owned stock in corporations operating in South Africa, according to Irma Rabbino, a spokeswoman at the college.

The proposal was presented Friday to the board by the Student Conference Committee. Rabbino said last night that the board discussed the proposal, but took no action. She stressed, however, that the board's reaction was favorable and they would reply to the students in "the near future."

The next meeting of the Mount Holyoke Board of Trustees is scheduled for May.

According to Community Senator Jeannie Little, the proposal does not demand the immediate divestment of college-owned stock in corporations operating in South Africa.

Instead, she said divestment represents the last resort and the proposal is based on the "strong belief Mount Holyoke would be more effective in these dealings as part of a coalition of other colleges and universities."

"We hope we can establish a coalition among other collges and religious groups," Little said. "We don't recommend divestment now because we don't see that as being the most effective way. We don't want this just to be a moral statement."

The proposal calls for the ethics committee to be comprised of an equal number of college administrators, students, faculty, trustees and alumni, and act as a "liaison between the campus and the trustees."

"The whole proposal hinges on the ethics committee," Little said.

Besides the ethics committee the proposal also calls for:

— A firm policy to end apartheid.

— Proxy committee vote on the South African issues and a monitoring of corporations in South Africa in which the college owns stock.

— Contacting shareholders in these corporations.

— A follow-up to letters sent by college President David B. Truman to corporations in which the college owns stock concerning their involvement in South Africa.

— No further expansion of college investment holdings in corporations operating in South Africa.

College officials last night could not give the exact number of corporations operating in South Africa in which Mount Holyoke owns stock.

Little said she believes Mount Holyoke owns stock in "around 29 corporations with interests in South Africa," and the total financial investment is in the neighborhood of $17 million.

"That may be a conservative estimate," she said. "A lot of our information is confusing."

Candidacies to hold forum

Students will have the rare opportunity to see all 16 student government presidential candidates in a forum tonight at 7:00 in the Campus Center Auditorium.

The debate will begin with five-minute opening statements from the eleven candidacies. There are six individual candidates and five slates of co-presidential candidates.

Following the opening statements candidates will be questioned by a three-person panel consisting of Senator Bob Dion, who is the chairperson of the Senate Rents and Fees Committee, Collegian Executive Editor Michael Doran, and one representative from either Nummo News or Black Affairs page of the Collegian.

After a panelist asks a question, five candidates will be picked at random. These five candidates will be asked the question. Then the next question will go to the remaining six candidates.

This process of indirect questioning is designed to avoid an individual candidate being asked an unfair question.

The questions asked tomorrow night will deal mostly with campus issues. According to Dion and Doran, the questions will be concerned with candidates' platforms and plans for office.

Around 9:30 questions will be taken from the floor.

Design causes fallen roof

HARTFORD [AP] — Engineers investigating the collapse of the Hartford Civic Center's coliseum roof have found evidence of faulty design, poor workmanship and sub-standard materials, a published report said yesterday.

The Hartford Courant report said the information was outlined to a city council investigating committee Feb. 22 by Lev-Zetlin Associates, the New York engineering firm hired to probe the Jan. 19 roof collapse. Members of the committee agreed that the Feb. 22 meeting would be closed because the report was "preliminary."

The Courant also reported that engineers theorize that steel cables found in the wreckage of the roof were strung beneath it sometime after it was put in place by someone concerned about the roof's weakness.

But a report in yesterday's editions of The New Haven Register quoted two engineers investigating the collapse as saying speculation that the cables were used to reinforce the roof is "preposterous."

"What you're talking about is using cables that might support five or six tons to reinforce members that are carrying 400 to 500 tons," one of the two unnamed engineers reportedly said. He speculated the cables might have been strung during construction as safety lines and then forgotten and left in place.

The architect of the coliseum, Vincent Kling and Associates of Philadelphia, and the general contractor, The Gilbane Construction Co. of Providence, have said they were unaware of the cables which were not in the original design.

Other companies involved in the construction of the roof have consistently declined any comment since it collapsed. The 1,400 ton, space-frame roof is said to have been the largest structure of its kind ever built on the ground and raised into place.

UM trustees visit presidential candidates

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

Representatives from the UMass Board of Trustees' Search Committee visited the University of California at Berkeley in January to discuss the UMass presidency with UCal-Berkeley Chancellor Albert H. Bowker, according to Bowker himself.

Search Committee Chairman Stephen G. Breyer would not confirm the report.

"Members of the University of Massachusetts Presidential Search Committee visited the Berkeley campus Jan. 19 and interviewed me," Bowker told the UCal student newspaper, the Daily Californian. "They later invited me to visit the three University of Massachusetts campuses and to meet with the board of trustees, but I declined."

"Therefore, I am not an active candidate," he told the Californian. The Collegian was unable to reach Bowker this weekend for personal comment.

Sources last week said Bowker is considered to be the leading candidate among a field of seven or eight to succeed former UMass President Robert C. Wood.

Wood resigned effective Jan. 1. Interim President Franklin K. Patterson has served since then.

Bowker has served as UCal-Berkeley chancellor since 1971. He has also been turned down for president of the UCal system by UCal trustees.

Meanwhile, Breyer said he would not discuss "details of the (search) committee."

"We've talked to different people in different places," Breyer said. He said he would not comment on possible candidates for the UMass presidency due to a "need for confidentiality."

"Too many times, a good candidate has been prevented from being a candidate due to publicity at too early a stage," he said.

Another source last week told the Collegian Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery and former Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs and Provost Robert L. Gluckstern are still being considered for the UMass presidency.

Blacks didn't gain says gov't. survey

BOSTON (AP) – In the ten years after a federal ban against racial discrimination in hiring and salaries, blacks gained no economic ground in the struggle to reach parity with white workers, according to a survey by a Federal Reserve Bank economist.

"Affirmative action programs have not succeeded in promoting the employment of black workers," Alicia H. Munnell, an assistant vice president of the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston concluded in the bank's latest New England Economic Review.

The economist studied wages and employment of blacks from the passage of the 1964 U.S. Civil Rights Act barring discrimination to 1974. She said she omitted 1975 and 1976 "due to the distorting effects of the severe recession."

Her study showed that while the wages of blacks with jobs rose slightly higher than the earnings of whites during the ten years, black family income dropped relative to whites' and black unemployment rates still were twice as high as rates among white workers.

Teenagers bore the brunt of economic decline among blacks during the period, according to the survey.

"The proportion of black teenagers employed dropped dramatically between 1964 and 1974 when white teenage employment showed a substantial gain," Ms. Munnell reported.

"By 1974, only 21 percent of black males age 16 and 17 were employed compared to 45 percent of white youths.

"Between 1964 and 1974, black males dropped from 13.2 to 11 percent of the teenage work force during a period when blacks were increasing as a proportion of the U.S. population.

"The decline in participation rate indicates that the unemployment rate ratio understates the deterioration in the labor market position of black teenagers."

According to survey figures, 32.9 percent of black male and female teenagers were out of work in 1974, up from 27.2 percent in 1964.

The rate for white males and females between 16 and 19 dropped slightly to 14 percent in 1974 compared with 14.8 percent ten years before.

Total unemployment rate of blacks of all ages and both sexes was 9.9 percent in 1974, up from 9.6 percent. This compared with a white rate in 1974 of 5 percent, up from 4.6 percent in 1964.

Ms. Munnell said the wages of blacks have increased but "black employment has fallen compared to white.

She said a rapidly growing economy in the late 1960s created a strong demand for labor and growing opportunities for blacks.

"When the upswing slowed during the seventies," she explained, "the number of highwage positions shrank. Consequently, workers with the least seniority were laid off. The result was a slowdown in upgrading for minorities as a whole and a reduction in black employment relative to white."

Lease policy approved by school office

A spokesperson for the Residential Resource Management, which is in charge of physical maintenance in all dorms, spoke last night in favor of the proposed dorm lease policy at the Northeast Area Government meeting.

Sandy Anderson said the way repairs are made now is "through a power of persuasion type of agreement" with the Physical Plant. "Most students don't realize that we're paying for these people (physical plant workers), but we don't supervise them," said Anderson.

Other guest speakers at the meeting were candidates for the Student Government Organization presidency Steve Ross, Herbert Tyson with co-candidate Shelley Gordon, Jay Flynn, and Sue Birmingham with co-candidate David Barenburg. The SGA elections will be held March 15 and 16.

Olympic multi-medalist Wilma Rudolph will be the keynote speaker for International Women's Week tonight at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

1960 gold medalist to key women's week

By CANDY CARLON
Collegian Staff

Wilma Rudolph, former Olympic gold medalist, will make the keynote address for International Women's Week tonight at 8:00 in Student Union Ballroom. The program is sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Rudolph set three world records in the 1960 Olympics in Rome in the 100, 200 and 400 meter races, becoming the first American woman to win three gold medals in one Olympiad. She is also the first United States Woman Athlete of the Year to earn that honor two years in a row and the first woman to be named "Sports Woman of the Year" by European Sports Writers.

Rudolph was the victim of polio from infancy and was unable to walk without braces until she was nine years old. By the time she was 15, she had overcome her handicap andwent to the 1956 Australian Olympics in Melbourne where she earned a bronze medal.

Wilma Rudolph has received many additional honors since the Olympics. She is one of three women to receive the James E. Sullivan Award, presented annually to the year's most outstanding amateur athlete by the American Athletic Union, in 41 years. The U.S. State Department selected her to be America's Good Will Ambassador to French West Africa. In 1970 she toured world-wide as a representative of United States Track and Field Association.

Rudolph has been actively involved, in various capacities, in all of the Olympic Games since 1956. She served on the U.S. Olympic Committee for the 1976 Games in Montreal. She has also worked with the Special Olympics for handicapped children.

She has taught physical education at all levels from elementary school through college and has consulted in education, curriculum development, and other areas for the California State Department of Education and for private consulting firms.

Her autobiography, "Wilma", was made into a television movie aired in December by NBC which starred Cicely Tyson.

Women's workshop planned

By CANDY CARLON
Collegian Staff

The lives of handicapped women will be explored Friday in two separate workshops on campus.

The workshops will be conducted by Ruth Scienkewicz and Jane Hansberry from 1 to 5 p.m. in Campus Center room 917.

Kathy Moore, a UMass student and intern at Belchertown State School, is coordinating the workshops for International Women's Week. According to Moore, "the workshops will focus on life in institutions, handicapped women in society, and relationships and sexuality of handicapped women."

Scienkewicz will be discussing non-oral communication through an electronic communicator. Scienkewicz has cerebral palsy and is unable to speak. She is currently writing a book about her life. Sue Downie, another handicapped woman, will be reading exerpts from the book throughout the workshop.

Hansberry, a member of the newly formed Handicapped Student Collective, will discuss "Sexuality and the Disabled Woman." This workshop will be conducted in the form of a panel discussion.

"Letters are being sent out to deaf students on campus to determine the workshops for which interpreters are to be provided," said Moore. "We hope that sending letters will encourage deaf people to attend," she added.

Schoolbooks protested

NASHUA, N.H. [UPI] – Mothers in southern New Hampshire who object to some books being assigned to their children are gearing up for a fight over which books should be allowed in public schools.

The controversy has spawned a group calling itself "Concerned Parents and Taxpayers for Better Education in Nashua. The group was formed to protest sex and violence in school texts.

The group includes several persons who picketed the statehouse recently in support of a Nashua woman who went to jail rather than produce her daughter for a truancy hearing.

President talks freely to college journalists

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON – "I don't believe there's a dormancy among college students. Despite criticism from some of the media, the commitment is still there," Carter said as he ended his first briefing of college editors and news directors Friday.

The president was very much at ease as he answered questions from the students. Unlike the formal manner in which Carter conducts press conferences attended by the White House Press Corps, he spoke freely and stayed later than the scheduled time to give closing remarks.

Though the president was informal in talking with the students, he said the caliber of questions from the college media "was wide-ranging and profound in its importance." He praised college students for having a flexibility of thought and analysis and said these qualities were an advantage allowing students to freely express support and criticism of the government.

Carter said the same expression of government views applied to him when he took office last January. "When I came into office, there was a sense of alienation of people from government because of Vietnam, Watergate and problems with the Central Intelligence Agency. I felt there should be some clear expression of what our country stands for – honesty, human rights, decency."

The presidential appearance was not an informal happening for the 200 students who came from almost every state in the country. A trip to the old executive building across the street from the White House was preceded by security clearance calls to the press office as well as numerous checks by the Secret Service men during the briefing.

Midge Costanza, assistant to the president for public liaison, added some light comments as she introduced Carter. "Don't look so eager to see him that you look like you want to get rid of me," she said. Play it cool, look firm – or it'll go to his head."

... and he later speaks his plans to increase direct grants and loans to students while expanding the work study programs across the nation's colleges and universities. (Staff photos by Beth Segers)

Carter pushes for more student aid

By BETH SEGERS
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON – President Carter over the weekend said the "income tax credit is ill advised and not well focused," maintaining instead his proposal to increase aid to college students will "help those families most in need."

Carter spoke of education and other topics at a White House briefing of college editors and news directors Friday in which he and several top aides were drilled with questions from 200 members of the college media from across the country.

Carter last Tuesday requested from Congress a record $12.9 billion federal budget for education. "I will not accept both the income tax credit and my proposal" he said. Carter said he favors his proposal, which calls for a 24 per cent increase in spending on education, because it will affect students more than the income tax credit tuition break and is "less than half the cost."

Carter's proposal to increase aid to college students by $1.46 billion has three focuses: direct grants ($250) to students from middle income families, the authorization of increased loans to students, and the expansion of work-study programs on the nation's campuses.

The president also answered questions dealing with the nation's economy, amnesty, the Equal Rights Amendment, his participation in fund-raising events for political candidates, and speculation that he is a "one-term president."

"The basic elements of economic theory have been ignored in the last three weeks," Carter said of the economic situation. "Because the OPEC nations export $60 billion each year and can maintain the positive trade balance, the rest of the world must absorb this amount, making the worldwide balance equal to zero."

"We (the United States) are absorbing more than our share of the trade balance while the Germans and Japanese have insisted on having a positive trade balance of their own. This aggravates the US economic problems," the president said.

Carter cited three factors involving the 1978 year which will provide for "the inevitable correction of the value of the dollar." Oil imports will not increase this year, the growth rate of the United States (three per cent higher than other nations) will be reduced, and the interest paid on US investments is higher this year than last, causing other nations to invest in the United States, he said.

When asked of his opinion of the amnesty program, Carter said it "has been only partially successful because of restrictions placed on it by Congress. There is a need to expedite the process of giving amnesty to Vietnam protesters and deserters, although a distinction must be made between the different degrees of desertion. It is not yet adequate," he said.

The president said he "fully favors ratification of the ERA but remains "personally and politically opposed to abortion." Asked if there was any contradiction in the two stands, he said "I don't see the two subjects to be interrelated at all." Carter said he does not favor government payment for abortions, but said he thinks the government should find every possible alternative to the problem.

Carter has campaigned in five major fund raising evens so far this year for political candidates. He defended this action Friday, saying he will "on occasion, continue to give support to those politicians performing well, without interfering with my duties as president." He did, however, add that he will not "get involved in primaries for democratic candidates".

Speculation that Carter is a "one-term president" was dismissed by Carter as "something said about every president since Eisenhower". No president since then has served for more than one term because of tragedy, resignation, failure to win re-election or decision not to seek a second term, he said. Carter did not give any plans for the 1980 election.

Assistant Secretary for Education Mary Frances Berry supported the president's wishes to have education made separate from HEW, giving it the responsibility of reporting directly to the president. "This will not mean more centralized control of education, but would mean an increase in the qualified person power pool and give the federal government the power to support research in education and coordinate its federal activities better," Berry said.

When asked for the HEW stand on the current controversy at the medical school at UMass Worcester which may require medical students to pay back the state for the cost of their education, Berry said she was not familiar with the situation. "I don't know of any similar programs in existence," she said, "but whatever they do, it's important to make it clear when students are enrolled that this would be required."

Rubenstein, deputy assistant to the president for domestic affairs and policy, spoke of Carter's stand on human rights and his pardon for Vietnam protesters. "The two actions, especially the human rights position, have changed completely the idea of America abroad – they also involved enormous political risk on the part of the president."

Counter-march at Skokie

To the Editor:

Lee Martindale in her letter regarding a "countermobilization" march against the Nazi march in Skokie, Illinois is absolutely right in advocating such an action. However, it must be pointed out that the Nazis are marching on Skokie not because there are trade unions there, or Blacks or socialists, but because it is a predominantly Jewish community. The significance of this march is obvious: it is an attack on the peace of mind of the Jewish Holocaust survivors that make up a significant portion of Skokie and the total significance of this is an attack on the American Jewish community as a whole. Therefore it is up to the Skokie Jewish community to organize this action and for the rest of us to follow their lead.

The following is happening:

1] A peaceful, non-violent counter-march is being planned in Skokie. A committee and chairperson has been appointed by the Skokie Jewish community to organize this march and as such, this committee and chairperson are the recognized national coordinators of an action.

2] The New England Federationof Zionist Students [NEFZS] has been recognized by the above mentioned committee as the group in the New England region responsible for getting students out to Skokie and the UMass Skokie Action Committee is made up of members of NEFZS.

3] The above mentioned commmittee and other Jewish organizations in the Chicago area have been receiving phone calls from all across the nation from various Jewish organizations and individuals. The conclusion was that a large grassroots movements is developing and growing and a conservation estimate of counter-marchers is standing at 50,000 to 100,000 and a more liberal estimate puts the figure at 500,000 Jews!

4] The governor of Illinois will be leading the counter-march on the opposite side of town to the Nazi march in order to divert attention away from the Nazis.

These are the facts and figures of what is being planned by the Skokie Jewish community and by the American Jewish community as a whole. A point should be brought up that the above mentioned counter-march is the legally recognized march, and that participants in any different march that are out to cause trouble, i.e. direct confrontation with the Nazis, will be liable to arrest. Also, it is only right that we do what the people of Skokie want us to do, for it is their town and their personal well being that we are dealing with.

Therefore, any and all people or groups that are interested in participating in this counter-march is the legally recognized march, and that participants in any different march that are out to cause trouble, i.e. direct confrontation with the Nazis, will be liable to arrest. Also, it is only right that we do what the people of Skokie want us to do, for it is their town and their personal well being that we are dealing with.

*Therefore, any and all people or groups that are interested in participating in this counter-march are welcome to join us in travelling to Skokie. ## Management plays 'stalling game'

To the Editor:

What if you, —
hustled tips for your rent,
cooked for other people for your board, supported yourself and others on this wage and had NO —
-JOB SECURITY
-HEALTH BENEFITS
-GUARANTEED WAGE INCREASES AND
-GRIEVANCE PROCEDURES?

What if you were a woman? A woman working for a living and still being treated like a "little girl."

On January 24, 1978 the Hotel and Restaurant Employees and Bartenders Union, Local No. 116 at Packard's Restaurant, [formerly Cousin Williams] 14 Masonic Street, Northampton received voluntary recognition from management. The management has refused to negotiate a contract with the union and is, as one worker put it, "playing a stalling game with us."

Last Wednesday evening, March 1st, the workers at Packard's walked out on strike with large support from clientele. The workers at Packard's are demanding:

-Respect on the Job
-A Grievance Procedure
-A Guaranteed Wage Increase
-Health Benefits

They are demanding it of a management that does not originate from the Valley and that can [and has] fired workers for no justifiable cause. A management that will not relinquish its full control over its workers.

Most of us are or will be workers at sometime in our lives. SUPPORT the right for workers to have some control over their lives! BOYCOTT Packard's!! Help picket! until negotiations begin.

Refuting the melting pot ideal

To the Editor:

The letter by Patrick O'Donnell [in the 2-24 Collegian] is an example of his directed criticism ["blaming the victim"]. Take his closing remarks for instance: these are a classic representation of the historic double-talk of overall American society regarding ethnic ["minority"] groups differing considerably in heritages from the established dominant culture. This dominant ["mainstream"] culture has long said "join us in the United States" and leave "hyphenated America", that is, assimilate into the melting-pot.

The melting-pot perhaps would have been the way to build an "American nation" except for certain inherent characteristics [or catches]: its goal is to achieve a homogenity that conforms by the standards of judgement set by that group of people who founded it and have become its elite. To this end it has judged certain groups as "acceptable", "acceptable on condition," or "unacceptable" on basis of degree on difference from its standards.

"Acceptable" groups were those which easily were blendable in the melting-pot. "Acceptable on condition" groups like such white ethnic groups as Poles, Italians, Hungarians, and Greeks were never wholly accepted by mainstream society unless they abandoned their own group ways of life, values, points of view and ethnic communities and cultures, and adopted those of the dominant culture. Those who could not—or would not—accept such group cultural-psychological "genocide" have remained concentrated in the lower levels of the socio-economic status scale and face subtle forms of class discrimination [though they may no longer directly experience blatant ethnic discrimination].

"Unacceptable" groups for the melting-pot have been those whose ethnic heritages remain apparent in their appearances even after acculturation [Blacks, Latinos, Indians, Asians]. These groups have been collectively segregated or excluded and in different ways subject to second [or often third] class treatment [and persistant ethnic as well as class discrimination] by the melting-pot society.

As a result, what Mr. O'Donnell calls "hyphenated Americans" have had to fall back on their own resources, and now have come to the conclusion that in the long run it is better for them to reject the melting-pot ideal, as the melting-pot has proven to them its inability to accept them AS THEY ARE and without their having to accept second- or third-class cultural or political status. This is not necessarily separatism, but pluralism. Separatism is the extreme alternative to the melting-pot and can be just as harmful, because in that case the community cuts iself off from others in the long run and can become as intolerant of differences as the melting-pot. In a world like this different people need to help each other, and creating an authentically pluralistic society affords different ethnic communities the opportunity to live together tolerantly and interact positively, yet also develop their own cultures and community life [and being part of a group is as important as being an individual].

Ethnic diversity and not any melting-pot is what really should characterize the "American nation."

N.A.J.E. group forms

To the Editor:

As the new semester has finally gotten under way, so have the workings of the UMass Chapter of the National Association of Jazz Educators.

There was a very light turnout for the first meeting, due to a mix-up in scheduling, but the business at hand was taken care of quickly.

The purpose of NAJE is not only to expose area jazz musicians to job opportunities, special events, and other musicians looking for bands, gigs, and jam sessions, but mainly to help incorporate jazz education into the public school system.

We'd like to hear from local schools interested in knowing more about NAJE, and in hearing area jazz players perform. A few of the University jazz ensembles already have dates set at various schools for musical-educational functions.

There is a calendar of gigs, jams, special events, etc. located across the hall from Fine Arts Center office no. 251 [street level ramp-N. Pleasant St.], UMass. There's an envelope underneath the calendar for questions and incoming information about additional events. Let us know about your gig and we'll post it.

If there are any hall or club owners contemplating jazz nights... we all know how badly the area needs such a place or places.... please contact by mail or phone [evenings]:

Phyllis Wall, 41 Puffton Village, Amherst, MA 01002, 549-1546; P. Wall, c-o Terrell Stackpole, F.A.C. No. 251, UMass, Amherst, MA 01003.

There will be three more meetings of NAJE this semester — all jazz musicians are invited to attend — bring your instruments! Meetings will be posted as soon as definite dates are set.

SSFC gives CLSA 'the run around'

To the Editor:

Three semesters ago the Committee for the Liberation of Southern Africa [CLSA] asked the Student Senate Finance Committee [SSFC] for $600. to pay speakers we had at a conference. Jay Martus and Stan Kinard were present when the money got passed by the Senate.

'When it came time to pay our speakers, I volunteered, but it turned out that I couldn't pay them until we had an RSO No. So I established that and paid Playthell Benjamin $300. the last day of the Spring semester of '77'. When I came back last semester [Fall '77'] I went up to RSO ready to pay two other speakers, Nana and Bheki, $100. each. The money was never transferred into our account and our standing was $300. Therefore, I could not pay Nana and Bheki until we got the money transferred.

Since I am the treasurer, it was my job to find out why the money wasn't in our account, and also to pay our speakers. I went to the SSFC and tried to find out what was going on. To put it bluntly, they gave me the run around. I went five times and they still hadn't tried to help me out, and then they decided that we never got the money and it became my job to prove to them that we did. Finally, Pricilla West said she'd look through the Senate notes and find it in writing. The next meeting she said that in the minutes it was passed to give us $300. I was very surprised and confused at this but at that point I had no other choice but to accept her word. So now I had another problem. My group was now no longer in debt but Nana and Bheki still needed to be paid because they had been waiting for 1¾ semesters already. So instead of arguing I decided to ask the SSFC for the money to pay them. They gave me a very hard time, saying it was my fault we owed them the money and it wasn't their policy to bail out groups who were in the hole. They tabled it for the next meeting.

The next meeting I was fortunate because [Jay] Martus showed up, and he proved to them that on the original minutes it did say in fact $600. This was already the third to last week in the Fall '77' semester. So the next day I finally paid Nana.

The very last day of the same semester, I found out that there was still confusion over the funds and I was informed that I needed Paul K.'s verbal O.K. to Lynne Smith in order to start the paper work process. I did this and expected to come back the Spring semester of '78' with a clean record and no more hassle. But of course this was not the case. We were not only — $300. but $214. we were promised for office supplies was also never transferred into our account. To top it all off, we were denied the right to fill out a $5.00 purchase order! So, I had to try to straighten out this problem again. As usual I was continually put off every time I inquired about this problem. Mainly, I was told that it was paper work.

In the mean time, we were turned down by the budgets committee [even for consideration] for financing our committee.

On Feb. 28th, I went into RSO to sign some papers to take out a van, and I was questioned about the financial standing of my group. This time I was very angry, because I had been around that office at least 17 times to deal with that problem and I felt as if they had to know what was going on. But never-the-less I journeyed forth once again to solve the mystery of the missing funds. This time I was extremely fortunate because there was a new face in the Student Senate office. This mans name is Paul Hamel and he was eager to help me figure out my problem that had now swollen into a dilema. It turns out that he unveils the whole mystery and discovers that an incompetent Student Senate FC is at the roots of it. Within two days Paul straightened out the whole situation.

Considering that our committee had a lot of work to do in the meantime, I find it very disheartening that I had to spend so much of my time and energy on this bureaucratic bullshit. Our committee helped the trustees decide to divest their shares of stocks with holdings in Southern Africa, helped several schools with their campaigns, educated thousands of students about Apartheid, held several workshops and demonstrations, and we are presently working on a Regional conference around these issues.

I know the people of Southern Africa need lovers of freedom in the United States, to stand up and shout it into the streets. What discourages me the most is that several people on the Student Senate Finance Committee remained sitting down.

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S WEEK '78

MARCH 6-11

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AT AMHERST

A Herstory of Women's Week

International Women's Day began in 1857, when women garment workers marched in the lower East Side of New York city in protest of their working conditions. A long line of women marched from the poorer section, demanding a raise in pay, a ten hour work day and equality for all women in work. The march was dispersed by the police. Three years later these women formed their own union in March of 1860. In March of 1908 thousands of women needle trade workers marched again on the Lower East Side of New York, commemorating the first march in 1857, and proclaiming March 8th as International Women's Day. This march, sixty-one years after the first, was making some of the same demands: shorter hours and better pay, as well as legislation against child labor and in favor of the vote for women.

In 1910 in Denmark, at an International Socialist Conference, March 8th was officially proclaimed International Women's Day in honor of the New York women workers; it was at the urging of Clara Zetkin, a German socialist and feminist who had long been involved in working for women's liberation.

Since 1910, March 8th has been celebrated in various ways by women

Special Presentations

Little Flags Theatre

International Women's Week brings the Boston based political Little Flags Theatre to the University of Massachusetts. Under the artistic direction of Maxine Klein, the production of "The Furies of Mother Jones," an exhilarating tribute in drama, dance and song to the working people of this land, will be presented on Tuesday, March 7 at 8 p.m. in the S.U.B. Admission is free.

Sweet Honey

The final tribute to International Women's Week at UMass will be a concert in the Fine Arts Center Auditorium at 8:00 p.m. on Saturday, March 11.

Bernice Reagon, an activist and SNCC (Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee) Freedom Singer during the Civil Rights Movement, will appear in concert with her a cappela group Sweet Honey in the Rock.

These four women combine their talents as singers, songwriters and collectors to make a dynamic musical statement on the Black American Experience. Their repertoire spans children's game songs and prison songs of the rural South through Gospel and blues, to Black women's love songs and socio-political statements of today.

Big Mama Poetry Troupe

Big Mama Poetry Troupe will present an evening of theatre, weaving together original poetry, music and movement, as part of International Women's Week on March 9 at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

The troupe is originally from Ohio and has been performing their poetryplay on tour at colleges from Chicago to New York City for four years. They have published two books of poetry and performed on radio and television. Dorothy Boroush is director of Big Mama; poets Barbara Angell, Marguerite Back-Rex, Meredith Holmes and Mary Ann Larkin, poet-songwriter Sally Pirtle and musician Betsy Reeves are the members of the troupe.

Children's Workshops

Children's Workshops will be available during Women's Week March 6-10 from 9:00 a.m. until 9:00 p.m. in Campus Center Rooms 168, 170 and 171. The children's workshops will provide an atmosphere of non-sexist, nonracist attitudes. Staff members want to offer the children a learning experience. A competent, qualified paid staff will be provided. They hope to offer women an opportunity to be independent from their children while resting assured their children are in a quality environment.

Women Under Apartheid—lecture by Nana Shesheba, poetry by Zoe Best, music by Vea Williams and Welcome—Friday, March 10, CCA 8 p.m., free

Hillel Brunch—"Women in Jewish Life: Two Views"—speakers for the discussion will be Martha Ackelsburg, Assistant Professor of Government at Smith College presenting the feminist approach and Shifra Deren, co-director of the Chabad House presenting the religious aspect, Sunday, March 5, 11:00 a.m., Commonwealth Room, Student Union.

Jacqueline Maidana—drawings at Everywoman's Center, March 6-10, "Theme on Women."

★ Herstory

around the world. In 1917, thousands of women left their homes and jobs in Moscow to observe the day, starting a strike which sparked the Revolution. In Spain in 1936, 800,000 women, led by Delores Ibaurri, "La Passionaraia", demonstrated in Madrid for progress and liberty. The women of Women's Day Federation called for arms reduction and peace.

In Australia over 200,000 women demostrated for women's rights and in 1954, 100,000 marched in Germany. Italian women met in small meetings all over the country to discuss women's situation, and the National Assembly of Women gathered in London and Manchester, England and Glascow, Scotland. In 1955, 5000,000 Indonesian woman met to celebrate and demonstrate for Women's rights.

So instead of a day, our celelbration during International Women's Week at the University of Massachusetts follows the tradition of a rich women's herstory. There will be seven full days of multi-cultural and educational workshops, lectures and festivities.

...Paula Gold

Paula W. Gold, Assistant Attorney General for Consumer Affairs in the state of Massachusetts, will speak on March 7 at 3:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. Gold was appointed Chief of the Consumer Protection Division by Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti in January 1975.

Since Gold's appointment, the Consumer Protection Division has filed 325 law suits and brought about three major sets of regulations for the protection of consumers concerning nursing homes, automobolites and advertising.

Gold supervises a staff of seventy-five lawyers who do general comsumer protection work. Another unit of lawyers who represent comsumers in rate proceedings before the Department of Public Utilities and the Department of Insurance also come under her supervision.

After graduationg from Boston College Law School in 1967, Gold worked for five years with Boston's poor as a staff attorney for the Boston Legal Assistance Project. In 1974, she served with the Massachusetts Law Reform Institute as a litagation specialist. Gold also served as Commissioner of the Department of Public Utilities under the Sargent adminintration.

Before her appointment as Assistant Attorney General, Gold taught courses at Harvard, Boston College and Boston University Law Schools and participated in clinical education programs throughout the state.

...Nora Ephron

Nora Ephron, author of "Wallflower at the Orgy" and "Crazy Salad" and a senior editor for "Esquire" magazine, will speak on Wednesday, March 8 at 8 p.m. in the S.U.B. The subject of her talk will be "Some Funny Things About Women."

Ephron took a job at "Esquire" in 1972, writing about women with subjects ranging from feminine deodorant spray to the Pillsbury Bakeoff, from Julie Nixon Eisenhower to Betty Friedan. Both of her books, "Wallflower at the Orgy" and "Crazy Salad," are made up of essays from her columns in "Esquire." Her writing has been called "truly funny and wonderfully wise" by the "Chicago Tribune" and she has been called a "woman for all seasons" by the New York Times.

...Wilma Rudolph

Wilma Rudolph, Olympic gold medalist runner will speak in the Student Union Ballroom on March 6 at 8:00 p.m. Rudolph, the first and only American woman to win three gold medals in one Olympiad, was also honored with the title United States Woman Athlete of the Year two years in a row. Overcoming polio as a child, Rudolph went on to become the champion she is, and today centers her energy on sports and working with young people.

Time stands still at our distillery where we still make Cuervo Gold by hand.

For centuries we've wound our clock by hand. And for centuries we've made Cuervo Gold by hand.

At the Cuervo distillery it's almost as if time has stood still. Our Blue Magueys are nurtured by hand, picked by hand, and carried to the ovens by hand, as they have been since 1795.
It is this continuing dedication to tradition that makes Cuervo Gold special. Any way you drink it Cuervo Gold will bring you back to a time when quality ruled the world.

Cuervo. The Gold standard since 1795.

THIS
LUCKY DAY

An Air Force ROTC scholarship can mean a lot when you need help with college finances. It pays tuition, books and lab fees . . . and gives you $100 a month for other college costs. This could be just what you need to permit you to fine-tune your concentration on your studies. It could mean the difference between not making it at all, and going out on your own with a good, solid college degree.

The Air Force is a great way to be on your own. As a commissioned officer, you'll have responsibility with your very first job. You'll find an atmosphere of dedication, trust, and reliance, and you'll jump right into managing people and expensive resources. You'll have an excellent starting salary — good financial security.

It can all start with a decision to check out AFROTC. Find out how you can get a scholarship. See what we offer, then show us what you can offer in return. It just might be our lucky day, too!

This is International Women's Week

This week, the second annual International Women's Week celebration will be taking place at UMass. Seven days of workshops, concerts, lectures and theatrical presentations are planned.

The purpose of the Women's Week activities is two-fold. On one hand, they are a celebration of womanhood and the achievements of the feminist movement to date. On the other hand, they constitute a recognition of the tremendous amount that remains to be accomplished.

The feminist movement is as diverse as the women involved in it. It touches the lives of women of all races, socio-economic backgrounds and sexual preferences. Although in some cases this diversity has served to divide women, for the most part it has provided an atmosphere of lively debate and exchange of perspectives.

In the sense that Women's Week exists to provide women with a time and place to explore their own special needs and interests, the activities have been designed to be primarily of interest to women. But men should not ignore the opportunity Women's Week offers them to look into the kinds of oppression women encounter in a society still plagued by sexism.

If you doubt that such oppression is still rampant, you need look no further than commercial television, where programs and advertisements portray women in stereotyped and demeaning roles...or examine the ill-fate of the Equal Rights Amendment, which is threatened with extinction despite public support.

Here on campus, sexism exists in many different forms. It is as subtle as the patronizing attitude of a male professor toward his female students and as blatant as the relative salaries and positions of women faculty and staff members.

It is significant that women, who constitute 52 per cent of the population, must still set aside a special place and time to have their concerns addressed. Ultimately, the concerns of the feminist movement do not apply only to women.

One of the major sentiments running throughout the week's activities will be that, by incorporating feminist ideology into the whole of American society, the lot not only of women but of aal people will improve.

Knowing your enemy

By JUDYIE BRANDT

One of the most important axioms of any political struggle is "Know Your Enemy". Not only the ability to identify the enemy but also knowledge of how he-she-they operate; their strategy, tactics, manoeuvres and otherwise underhanded deceptions. Unfortunately in a situation like UMass where we are all supposedly receiving an "education" and are referred to collectively as a student body, there is a tendency to become confused as to who is a friend and who is a foe. Periodically, as something of a mixed blessing, racist backlash rears its ugly head (anyone who has been on this campus for over a year knows that every spring the progressive and reactionary forces square off, this annual bout superficially appears to be economics, such as RSO budgets, but we know better, the real issue is race). I say mixed blessing because when it comes down to tangible support, such as votes, it is obvious who is our enemy and who is our friend and so defines a political struggle. Such a situation has (right on schedule) developed over the Black American Music Festival. From the vicious opposition the project has received one can pretty clearly discern who is who. We must first analyze the existing situation with the Festival, identify who has attempted to undermine its existence and formulate our plans for its success.

The present status of the festival is as follows: there is a total budget of $44,880 admission is free for UMass students, the general public purchases tickets for $6.00. The Student Senate has demanded that the entire sum invested be reimbursed before any profits from ticket sales are donated to the Duke Ellington Foundation. It is highly unlikely that any substantial if any profit at all will be made. Remember this is and always has been since its proposition in November 1976, a benefit program. Every year the Senate sponsors an event known as Spring concert, an event that loses money ($13,000 last year), however in the case of the Black American Music Festival the SGA wants to break even. The only funds guaranteed towards the establishment of the Duke Ellington Foundation is money from concessions (beer, food, etc.), how ironic, we get a concession.

The Senate meeting itself was an excellent example of where we stand in relation to this campus and its student political leaders. John Hite, who has made a point of doing nothing substantial throughout his term as co-president has emerged in the last weeks of his term as the spearhead of reactionary sentiment. On his way out of office he has established himself as, The Great White Hite. He doesn't even have to pretend to care about the interests of Third World people anymore, he is out of the closet as defender of the faith: Institutionalized Racism.

Various proposals were debated at the Senate meeting, more or less destructive and none of them in support of the BAMF's original form. For the first two hours arguments focused on the feasibility of having two concerts, one concert or whatever, but the crux of the matter, (the nitty gritty issue) was articulated by a misguided girl from the Greek constituency. No one is interested in supporting Black music. This poor child who doesn't know from nothin' about Black music, does know that she's not interested in it, or anything else Black for that matter. She, as can be expected given the social realities of America, received a round of applause for her ignorance. From this point on racism had the floor, the only issue, save perhaps sex, will keep senators frantic until 2:30 in the morning. You may object to this assertion, saying that money contains the same potentially hysterical reaction as sex and race but you can be damn sure that the question of who gets the money precipitates political struggle.

So we observed treachery and opportunism all the way down the line. There are a number a petty thieves in this affair who I will not name in this article but whose actions speak for themselves, just check the records. The Student Senate is a conservative body in liberal's clothing and should be treated as such. Yet as uncompromisingly as we must behave towards our enemies we must also recognize our friends. I would like to make brief mention of those individuals who were in solidarity with our efforts; Steve Ross, Susan Birmingham, Jay Martus, Paul Cronin, Brian DeLima, Pinky Batiste, Bob Braden senate speaker Pat Whelan; there are some members of the UMass community who are progressive in thought and action.

Now as far as we are concerned a significant victory has been won. Black American music will be celebrated in a festival on this campus. This is a step forward. A Black cultural institution, the Duke Ellington Foundation, will benefit. This is the beginning of a movement. What is immediately necessary is input, energy and commitment from all those individuals who appreciate the educational concepts which the festival will further. We need folks to work. Volunteer your energies towards its success. The Black American Music Festival Committee meets in New Africa House on Tuesday at 6 p.m., or call the office of Third World Affairs, Rm. 308 Student Union, 545-2517.

AT DUSK THE TORCHES ARE LIT, WITH FLIFT AND EIM TAKING TURNS CARRYING THIERS.
IT'S GETTING PRETTY MISTY.
DIFFERENT THOUGHTS RUN THROUGH THEIR MINDS...
HOW DID I GET INTO THIS MESS?
I DON'T LIKE TO BE HERE. EIM'S JUST AN ADOPTED BROTHER, AND ONLY HE CAN RING THE BELL.
BOY, AM I HUNGRY.
YUM!
ALL THESE THOUGHTS ARE INTERRUPTED BY EIM'S TORCH GOING OUT, AND A CRY FROM FLIFT!
HELP!!
HE SEES SOMETHING HUGE AND MOVING: IT IS ALMOST UPON HIM!
JENNIS TURNS AND THRUSTS OUT HIS TORCH...
IT KNOCKS DOWN HIS TORCH, AND DOES THE SAME TO KRUSTIL'S!

Your Birthday

MONDAY, MARCH 6

Born today, you possess a bold, keen, and highly imaginative intellect. You seek knowledge actively, and use it wisely after you have gained it. You are also a physical person, reveling in the sensations of work, play, and human contact generally. You respond to your emotions both mentally and physically.

You have definite strong likes and dislikes. Your relationships with others may be especially satisfying because they will be especially strong, deep, and lasting. Your choice of companions will always depend upon your immediate needs; you never play people according to what they may do for you in the future.

You are not particularly ambitious about monetary gain, but you do harbor daydreams about becoming known in your profession. Nothing would please you more than to be recognized by those passing by on the street.

Also born on this date: Ed MacMahon, entertainer, lecturer; Elizabeth Barrett Browning, poet.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

TUESDAY, MARCH 7

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) — Volume, not quality is in order today, though it may go against your grain.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) You may want to ignore all instructions after what you learn today about a new project.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) — Unless you are satisfied with your efforts, plan to change your methods.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) — You may have to adapt quickly to new instructions. Do not begin arguments today.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) — Early morning brooding could work against you for the rest of the day. Cheer up.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) — A shopping spree could be all you need to bring you out of depression. Guard against extravagance.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) — More than competence is needed today to make the progress you hope for. Try a new method.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) — Indulge your interest in the occult. You may learn more about yourself than you bargained for!

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) — You may attract much attention through success with the very young. Accept praise at evening.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) — Answer another's questions precisely, succinctly, and tactfully. Avoid being abstruse.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) — Don't reveal another's secret in revealing your interest in a subject.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) — Join business and pleasure to enhance both. Set your goals higher than usual.

and Susan Area, had their best clearance of the season. Mathieu was clearing 5' for the second time, while Ares got over that height for the first time this year.

While the two-mile was a "disaster," with the judges losing count of laps run and failing to give splits, Debbie Farmer still managed to qualify for this weekend's Eastern's with a 12:04 clocking.

Sealey put in a herculean showing as she ran three heats in the dash (6th place, no points), went right from the finish line of the dash final to the starting line of the quarter (4th, 59.0), then ran a 110 yard leg on the medley relay, and finally anchored the mile relay. Whew!

Other good, but non-placing times were turned in by Tina Francario, Priscilla Wilson and Barb Callanan in the mile (5:16.4, 5:19.7, and 5:20, respectively) and Bukowski and Laurie Wolf in the 880 (2:24.5 and 2:23.7, respectively). All had been sick or injured in the recent past, making their times even more encouraging.

Women race at Harvard

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE — The UMass women's track team unofficially finished in the top five in the New England AAU Indoor Track and Field Championships yesterday at Harvard's new facility and set two school records in the process.

The meet was won by the Liberty AC of Lexington, while the UMass team, since it is not sanctioned by the AAU, could not be counted in the team standings.

The first record to fall was hardly unexpected. Cindi Martin led early in the 880 before being passed by national-class middle distance star Darlene Beckford.

Martin then locked up in a duel with ex-Springfield College runner Sue North, only to be nipped at the tape for second. Her time of 2:15.7 established a school record, breaking the old mark of 2:16 set last year by Julie Lafreniere.

"That was the best performance of the meet for us," said Coach Charlotte Lettis. "Cindi ran very smoothly and aggressively when Beckford made her take the pace out.

"Not only does she have speed, but she has great strength — she maintains her form really well."

The versatile junior also ran a 59.9 leg on the third place winning mile relay, teaming with Bonnie Bukowski, Karolyn Shea and Diana Sealey. The relay quartet ran its fastest time of the indoor season, 4:06.7.

The other record breaking performance was turned in by Julie Horgan in the long jump. Horgan jumped 16' 7 1-2" to finish fourth in the competition. The old record was 16' 4", by Chris Whalen.

Horgan also reaches the semi-finals in the 60 yard hurdles before bowing out of that event. Nancy Cominoli, however, made it to the finals and finished second in 8.4 seconds.

"She's (Cominoli) been sick, but she's still our best competitor," said Lettis. "Every time she steps out on the track, I know she's going to do the best she can."

Lady Friars end rimwomen's year

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

PORTLAND, Me. — Theoretically, this was the way it should have turned out.

After all, Providence was seeded fouuth, while UMass was a notch lower at fifth. The Lady Friars were 18-4 and the Minutewomen were 14-7.

But that doesn't help minimize the frustration UMass must have felt as it bowed to Providence, 67-61, in the finals Saturday of the Eastern Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women basketball satellite tournament here at Hill Gymnasium on the campus of the University of Maine (Portland-Gorham).

With the defeat, the Minutewomen were knocked out of the running for the Eastern finals to be held next weekend on the campus of Queens College. The Lady Friars will play host to Queens, ranked sixth in the country, Friday night in the first round of the tourney.

UMass was primed for its rematch with Providence after having wiped out Northeastern, 74-51, in its first round game Friday night. The Lady Friars had trouble getting going but finally defeated Maine, 58-44, in their opening contest.

The Minutewomen had lost, 56-55, to Providence early in February, and were itching for revenge. But in the end, the Lady Friars showed a great deal of poise and staved off a UMass comeback to win the tourney.

"The team was very, very good all year in the big games," a happy Providence coach Tim Gilbride said. "We worked in practice on calming down at the end of games. We may have been a little careless at times, but all year we just settled down and came through."

Indeed, the Lady Friars had to come through in the clutch to turn back the MInutewomen, who appeared to have gained momentum entering the final few minutes of the contest.

UMass fell behind, 42-32, at halftime, as Lynn Sheedy controlled Providence's offense to the tune of 18 points. Her perimeter pops and drives were on target as the Minutewomen had their hands full with the 5-8 sophomore guard.

Mary Ellen Buchanen was also hot with 10 points. Her four baskets were all short baseline jumpers over the UMass centers.

But after Buchanen opened the second half with another hoop, the Minutewomen took over as they outscored Providence, 14-0, over a three and a half minute stretch to take a 46-44 lead.

Leading the onslaught was Sue Peters, who twice stole the ball from Paulette Hassett and broke in for uncontested layups. Jen Parker, who played steadily all weekend, also threw in two long-range hoops.

After Providence went ahead, 48-46, with 13:54 left on a Sheedy bomb, the Minutewomen went to work again and ran off nine straight points to take a 55-49 edge with nine minutes left. Peters again was instrumental in the surge as she put in two hoops and dished off a nice pass to Cheryl Carey for another two points.

But that was the last time UMass was to lead. The Lady Friars put together a 10 point string (four by Sheedy) and went up 59-55 with 6:34 to go.

Lu-Ann Fletcher, who played her best ball of the season after returning from knee surgery, scored off an offensive rebound and threw in one of her patented jumpers to knot the score at 59-59 with four minutes left.

After Hassett popped in an outside set shot, Fletcher was involved in perhaps the most frustrating moment of the game and possibly the entire season. She launched one of her patented foul line jumpers with three minutes left. The ball rimmed around and around the basket for what seemed an eternity, but finally spun out.

What had seemed a sure two points turned into a Providence rebound, and the omnipresent Sheedy scored again to give the Lady Friars a four point lead.

"That shot broke our backs right there," UMass coach Mary Ann Ozdarski said. "We could have had a tie but instead they went ahead by four."

Actually, UMass had another chance to win it. After two Cathy Harrington narrowed the gap to 63-61 on two foul shots, Hassett made the first of two free throws but after she missed the second, Mary Ann McCoy helped snuff out UMass' hopes further as she grabbed the rebound.

"Mary Ann's our best rebounder," Gilbride noted. "She controls the boards for us."

It was a game of frustration, highlighted by Fletcher's around and out shot. Another irksome situation was the fact that Buchanen and McCoy each had four fouls with 17 minutes to play, but the Minutewomen could not take advantage of it.

"We tried to work the ball inside," Ozdarski admitted, "but we couldn't get the fouls.

"This was definitely a game of momentum. My kids were up, they wanted it. They put forth an all-out effort, but PC dug in.

"UMass can hold their heads up high. A few breaks in crucial points, and a few crucial fouls could have made the difference."

The game Friday night against Northeastern was one of UMass' best of the season.

"It was probably our smartest game of the year," Ozdarski said.

After grabbing a 33-27 midway lead, the Minutewomen toyed with the Huskies in the second half. They outscored Northeastern, 22-8, in the first 10 minutes to take a 55-35 bulge and essentially wrap things up.

Aquamen finish ninth; Maine takes NE title

By BILL TARTER
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD — The winner and new men's New England swimming champion by unanimous decision — the University of Maine.

By the conclusion of the three day New England Championships there was no doubt who reigned supreme. The men from Orono had overwhelmed their competition to take this year's team title away from defending champion Springfield.

Maine seems an unlikely place to possess great swimmers, but it does. A tremendous countrywide recruiting effort has reaped instant rewards, to the dismay of surrounding New England schools.

It became quickly apparent by the second day, while Maine was winning nearly everything in sight, the battle was for second place. Williams eventually outpointed Springfield for the honors with Southern Connecticut also close behind.

UMass finished 9th in the team point totals with 192. This may not compare with over 600 points for Maine, but it represented the highest count UMass has achieved in many seasons. Going into the final day of events the Minutemen sat in fifth place.

But a mediocre third day allowed Tufts, URI and UConn to sneak on the final event of the competition.

The mermen did about all coach Bei Melamed could have expected, though, as the team accumulated a fantastic 10 school records.

Leading the assault on the record book were seniors Russ Yarworth with 4, and Tom Stevens who climaxed his swimming career with three.

Stevens' performances came as the biggest surprise according to Melamed. He broke school marks in the 50, 100 and also the 200 yard freestyle events.

Yarworth performed admirably, gaining a 4th place in the 400 yard individual medley, a 3rd in the 200 butterfly and an ever so close 2nd in the 200 I.M. Despite all this, Yarworth was not pleased.

"The only time I was satisfied was my race in the 800 yard freestyle relay," he said. His combined effort in that race, along with Jim Leland, Tom Nowak, and Stevens was worth a 7th place finish and another new record.

Leland also took part in three record breaking events. He now holds the best time for the 100 and 200 yard backstroke besides taking part in the 800 yard relay.

Leland's 100 yard backstroke was achieved during the first portion of the 400 yard medley relay. He set the trend as Harry Fulford, Nowak and Stevens finished off what became another (yawn!) record.

These 10 new marks were the final chapter in what has been the most impressive season for the UMass swimming team ever. A large portion of the credit must go to coach Bei Melamed who has been the guiding inspiration for the team all year long.

Gymwomen end season with sparkling road win

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

BALTIMORE — After a nerve wracking, 12 hour drive in treacherous blizzard conditions, the women's gymnastics team arrived in Baltimore for its last competition of the season against Towson State College.

"It got to the point when we were wondering what we were doing risking our lives, but the storm was only getting worse behind us, so we had to go on," said Coach Virginia Evans. Despite arriving at 11 p.m. instead of the scheduled 7 p.m., the gymwomen went on to win their ninth victory of the year, with their highest point total of the season.

En route to the 142.10 to 135.75 win, senior Susan Cantwell won the all-around competition with her highest life time four event total of 36.75. Cantwell, in her last regular season competition as a Minutewoman, finished in a tie for first place with teammate Karen Hemberger. Hemberger and Cantwell earned scores of 9.35 for their vaults. That is the highest mark Cantwell has received for her "half on full off" vault this season.

Cantwell also scored her highest uneven parallel bars score of the season with a 9.20. She finished second to teammate Stephanie Jones who earned a 9.35. Cantwell finished first on the balance beam and on the floor exercise with scores of 9.05 and 9.15, respectively, as she cumulated her 36.75 total.

Cantwell continues to excel in her final year of competition for the gymwomen. She has been a solid contributor to the women's team for four years, but appears to be finishing her senior year more strongly than the previous three.

Cantwell was not the only competitor for the gymwomen, however. There were many other strong performances. In vaulting, Jones finished third with a 9.05. Karen Clemente contributed an 8.80 to give the Minutewomen an event total of 36.55, their highest vaulting total of the season.

On bars, Debbie Law and Hemberger contributed to the event score along with Jones and Cantwell. Law finished with an 8.50, her strongest performance this season. Hemberger had some form breaks and received an 8.45. The Minutewomen totaled 35.50 for the bars and led half way through the competition 72.05 to 68.60.

"The beam was not brilliant but it wasn't a total disaster either," said Evans.

Jones finished in a tie with a Towson gymnast to finish second behind Cantwell. Jones earned an 8.55 while teammates Cheryl Morrier and Hemberger finished in a three way tie for fourth with 8.40 scores.

"We had five performers finish with higher than an 8.35 score, which is a definite improvement but we still need some nines," said Evans.

Hemberger recouped to take second place on the floor with a 9.00 score. She began working with a new routine three meets ago against Canisius and seems to be much more comfortable with her new routine, as evidenced by improved floor scores in the last three meet. Jones, Morrier and Clemente finished in a four way tie with Towson's Natalie Brandt for third place on the floor. All received marks of 8.75 from the judges.

Jones finished second in the all around with a 35.70 total. She has been working two events in recent meets due to hip and rib injuries. These injuries are still holding her back on the floor and on the beam according to Evans.

"Her tumbling and rhythm on beam are still a little weak but she performed very solidly against Towson," said Evans.

Hemberger finished third with a 35.20 four event total. Hemberger has been one of the most consistent competitors for the gymwomen this season. She continually totals 35 points in four events and has been a central figure in the Minutewomen's success this season. Evans is hoping that Hemberger will pull all of her routines together and hit a 36 point total at the Easterns next weekend.

Morrier, the fourth UMass all around competitor finished with a 33.05 total which was her best performance of the season. The Towson meet was the first competition for Morrier in several weeks as she had been stricken with a serious case of the flu.

"The team really helped each other during the meet and I think this meet was a really good warmup for Easterns," said Evans. "It was the best run meet of the season and that created a really positive atmosphere to work in."

The next competition will be the all important EAIAW's next weekend in Pittsburgh. The winner will automatically qualify for the national AIAW to be held in Seattle in early April. UMass enters the competition ranked fourth but after the results of the meet against Towson hope to finish higher.

BLACK MUSIC FESTIVAL IS COMING TO AMHERST
AS 78

Black American Music Festival A Conflict of Interest?

By THE BLACK AMERICAN MUSIC FESTIVAL COMMITTEE

Special to Black Affairs Nummo News

In view of the heated controversy concerning the Black American Music Festival, the stiff compromise motion made here last week which was subsequently vetoed, we are faced with a conflict of interest; economic, political and ideological although not necessarily in that order.

The first thing that comes to mind is the obvious contradiction in the Senate's past and present behavior. Did it not seriously consider and unanimously support the proposal each and every time it was presented? Have not the supposed major objections to sponsor an educational program documenting Black music as a paid benefit, the proceeds of which would go towards the establishment of the Duke Ellington Foundation, been accepted facts since the initial proposition in November of 1976? The Black American Music Festival was never intended to be the "traditional spring concert" which is totally different in form, content and significance.

The opposition has placed such tremendous emphasis on tradition. From every corner we hear "This has never been done before." Are we to assume that nothing changes? Being reluctant to think and act progressively no one can conceive of an alternative to what has been tradition. Senators have been more responsive to a backlash reaction which could have and should have been avoided had any attempt been made to present the Black American Music Festival to the campus population in a positive light.

The Festival does not seek to alienate white students nor to become a spring concert in blackface. The Festival is a new concept for which the University is ready if only its student politicians were not in fact giving credence to reactionary, backwards behavior.

There is no rational reason why a concert of Black talent cannot be both educationally and commercially successful. Of course this requires a little more vision and commitment on the part of Student leaders who must recognize that changes in consciousness shape thoughts that direct actions and ultimately alter history. We can safely assume that even UMass is subject to this universal dynamic.

With the festival comes an opportunity to illuminate Black American culture which the final analysis is the essence of Black people, in a universally popular arena that attracts all racial and ethnic groups. However, this legislature chooses to hide behind tradition, ignoring the possibilities for change, for growth. There is no excuse for maintaining ignorance.

What is required to change that reality is certainly within the capabilities of everyone present.

The first requirement is a co-operative effort towards producing and promoting the Black American Music Festival, the second is an understanding that the festival is an investment made by the entire UMass community towards a shared goal.

Now questions arise as to what is the nature of this investment both financially and sociologically?

The financial investment is simple enough. The Student Senate allocates X amount of dollars towards producing the event to incur expenses for talent, publicity, security, etc. The student body purchases tickets at nominal cost, the general public pays a higher admission fee and a percentage of the proceeds are donated towards the establishment of the Duke Ellington Foundation. Suddenly there is an uproar concerning agreements which have been clearly articulated for the past eighteen months.

Nevertheless, the questions arise: Why do students have to pay money?

Because, benefit concerts are designed to raise money, and the BAMF is a benefit program.

Pakistanis Admit Enslaving AfricanGirl In Florida

MIAMI (AP) — A former college teacher has admitted he and his wife bought a 10-year-old African girl from her mother and used the child for at least two years as a house slave. She was given one dress to wear, a tin plate for her rice and a broken glass to drink from.

"This is the first classic case of slavery in this century the FBI knows of," FBI agent Joseph Ball said Friday. "A little girl was bought in Africa and brought back here to be a slave. That's what used to happen before the Civil War."

Syed Riaz Hussain Shah, a horticulturist who formerly taught at Miami-Dade Community College, pleaded guilty in federal court Thursday to a charge of holding a person in involuntary servitude.

His wife, Dr. Shah, an anesthesiologist at Okeechobee Hospital, had faced the same charge. But it was dropped when she pleaded guilty to a lesser charge of lying to immigration officers.

Neither of the Shahs has commented on the case.

The girl, Rose Iftony, was 10 years old in 1974 when she was brought to the United States from Sierra Leone, where the Shahs paid her mother $200 and promised to educate her. In return, they said the girl would babysit for the Shahs' son, who was then 4 years old, said civil rights attorney John Conroy of the Justic Department.

"The payment of money indicates that really wasn't what the Shahs had in mind at all," Conroy said. "They only wanted her to work for them."

The grand jury charged in the indictment that the Shahs used Rose as a house slave in what the FBI described as a "lavishly furnished" apartment in Okeechobee.

"They would not let her wash dishes in the dishwasher, but made her do them by hand," FBI agent Lathell Thomas testified. "They would not let her use a clothes-washing machine."

Thomas said neighbors reported that the couple kept the girl constantly scrubbing floors by hand.

The Shahs finally sent little Rose to school in December 1975, after managing to get her expired visa changed to a student's visa by claiming to be her aunt and uncle, Conroy said.

The story of the child-slave began to come to light as teachers at Dunbar Elementary School noticed Rose's emaciated condition and reported it to authorities.

Youth authorities continued to investigate and the girl was eventually taken away from the Shahs' household. Evidence surfaced that the girl was a house slave, and the couple was indicted in October 1976.

Shah faces up to five years in prison and a $5,000 fine, and his wife up to six months in prison and $500 fine.

Both are registered aliens from Pakistan, and immigration officials say no decision has been made on whether to deport them. U.S. District Court Judge William Hoeveler has ordered a pre-sentence investigation.

The child has been placed in a foster home and wwll be allowed to remain in the United States until she completes her education. Then she must return to her mother and 11 brothers and sisters in Africa.

Firing Squad Kills Ten For Slaying Of Ngouabi

BRAZZAVILLE, Congo — The former French Congo has announced the execution by firing squad of 10 persons convicted of taking part in the assassination of the late President Marien Ngouabi nearly one year ago.

The executions were carried out at dawn Feb. 7, only hours after a special military court convicted them and one other person, a former interior minister sentenced to death in absentia, of complicity in the machine gun slaying of Ngouabi, 39, on March 18, 1977, at his army headquarters.

President Joachim Yhombi Opango went on television preceding the executions to announce, there would be "no clemency" shown to the plotters.

Opango also announced the banning of all but certain specified religious groups, a ban apparently aimed at the sect of "Priors" to which most of the convicted assassins belonged.

Specifically exempted from the ban were Islam, Roman Catholicism, the Evangelical Protestant Church, the Salvation Army and two minor sects.

The 10 deaths brought to at least 15 the number of persons who have been executed by the marxist government of the Congo for taking part in Ngouabi's assassination, including former President Alphonse Massemba-Debat.

Massemba-Debat, 55, was executed a week after Ngouabi's assassination. The following day, four of Ngouabi's bodyguards were shot. They had been convicted of complicity in his slaying.

Massemba-Debat, whom Ngouabi had overthrown in 1968 and who had since been living under house arrest, allegedly confessed before execution that he had planned Ngouabi's assassination in hopes of regaining power.

In addition to the death sentences, the court sentenced three persons to life imprisonment at hard labor, three to 20 years and eight to suspended sentences of five years each.

Students, Police Clash In Tanzania

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania (UPI) — Police clubbed, teargased and arrested more than 350 university students Sunday at a march protesting new salary increases for government officials.

Police attacked the University of Dar es Salaam students twice during their 12-mile march from campus to the offices of the government-controlled Daily News. No serious injuries were reported.

The students regrouped and continued the march after each incident. Police finally arrested them outside the Daily News.

The students were told they had been expelled from school, driven back to campus to collect their belongings and issued one-way travel vouchers to their home villages.

The protesting students had carried placards charging the pay increases just, granted members of parliament, government ministers and officials of the ruling party "came from the sweat of peasants and workers."

A government statement issued after the arrests said President Julius Nyerere had invited the students to present their grievances to him but they "opted to go ahead with their unlawful demonstration."

Then, to benefit whom? Why the Duke Ellington Foundation?

The answers to these questions enter the realm of sociological investment or more simply will this project have an impact on society including the immediate community of UMass. At this point it seems appropriate to review the Foundations proposal and even to familiarize ourselves with who was Duke Ellington, and why do we choose to pay such great tribute to this individual. Perhaps this information will give more meaning to the decision made here in support of such and endeavor as the Duke Ellington Foundation.

For the particulars of Duke Ellington's phenomenal music career, this should have been homework for everyone who expects to make an informed decision on this issue. As for his music it is played somewhere in the world on an average of every twelve minutes and shouldn't be too difficult to find.

Edward Kennedy Ellington was one of the greatest artists of the twentieth or any century, he was a Black American and his musical heritage Black American Music is one of the only art forms indiginous to the United States.

This should be an area of interest to any intelligent citizen of this nation certainly it should be part of the curriculum of anyone studying at the University level. Racism lives as viciously in apathy as it dies in oppression, nothing is going to make us aware if we do not choose to learn, nothing is going to move unless we take the first step.

PURPOSE

It is fitting that the home of Mr. Ellington, perhaps the greatest international ambassador of Black music, serve to permanently commemorate the massive achievements of Black music in America. To that end, we propose to establish:

—an historical museum devoted to the procurement, care, study and display of objects and events which reflect the development of Black American music.

—a musical archives to house and preserve popular and rare recordings and written music.

—an educational division which will utilize experts in the musical and ancillary professions as staff, consultants, and volunteers, to provide instruction to youth through music This division of the Foundation will have an outreach component, which will develop formal ties with public, private and community-based schools and other educational centers.

—a scholarship fund for aspiring musicians.

—a funding sources for agencies and individuals performing research in areas related to the aims and interests of The Foundation.

South Africa Aid From Chile

Thousands of mercenary forces from fascist Chile's armed forces have joined the armed forces of apartheid South Africa in its war of aggression against Namibia.

The South-West African People's Organization (SWAPO), the liberation movement leading the Namibian people's struggle for independence, charged in a telegram last week to UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim that the Chilean mercenaries are engaged in active combat operations inside Namibia.

The telegram urged progressive forces in the international community to oppose fascist Chile's collaboration with apartheid and to take steps to halt its growing ties with the Vorster regime.

"The Chilean mercenaries are bringing death and destruction to Namibia, annihilating every living thing in their way," charged the telegram.

Former director of Santiago's National Health Service under the Allende government, Roberto Belmar, also charged last fall that there were 4000 Chilean mercenaries operating in Namibia

Is It Black Or White?

Head Poses Burial Problem For South Arican Officials

A partly decomposed head found in a shark's belly has the South African police mystified because they can't determine whether to bury the head in a Black or white cemetery.

Under South African law, people of different races must reside and be buried, in different areas.

The state pathologist said: "Normally it's easy to tell a caucasian from a negroid skull by the occipital lobe at the back of the head. But the back of this skull is partially eaten away."

The shark was cut open after being caught in anti-shark nets on beaches around Durban.

Police said if the race cannot be established, a magistrate will be asked to rule on how and where the head should be buried or otherwise disposed of.

Sweet Honey In The Rock:

Black Women To Sing For Women's Week

By ZOE BEST

Bernice Reagon is founder, composer and arranger for Sweet Honey In the Rock, a group of black women singers. She explains, "The name is derived from an old spiritual that refers to a land so sweet that honey flows from the rocks. Honey, symbolizing warmth and sweetness and rock, symbolizing strength and consistency, which is what we try to convey in our songs." They will perform Saturday, March 11th at part of International Women's Week and thereby give opportunity to hear how their name reflects vocal material and arrangements.

Sweet Honey In The Rock has been together since 1974 and has an album out with Paredon. One cut, a Langston Hughes poem, "Dream Variations" is presented in an imaginative arrangement. Bernice, proud of her music, describes it, "...this is solid black music folks. In a lot of cases, it is music that is 'too black' to be played on the more commercial stations. It is important that you keep in mind that this is not music that has been produced and filled in with flourishes of string and elaborate mixes... All flourishes, texture, etc., is there because of the voice, nothing else."

The singers, Carol Maillard, Pat Johnson, Louise Robinson, Evelyn Harris, Yasmeen Williams and Bernice Reagon expand the musical range of what is usually heard from an a cappella group. They may lead off a concert with an African chant, a freedom song, a slave work song, an emancipation song like "No More Auction Block For Me" and then as a change-up within the tradition of survival lore, sing the "Gray Goose." This is a tale about a goose that is shot down by a preacher. The goose is so invincible that after "six weeks of parboil, the knife wouldn't cut it, threw it in the hog pen and it broke the hog's jawbone."

Reagon acknowledges that the group utilizes "the black vocal techniques taught in the black church." She is familiar with gospel and its antecedants as well as its variations. She is the daughter of a Baptist minister and first sang in his church in Albany, Georgia. She sang Italian arias and German lieder at Albany State College before joining SNCC's (Student Non-Violent Co-ordinating Committee) Freedom Singers. For this she was expelled from school and arrested for demonstrating. "That experience took me back to the music that I grew up with in the church — music that was much more a part of me, my work and my struggle. Music became redefined for me as a political tool."

At this time they also include in their repertoire songs about current issues. If need be, they write the songs. "We sing about this administration, about abortion, Fanie Lou Hamer, Joanne Little and we address all oppressed people of the world."

Bernice Reagon has another source from which to draw. As cultural historian for the Smithsonian Institute Division of Performing Arts, the Africa Diaspora Program, she researches black American culture. She seeks song material from Africa, the Caribbean, Latin America besides from this country. She strives to keep the music sung by the group authentic and rooted in the traditions of black peoples.

Reagon received a Ph.D. in oral history from Howard University and lives in Washington D.C. with her children. She teaches, sings, composes, arranges and performs besides working full time as a researchist. Therefore each concert is based on a tremendous amount of study from black cultural history.

Sweet Honey In The Rock will culminate International Women's Week with a concert on Saturday, March 11 at 8:00 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center. Tickets are $2.00. Reagon notes that "We are still seeking our audiences, still finding out exactly where our music can be received and appreciated." Let's welcome these women and their music and by doing so, we will be enriched.

Women Under Apartheid

Program On Friday

International Women's Week has dedicated the Friday, March 10th evening program to "Women Under Apartheid". Nana Sheshebe from South Africa will present her analysis of how women have historically resisted racist repression under apartheid. She will convey to her audience the most recent developments in her people's efforts to counter the Vorster regime.

Zoe Best will read poetry by and about women in South Africa as well as from her own works, which includes a poem written in 1975 dedicated to Joanne Little. Little is currently appealing New York Governor Carey's extradition orders, which if carried out, could turn her over to what she claims will be certain death at the hands of racis interests in North Carolina.

Women from the Diana Ramos Dance Workshop will perform. The program will conclude with a musical presentation from vocalist Vea Williams and her group, Welcome. This event is free. Everyone is urged to attend this program at 8:00 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium, Friday, March 10th.

International Womens Week

By JAMES LEWIS

International Women's Week will offer an educational opportunity for persons to learn about the oppression of women and what to do about it. Workshops will be performed all during this upcoming week. It is important for persons to utilize this opportunity to hear speakers discuss the problem of women.

The Third World community is invited to appreciate the pertinent events to be held during the week. Wilma Rudolf, Olympic gold medalist runner will speak at the S.U.B. Monday, March 6, at 1:00 p.m. Alice Moore will speak on "IMPERIALIST POLICY OF POPULATION CONTROL HERE AND ABROAD," CC 803, 2 p.m. Harriet Parker and Barbara Love will speak on "Racism and the Women's Movement, CC. rm. 911-915, at 2:00 p.m. (Wilma Rudolph will hold seminar-press conference, at CC. rm. 917, at 3:30 p.m.)

Che-Lumumba School workshop, at South side, S.W., 10:00 a.m. Assata Shakur's Cell, (Martha Pitts) CC 101, 12:00 p.m. Question of Class as it Pertains to Black Women (Glorea Joseph and Rushing) Hamden Theatre, 1:00 p.m. Lolita Lebron (Madeline Gonzales) CC 903, 2:00 p.m. The Black Women (by Barbara Love), Malcolm X Center, S.W. 2:00 p.m. (Third World persons only).

Anais Nis at 12:00 noon, Wednesday, at Cape Cod lounge. Thursday, March 9 will be "Rape and Racism" (Hampshire County Rape Prevention), CC, rm. 903, 3:00 p.m. Lucia Bruno will speak on "Women in Puerto Rico," at the CC, rm. 803, 10:00 a.m. Friday.

And last but certainly not least, Nana Sheshebe will lecture on "Women Under Apartheid," Friday, March 10, CCA at 8:00 p.m.

Sweet Honey in the Rock, will celebrate in music the close of International Women's Week in the Fine Arts Center Auditorium. Sweet Honey is a beautiful Black female group whose music expresses social concerns of Black struggle, oppression, love, gospel, Freedom, and politics. They are a group to be appreciated and respected and are ripe to end the week of events.

Sweet is the International Womens Week, and its importance has not yet been realized in scale to the worlds problems. This is a very historic event, and should be supported by as many persons as possible. It promises to be ahuge educational journey not to be forgotten. It would be a narrow-minded pity for anyone to miss it totally. Everyone should make it a point to find something during the meeting to learn about.

Upward Bound Community Day

On Saturday, March 4, 1978, a community day presentation was spearheaded by the Upward Bound Program in order to bring the old and the new students together and to acquaint the audience exactly as to how the program continues to fulfill the necessary health services; comprehensive counseling services and such group activities as the Project Director recommends.

There were awards and presentations such as Carlos Gonzalez, Betty Daniels and Tijuana Winston, all recipients of their respectful awards for their outstanding academic achievements during their stay at the Upward Bound Program. (Congratulations gang)

What is Upward Bound?

Upward Bound is a precollege program designed to enhance the skills and motivation necessary for a successful academic program while attending secondary and pre-secondary schools. The criteria which pulsates within the core of the program is also designed to generate creative thinking, effective expression and positive attitudes which are so essential for the maintenance of an effective and successful post-secondary education.

The birth of this program commenced on a national basis in June 1966. One of Upward Bound's fikt and foremost staunch supporters was the Office of Economic Opportunities of which, the first year had a support from 215 colleges, universities and residential secondary schools. These academic institutions of higher learning reached a circumference of 47 states, of which also included the Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico and Guam. This legendary and historic occurrence was outstandingly involved in a total enrollment of more than 26,000 students.

As the articulate orator such as Wayne Wilson (ex-Director, Upward Bound Program) mounted the podium with such firm and exhilarating words, the presentation was highlighted with challenging statements such as "Upward Bound's mission will be carried out, if you maintain your thrust of vitality and community spirit. Why? Because it entails helping young people to realize their optimum strengths in academia in order that you can better provide for your families ... " Mr. Wilson also expounded pertaining to the summer of 1977, "students demonstrated ever so clearly academic, recreational and cultural enthusiasm. During my tenure with Upward Bound, I had never witnessed this degree of student involvement in striving for academic excellence."

Master of ceremony, Rhonda Gordon, who is presently, Assistant Director of the Upward Bound's program, also elaborated on the importance of classroom excellence as an important emphasis on educational goals.

The second half of the community day gathering was held at Yvonne's the famous people's restaurant on Campus, located at the New Africa House. Then afterwards, the students along with the staff proceded to the well-developed play, entitled illusions.

With the students departing for home, the resonant motto of the Upward Bound program echoed its way home with the potent and vibrant words, "WE ARE STRONGER WHEN WE ALL STAND TOGETHER."

Northeast-Sylvan Third World Recruitment

The weekend of March 9, 10, and 11, 1978, the Northeast-Sylvan Area will host a Third World recruitment weekend. During this time students from Boston will be brought to Amherst. In the past Northeast-Sylvan has had a reputation of being nonreceptive to Third World students. Currently, Third World students choose to live in other areas because of more programming academically and socially available to them as a minority group.

Given this situation, the staff of this area has proposed to include programs which will attract minority students to the area. The erection of programming in itself is not enough. This weekend as set out was preceived as the means whereby students would not only be exposed to university life in general, but to the Northeast-Sylvan Area in particular.

In order to make this weekend a success, we need the support and cooperation of many University agencies, and the support of Third World students. The schedule of weekend events is as follows: On Thursday, March 9; arrival, registration, and room assignments. Friday, March 10; a campus tour of classes and various departments, workshops with CCEBS, BCP, Financial Aid, and Admissions. A presentation by Eno is planned for the early evening and ending the day with a party in the Anacaona Cultural Center-Dwight Hs. Saturday, March 11, a tour of the Northeast-Sylvan residential area, closing with lunch by Yvonne and the students will be returning to Boston at 3:00 p.m. on Saturday.

Campus Speaks

Campus Speaks is a new weekly section of Nummo that allows students to voice their opinions on various issues. Participants are randomly chosen each week. This week's question was Do you feel that the controversy surrounding the black musical festival was racially motivated?

JAY STEWART: Of course, if it is a black musical festival the fact that it is a black musical festival makes it a racial issue. If they told me that they were going to have a white musical festival I would want to arbitrarily have my money go to a white musical festival.

LISA MELILLI: No, I think the whole thing was that people felt that it was taking away from the idea of a spring concert and it would draw people from all over and not just UMass.

EARL BROWN: The elements of racism are already there especially when you look at the title "Black" American Musical Festival the first word will turn away many people off. The promotors should have realized this plus the fact that this is the first time this has been attempted here at UMass and should have made an effort to go out into the community and explain what the program was all about.

SHU: I don't know. Yes, to a certain extent I do but I also feel that the concept of having two concerts is a good idea because the more diverse musical talent that can be brought to his campus the better.

SOOKIE CHOO: Definitely. Even though people talk about not wanting to pay what they really don't want is the black musical festival.

PHYLLIS PRUITT: Yes, I think it was a racial issue because it was a black festival. There was so much emphasis on black and the majority of the students here are white and when whites hear it is a "Black" concert they don't want to know about it.

Support N.B.S.A. Petition Campaign

N.B.S.A. Conducts Petition Campaign for Freedom in South Afrika... asks for community support.

By CHAKA ZULU

The Five-College area chapter of the National Black Students Association is currently conducting a petition campaign centered around demonstrating support from Black, other Third World, and all other supporters for National Liberation (economic and political freedom) of oppressed Black South Afrikan people.

The campaign started on Friday Feb. 24, 1978 as we completed our first 5-college general meeting, which took place in the Black cultural center at Amherst College. There were approximately 25 people present.

The campaign is part of a growing movement for the support of Black South Afrikan Freedom Movement From White Minority Rule, by Black people here in the United States. The petition also demonstrates the connection between Black people in South Afrika and Black people in Amerikkka.

The demands of the petition are that:

(1) The United States sever all diplomatic and economic ties with the illegal settler regime of the Union of South Afrika.

(2) That the United States withdraw all forms of support and aid from the South Afrikan Government.

(3) That United States corporations withdraw totally from South Afrika.

(4) That the United States Government launch a counter offensive against racist repression and economic oppression of people of color here in the United States.

(5) The United States support the United Nations proposed economic sanctions against South Afrika.

The National Black Students Association is also sponsoring National demonstration outside of the White House in Washington D.C. in support of South Afrika on April 1. We are encouraging as many people as possible to go. Presently we are attempting to secure transportation to take people to and from the University to the demonstration and back to the University. Be looking forward to more information.

So, we are asking everyone for as much support as possible. "Give your name in the name of freedom. Support the National Black Students Association Petition campaign."

A Call For United People

This is a call for the formation of a new organization called United People!

It is time that concerned, serious elements of this campus get together to begin to make this University and this country what it could be. One of the things United People will be concerned with will be ensuring all people's basic rights regardless if they disagree with their oppressor. This group will not be restricted to so-called vanguard-types or people who think that social change is made by advocating how bad they are. This group will be a direct action group composed of students, concerned community leaders, and friends of all oppressed. The group will not be dogmatic in its views. We should not make some of the same mistakes other progressive groups have made in the past.

It is incumbent that all interested people come to a mass meeting at Butterfield House, Tuesday, March 7, 7:30. It is important that people come to the meeting with a serious frame of mind for proper dialogue. We will take care of plenty of business at this meeting. We have a lot to do on this campus. We would like all people to come out; again we are not prejudiced against people's beliefs, race, religion, sex, or lifestyle.

We are Waiting For This Needed Union With All People
Nkrumah Lumumba Olinga, a concerned individual!

Important Notice: The organizational meeting of Nummo News will be held 7:00 P.M. Wednesday, in the Nummo News Office - room 103 New Africa House. Everyone is invited.

Why We Need The Whole Truth

This article is written with the intent of clearing up a major contradiction on this campus. Last intersession Paul Puryear was released from his position of Provost of the University of Mass, Amherst, because he attempted to implement Affirmitive Action. Puryear was fired in that attempt. The then Provost asked for the resignation of some of the Deans of the Colleges because of their refusal to implement Affirmative Action at the University.

Chancellor Bromery was the one who had to stop Puryear in his efforts to get the University to follow Affirmative Action Guidelines. The truth came out about this because a couple of weeks later the University of Mass was cited by the Federal Government for being extremely negligent in following Affirmative Action Guidelines. Some of the deans had the audacity to ask for Puryear's termination, and they get it with the support of Chancellar Bromery.

Bromery told Puryear that he did not like letting him go, but he was being forced to do it. The truth is that Chancellar Bromery was seeking to become the President of the University of Mass and by cutting Puryear's throat he would have proven that he was a good house Nigger which he was. Unfortunately, Bromery will not get the position for which he totally sold out concerned people on this campus. The worse thing that Bromery did was to cut Puryear. He has lost the support of progressive elements on this campus and has sold out students concerned for equal rights down the drain, for what?

Dissatisfied Senator On The B.A.M.F.

As a member of the Student Senate representing the Third World Caucus I am dissatisfied with the decision which the senate has agreed upon for the Black American Music Festival. The senate has not placed enough consideration of the goals of the festival which was stated to the senate over and over.

The motion passed for the festival is that it will be free of admission to UMass students and charge a fee to non-UMass students. If the senate agrees on donating the concession money to the establishment of the Duke Ellington Foundation then they are not in full agreement of the establishment of the foundation because the Black American Music Festival Committee has to first re-allocate the money that was outlayed for the festival and then whatever comes after re-allocating the money would be funded to the establishment of the foundation. But if the senate was more open-minded and realized that all the students are attending the festival free of charge then how many outside available seats or tickets would be for sale and is it enough to make considerate concession which could then be proceeded to the Duke Ellington Foundation.

I believe the senate has neglected the conception in the mind of the Black American Music Festival Committee that it is a fund raising festival furthermore to the other reasons stated and to collect funds an admission fee to all has to be established. The festival can be successful as for talent and the benefit which students can gain from attending such a festival but I strongly believe the Student Senate has totally shut their eyes to the establishment of the foundation. I also believe the senate has proven to have any concern to the position of the Third World. The senate has not been a senate of its word if it is said that it has fully supported the Black American Music Festival.

The Third World student body should be aware of the continual racial acts which affect us in our struggle to gain equal recognition here on this campus and America as whole.

Robert Williams Speaks At Howard U.

By FELECIA HARDY
Hilltop Staffwriter

"We Black Americans need to go to China, so that we can learn to take care of our own. We can learn more about ourselves by looking at the Chinese," said Robert F. Williams recently in Cramton Auditorium.

Robert Williams is a Civil Rights activist from North Carolina. During the early 1960s, he was accused of kidnapping charges by the FBI. He went into exile, spending some years in Cuba and China. After returning to the United States, the charges against him were dropped. He has recently visited the People's Republic of China and is now on a speaking tour for the US-China Peoples Friendship Association.

"China is the only country who has taken interest in Blacks' problems," continued Williams. "There are poor white people, but Black people are on the bottom ladder."

"Chinese people have been oppressed dehumanized people and victims of drug pushers. Therefore, it is important that our people go to China and see that there is hope," he added.

williams said that the Bakke Case is a movement to take away the things that have been given to Blacks. "The Bakke movement is a signal. If Bakke had the qualities of a doctor, he would emphasize human rights. He would have brought expansion of the medical facilities so that everyone could have a seat.

"Since whites cannot terrorize our people in white sheets anymore, continued Williams, they pump drugs into the community, turning our brothers and sisters into tigers. This pumps fear into us, and destroys our units."

Williams said that Black people were glad to get rid of the signs for the colored. But, white people removed them because they did not want Black children to know what they had done.

Many young people do not understand that Black people have been killed in this country for just using the restroom, said Williams. The signs were not left up, so most Black people do not know about it.

"That is why I urge Black people to get an understanding of China."

Williams said, China has been the most oppressed, but is respected in the world. Now, the whole world looks to China.

"In a few more years, continued Williams, China will become the top nation, because they have the resources and the love for one another."

"Everybody says come fly with me, but there is no where to fly. That is why your young black people need to go to China."

NAACP— Big Business

By JASON JETT

In what has been called a "sham" by some of its members and staff, the leadership of the financially troubled National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has aligned itself with the oil industry in denouncing government controls on energy prices, consumption and production.

According to the NAACP, allowing the oil industry to operate on a free-market basis with no government intervention will spur the expansion of the economy and increase Black employment.

However, rather than aiding Black people, the NAACP proposals are contradicting, proving detrimental to Blacks and beneficiary only to oil companies.

It is boldly endorsing the exploitation of Black people in the name of what it regards as progress.

Specifically, the energy report issued by the NAACP calls for higher energy prices, deregulation of natural gas, further development of nuclear energy and the channelling of tax revenues into the oil industry for expansion.

NAACP chairperson, Margaret Bush Wilson recently said, "...We'd like to see the government provide incentives needed to rapidly expand production of existing energy supplies and develop alternative sources...there is a strong correlation between energy growth and economic growth."

Wilson cites that, the Black unemployment at over 14 per cnet, President Carter's 2 per cent a year growth limit on energy consumption is disturbing because it will "freeze" people in present economic condition.

However, the NAACP neglects to mention that higher energy prices would be disastrous to the many unemployed Black Americans. As Bush stated, there is a strong correlation between energy and the overall economy, and higher energy prices will increase costs in all economic areas, including food, rent, medicine and transportation.

Deregulation of natural gas will have a direct effect on fuel cost to heat homes, hospitals, and industries and cause more inflation.

In supporting the vigorous pursuit of nuclear power development, the NAACP virtually negates the health and environmental hazards to Black people. The proposals state energy plan "seems to call for a retreat from nuclear energy on the basis that the environmental and safety costs may be too high. But as long as 14 per cent of our people are unemployed...our first priority must be the attainment of economic parity for Black Americans."

In calling for tax revenues to be poured into the oil industry, the NAACP is calling for the double-exploitation of the people. Already Black people face high fuel prices, the NAACP wants some of the taxes the people pay to go to the oil companies, also.

The NAACP energy report is highly rhetorical in advocating Black economic progress but is not viable to the attainment of that goal. The report is more of a cover for a partnership between the civil rights organization and the oil industry. In fact, the report was written largely by lobbyist for the oil industry.

The NAACP has been plagued with financial problems in recent years, which some reports say, nearly forced the organization into bankruptcy. It appears that, in the oil industry, the NAACP has found a formidable ally against its economic crisis.

News of the energy report was welcomed on Wall Street by the business world. Also, many conservative politicians have allied with NAACP in opposing the President's energy plan.

Ronald Regan said, "I believe Black Americans want what every other kind of American wants...and the best way to have these things is for government to get out of the way while the rest of us make a bigger pie so that everybody can have a bigger slice."

The report, however, was immediately attacked by many Black public officials including members and staffers of the NAACP.

According to news reports in the Village Voice, a New York based paper that ranges from liberal to conservative in its new coverage, the energy report has produced dissension within the NAACP.

The Voice reports that the energy plan was "railroaded' through the association by the leadership after a pro-industry relationship had been rejected at a NAACP energy conference last November in Washington.

In issuing the pro-industry energy report, however, Wilson chose to accept the recommendations of a task force headed by a former oil company assistant president and oil lobbyists without consulting the staff, reports the Voice. Members of the staff have commented that the association's board must be catering to certain interest and that the organization is dominated by opportunistic business people and entrepreneurs.

Among the contributors of the NAACP energy report was Robert Bates, lobbyist for Mobil Oil, Andrew Brimmer, financial consultant for Wallace and Wallace, the largest Black oil company, Hobart Taylor, Attorney for Standard Oil of Ohio, and Westinghouse (a manufacturer of nuclear power plants), and Wilson, a board member of Monsanto Chemicals.

The energy report has also been opposed by Black public officials and political organizations.

"The issue is going to be raised as to who the NAACP represents. How on earth could deregulation be in the interest of Black people...Obviously, we are the relatively largest, unemployed and would be most adversely impacted by increased energy costs," said Detroit Representative and Black Caucus member, John Conyers.

Also, the National Urban League is at odds with the NAACP. It has called for extended price controls on all oil and gas and strongly opposed extensive nuclear power development.

While the NUL's energy position contains some of the same elements as the Carter Administration plan, it, like the NAACP proposals, calls for the President to promote economic growth as a means of Black economic advancement.

Economic expansion is the call from both the NAACP and the NUL. Yet, while the Urban League proposals are less suicidal than those of the NAACP, neither will significantly benefit Blacks. Black Americans have not progressed economically, in substantial numbers, throughout the years of economic expansion in America.

Black America entered 1977 with high hopes after having a decisive impact on electing the President. However, Carter has not been able to solve a single issue confrontent Black America — high unemployment, urban decay, inflation, etc. Even with economic expansion, the plight of Black Americans is unlikely to be effected.

Rather than calling for an expansion of the economic system that has historically oppressed Black Americans, it is time to demand a drastic overhaul of it. The problems that are persistently plaguing the U.S. shows that capitalist imperialism is running out of options. As it continues to stagger, the aspirations of Black people will be further crushed.

Therefore, the NAACP decision to join the forces of capitalist imperilist expansion is not in the interest of Black Americans.

Carter orders miners to work

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter invoked the Taft-Hartley Act Monday to force striking coal miners back to work and the administration threatened to punish rank-and-file union leaders if a court order is defied.

Carter announced the bold step following rejection by a 2 to 1 margin Sunday of a proposed settlement with the soft coal industry. The strike of 160,000 United Mine Workers union members began Dec. 6.

"The coal strike is three months old," Carter said. "The country cannot afford to wait any longer."

It could be 10 days or longer before a permanent injunction might be issued ordering the miners back to work. Already, many miners indicated they would ignore the order — as they have several times before when past presidents tried to force them to work without a contract.

Carter said he would ask coal operators to pay the new wage scale agreed to in the rejected contract as an inducement for miners to return. Traditionally, a return to work would be under the old contract wage scale.

The executive committee of the Bituminous Coal Operators Association said it would recommend members agree to reopen their mines, but only under terms of the 1974 contract.

"At the same time," the committee statement said, "BCOA member companies agree that the economic provisions of any new wage agreement will be retroactive to the date of the employees' return to work, provided that such new agreement be reached and ratified during the period of the Taft-Hartley injunction."

"If the law is defied.... then the law provides for appropriate action against those parties," a White House official said. "That action will be taken. Those who choose to defy it, place themselves in jeopardy of being punished."

He added that such action would include officers of union locals "and place in jeopardy not only the national treasury, but local treasuries."

Carter said 1 million more Americans would be unemployed a month from now if the strike continues.

Carter said he had asked Attorney General Griffin Bell and governors of affected states "to make certain that the law is obeyed, that violence is prevented, and that lives and property are fully protected."

Carter called the wage package in the rejected proposal "a generous one" and said he "would personally oppose any more liberal and inflationary wage settlement."

Congressional leaders supported Carter, but initial response from the coalfields was negative.

"We hate to go against the president of the United States, but this is our way of life," said Joe Hoskins, president of a UMW local in Ohio. "They will not go back to work. There is just no way, bud."

Many miners vowed to disobey any effort to force them back to work, with Val Scarton, president of District 2 in Pennsylvania, calling the Taft-Hartley Act a "slave labor law."

A White House official said President Carter does not intend to seek legislation to seize the nation's mines, an option that had been considered seriously before the miners turned down the contract.

As required by law, the president appointed a three-member board of inquiry to review the strike situation, which is expected to report its findings back within 72 hours. Administration officials said they expect to be in federal court seeking a formal restraining order by Thursday.

It may be another week before the court, or possibly several courts, issue the permanent injunction for an 80-day "cooling off" period. That order would also require a resumption of bargaining and give the Energy Department greater power to allocate available coal supplies.

Another official, citing a statement by Carter that an impasse has been reached, said individual coal companies are free now to engage in separate bargaining with union locals and districts.

Pentagon sources said military commanders were reviewing contingency plans for the use of troops in case they were needed to keep the coal mines working, but that use of federal troops would be a last resort.

Town opposes Route 9 mall construction

By DAVE GRAM
Collegian Staff

Local merchants and townspeople asked the Town Room at last night's Selectmen's meeting, as they expressed sharp opposition to proposed construction of a new shopping mall along Route 9 in Hadley.

In a letter to the Board of Selectmen, the Amherst Chamber of Commerce called for the Selectmen to "oppose the construction of the proposed Hampshire Mall on Route 9 at this time and until the economic consequences of this mall are objectively determined."

Pyramid Systems, Inc., of DeWitt, New York, has recently been looking into two possible sites for their proposed mall along Rt. 9 — one behind McDonald's, across South Maple Street from the Mountain Farms Mall, and the other between the Quonset Hut Restaurant and Howard Johnson's.

According to Board Chairman Diana Romer, the selectmen are "clearly unanimous" in their agreement with local merchants that opening a new mall would draw business away from the downtown areas of neighboring communities, including Amherst.

The Pyramid proposals, submitted to the town of Hadley last week, call for a mall with about 70 stores. Several chain stores have expressed an interest in opening outlets in the mall. Among them are Steiger's, a Springfield based department store, K-Mart and J.C. Penny.

Peter Schneider, regional director of the state Planning Office, said last week that Hadley officials "seem to be leaning toward favoring the mall." Hadley Town Planner Joseph Zgrodnik confirmed this, but said town officials are seeking to insure that the town will have some say in the design and planning of the mall.

Hadley residents will be asked this month to vote on the proposed adoption of a state law requiring prospective builders to submit site plans to the Town Planning Board for review. The Pyramid company is said to be opposed to the proposed law.

According to Zgrodnik, the law would not give the town veto power over a proposed building project. "We couldn't prevent them from building, because once they have bought commercially zoned land, they have the right to build on it," he said. "But we would have some control over traffic planning, drainage, and the architecture of the mall."

Mina Lussier, chairman of the Retail Division of the Amherst Chamber of Commerce called on the Selectmen to "publicly support recent actions by the Hampshire County Commissioner's Office to study the economic impact of the proposed mall. It's a regional issue," she said.

Selectman Nathaniel Reed asked if the town of Amherst could do anything to stop the proposed mall construction in Hadley. "I think it would do harm to business in the center of Amherst, (but) I don't know what you can do."

Another member of the Board, William Atkins, recommended that either the town or the Chamber of Commerce commission a marketing study to determine the effect of the mall on other businesses along Rt. 9, as well as in surrounding communities.

Board member Nancy Eddy pointed to the "Golden Mile" along Rt. 9 in Framingham as an example of what she thought might happen in this area.

Hustler's Flynt shot during trial recess

LAWRENCEVILLE, Ga. [UPI] — Larry Flynt, the "born again" publisher of Hustler magazine, and one of his attorneys were shot and critically wounded yesterday on a street corner during a recess in his obscenity trial.

Flynt, 35, and attorney Gene Reeves of Lawrenceville were rushed into surgery after the lunchtime shooting outside a cafeteria and were still in the operating room hours later.

Confusion surrounded the assassination attempt. Some witnesses said it was done by a man who ran up to the Flynt and Reeves, opened fire, and then leaped into a car and fled. Another, however, said she thought the shots were fired from a passing car.

A statement by Gwinnett County police said, "Two shots were fired, one striking Mr. Flynt in the stomach. The second bullet passed through Mr. Reeves' right arm and into his stomach."

Det. Philip Nolan said police were unsure what kind of weapon was used, but were assuming it was a handgun.

An alert was issued for a silver late-model Camero but police said later they only wanted to talk to the occupants about the shooting.

Gwinnett County Police Chief John Crunkleton held a news conference at mid-afternoon but refused to comment on the type of gun used, whether the shots had come from someone on foot, in a car or across the street, or how the suspects fled.

Walt Fielding, assistant administrator at Button Gwinnett Hospital, said "there is no prognosis at present" on the chance for Flynt and Reeves surviving.

Flynt's principal attorney, Herald Fahringer, said "one man ran up to Larry and just fired" after they had come out of the B&J Cafeteria a block south of the courthouse in Lawrenceville, 30 miles north of Atlanta.

Flynt had spent part of the morning testifying in his own defense. The Columbus, Ohio, publisher — who claimed last fall that President Carter's evangelist sister had converted him into a "born again" Christian — is charged with violating state obscenity laws with his Hustler magazine.

A mistrial was immediately declared.

Hospital staff Dolores French said "We've gotten calls from all over the world — Australia, Venezuela, British Columbia." She said 12 pints of blood — some of it flown in from Atlanta — were given to the men.

SGA Candidate night becomes a 'circus'

Russell Swann sits with his running mate during last nights forum held by the Student Government Association (Staff photo by Pat Dobbs)

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

In a meeting marked by flying frozen coconut cream pies, squawking plastic ducks, Jimmy Carter imitations and whippits, the Student Government Association (SGA) last night held a forum for student government presidential candidates in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Disturbances of the meeting came from candidates on the stage and from the audience. There were 16 candidates on stage and 24 persons in the audience when the meeting began. Most people in the audience were from the SGA.

Immediately before the meeting began, individuals marched in with squawking plastic ducks and coconut cream pies. Although candidate Russell Swann says his plastic duck is his runningmate he denies these people were his supporters.

During the forum various politicians sitting at the table were victims of thrown pies. Targets included Student Government Affairs co-chairperson and moderator David Leary and candidate Bill Edelstein. However, Edelstein deflected the pie aimed at him and it hit candidate Jay Flynn.

One pie thrower was removed by Campus Center security. Swann was asked by Leary to tell the pie throwers and duck squawkers to stop their "disruption". Desipte this request from Swann, occasional squawks were heard from the audience throughout the meeting. During the meeting, Swann "took hits" from a whippit, a container of nitrous oxide (laughing gas).

The bizarre mood was increased by the "Benevolent Dictatorship" candidates, Brad Goverman and Edelstein. Edelstein, who last week asked for the resignation of the entire Undergraduate Senate, was dressed in Army fatigues and sunglasses. He gave his speeches in what he called "Spanish" and then acted as his own translator in a Jimmy Carter imitation.

Prior to questioning candidates presented five minute statements.

The team of David Barenberg and Susan Birmingham spoke first. They spoke of their involvement in efforts to secure a lease for dormitory residents. Barenberg cited UMass stock divestments as proof that "it doesn't take much to get things done."

Senator Don Bishop supports strengthening rules for recall of senators and requiring senators to communicate with their constituents.

Steve Brickman and Mark Vafiades said it was "not fair" that the Third World students have a separate delegation in the Senate. They feel the spring concert question should have been on a referendum. The slate opposed removing seniors and juniors from Pierpont since they felt the freshmen and sophomores may be the source of problems in the dorm.

Edelstein and Goverman want to institute a dictatorship to replace the SGA. They nailed their "Sweeping Reform Act of 1978" to the candidates table. The Act calls for the banishment of the Senate.

Senator Jay Flynn called for an "information phone" for students to get information they need, a special talk show to ask questions to the Administration, and rules to require Senators to report to their House Council.

Howard Greene and Paul Lawrence called the forum a "farce". Lawrence said "Howie is a hard worker and I am apathetic." They said these were the qualities needed to inspire students.

Herb Tyson and Shelly Gordon spoke of the lack of impact of the Senate on students. They support more effective co-ops and establishing a place for student check cashing.

Grad Senate wants fee increase to fund buses

By ROB STEIN
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate last night passed a proposal by its Finance Committee calling for a six dollar increase in the student activities fee to fund the UMass Bus Service.

The increase would be implemented only if a separate $10 Transit Service fee proposal is not submitted to the Board of Trustees and the funding of the Transit Service is included as a line item on the Senate's budget.

Presently the administration has rejected the Senate's proposal that the Transit Service be funded by the Senate. The tax increase proposal was passed in anticipation of a possible reversal of this decision.

The administration also rejected the proposal by the Senate that 70 percent of the Student Senate Transit System be paid by the students and 30 percent by paid by the administration. Both of these proposals have been rejected pending further deliberation so that negotiations could begin with local communities and the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority.

Senate Vice President Monte Pearson informed the Senate of further developments in the Campus Center garage issue.

Currently the administration is using funds from the budget of the parking office to pay off interest on bonds sold to build the garage.

A committee comprised of members from various university unions including the Clerical Workers Union and the Maintenance Workers Union will be meeting next Tuesday with Chancellor Randolf W. Bromery to push for state funding in place of parking office funding.

SGA threatens area power

By DEBBIE WALLACE
Collegian Staff

A current Student Government Association proposal presented to the Central Area Council last night could drastically limit area government power if it is approved.

SGA Presidential candidates David Barenberg and Susan Birmingham have proposed a plan which would involve a new concept in student government at UMass, the Undergraduate People's Assembly.

The assembly would be made up of no more than 70 representatives from on-campus and commuting students and academic representatives.

The assembly would be in charge of regulating all undergraduate student organizations and Recognized Student Organization groups, and would establish financial, constitutional, and operational procedures for these groups. Meetings would take place every third week.

As part of the assembly, a coordinating committee would be in charge of coordinating programs, activities, and resources of the assembly. This would take much of the power away from the area governments, and would, in some respects, make another procedure mandatory before funds would be accessible to dormitory representatives to be used for various projects.

The proposal grew out of the empowerment plan, a report compiled by 25 organizations last semester. The plan had specification in which to reorganize the student senate.

Barenberg said, "this proposal is weak in many ways, but it is a good place to start discussions in the student senate. It is an issue that needs to be dealt with. The senate does not incoporate academics into it's agenda and this is seen as a problem."

Council Vice President Rich Fryer said, "We will become an area council without any real say."

The Central Area Council has tabled the vote for next week to give members a chance to read the proposal.

Vista seeks volunteers

By MARCIA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Peace Corps Vista recruiters will be on campus today, Wednesday and Thursday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the Campus Center concourse continuing this year's 40-college drive for volunteers, according to Ken Itzkowitz, a Boston Regional Office recruiter.

"This is a big drive for us," said Itzkowitz. "Last year we only went to nine colleges. We've had a lot of people sign up for interviews so far and we have a good cross section of people with various backgrounds."

Peace Corps and Vista combined under a federal agency act in 1971 and it has been easier with both programs condensed into one, according to Itzowitz.

During the 60's, he said, the program was bigger than it is now; however, under Carter, it has been "on the rise."

"We have new funds that enable us to have more and better programs — domestic and overseas," said Itzkowitz.

"We are looking for people with backgrounds in agriculture, business, education, home economics, health, French, Spanish, nutrition and skilled labor," said Itzkowitz.

"But we are interested in talking with anyone who has enthusiasm and initiative with potential for the program. People with a liberal arts background and those with community involvement experience, such as working with children in camps, are welcome to set up an interview."

Frat needs members

Kappa Omicron, the UMass chapter of national service fraternity Alpha Phi Omega, will hold a membership drive tonight in the Campus Center.

The largest Greek letter organization in the country, Alpha Phi Omega aims to "develop leadership, promote friendship and provide service to humanity," said membership vice president Ricky Goldstein. The UMass chapter meets weekly to work and plan service projects for the area.

Past projects have included the annual Las Vegas Night (in which money is donated to local charities), blood drives, a Heart Fund Walkathon held together with sister fraternity Gamma Gamma Sigma, work on the Freshman Register and others.

Goldstein said future plans will be to raise money for charity by running a computer dating service and a biorhythm chart. Kappa Omicron will also continue work on Project Identification, a service in which the group places students' social security numbers on their valuables. This project, in conjunction with the UMass police, was begun last fall in the hopes of covering the entire campus by the end of this semester.

Bus hearings tonight

The Amherst Committee on Public Transportation will hold a public hearing tonight in Town Hall to determine residents' "support, interest or concern" about proposed expansion of local bus services.

According to a memorandum submitted recently to the town by Town Manager James Cope, the town will receive 26 new buses around August 15. 22 of them are replacement vehicles or are to be used on existing routes that are presently overcrowded.

The other four will be available in Amherst for expansion of bus service if the community wishes to develop new routes, according to the report.

Amherst water discussed

The details of an emergency Amherst-Hadley water agreement specifying terms under which Hadley would provide Amherst with water will be discussed tonight by Amherst and Hadley selectmen at 7:30 in the Hadley Town Hall.

If enacted, the agreement may prove to be the end of Amherst's search for water.

Rudolph starts International Women's Week

By CANDY CARLON
Collegian Staff

Telling a gathering of 600 that in order to become a world-class athlete you have to believe in yourself," Wilma Rudolph last night presented the keynote address for International Women's Week in the Student Union Ballroom.

Rudolph described growing up in Clarksville, Tennessee as a victim of polio. "Being a different kid, a kid with a handicap, I became a loner," she said.

With the support of her family, Rudolph was able to exercise her legs. "I would cheat and take the brace off and learned to walk without a limp," she said.

In high school, Rudolph became an All-State and All-American basketball player and track star. "I felt that I had to prove to all the kids in the neighborhood who wouldn't let me play with them that I was as good as they were," she stated.

Rudolph went on to win a bronze medal in sprinting in the 1956 Olympic games. In the 1960 Olympics, she won three gold medals in the 100, 200 and 400 meter events. Rudolph remains actively involved on the U.S. Olympic Committee games in an advisory capacity.

Discussing the image of women in sports she said, "You find being a female in sports you have to prove yourself constantly. The black female athlete has always been on the bottom of the totem pole."

As far as the equalization of male and female sporting events Rudolph commented, "I would not like to see women's teams merge with men's teams. Women have the right to excel in their own sports. We do need qualified women to take over the training of young women athletes."

Rudolph has ceased to participate in athletic competition and has entered the business world as an executive banker. She said she could empathize with male athletes who were forced to retire, having undergone a difficult five year transition period following the Olympics.

"It was hard to leave the cheers and applause," she said "but nothing lasts forever."

Senate sets date for Canal vote

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate yesterday decided to vote March 16 on one of the two Panama Canal treaties, breaking a slow-moving debate that threatened to develop into a filibuster.

Senate Democratic leader Robert Byrd and GOP leader Howard Baker negotiated the agreement during a closed-door meeting with key senators on both sides of the issue. The agreement then was accepted unanimously by the full Senate.

It provides the Senate will vote March 16 at 4 p.m. on the neutrality treaty which would govern the Panama Canal beyond the year 2000 when the Atlantic-Pacific waterway is turned over to the Panamanians.

Shortly before the decision, opponents had mustered their strongest showing to date on another in a series of amendments designed to cripple the controversial treaties.

Bryd said the only possible delay would be if the Senate has to take up emergency matters before March 16 — perhaps if President Carter feels it necessary to request legislation to seize strike-bound coal mines.

In that case, Byrd said, an amount of time equal to that consumed on any emergency legislation would be added to the date for the vote on the neutrality treaty.

Byrd said if the neutrality treaty passes, the Senate will proceed to the Panama Canal treaty which governs the period until the year 2000. He refused to say whether he would drop the Panama Canal treaty if proponents cannot muster the required two-thirds for passage of the neutrality pact.

Byrd said he hoped, in the next few days, to get an agreement for a final vote on the main Panama Canal treaty. Sen. James Allen, D-Ala., a leading opponent, said that vote would have to be held some time in April — and Byrd agreed it could not come before next month.

Belchertown bids for highway equipment

By RICHARD BARREL
Collegian Staff

BELCHERTOWN — Bids for a bucket loader and sander, proposals for the use of federal revenue sharing funds and a report on the community health center where among the items on the agenda for the Belchertown selectmen last night.

Bids for the loader to be used by the highway department ranged from $25,399 to $39,600. The bids were received by the selectmen and taken under advisement.

Bids on the sander, also to be used by the highway department, ranged from $3,825 to $5,180.

Money for the loader and sander was among the 24 items totalling $112,794 which the board will now place before the town meeting on April 3.

Topping the list of items was $20,000 for highway maintenance which Selectmen Kenneth H. Snow said will be used mainly for patching.

Other items include energy saving equipment for the school heating system costing $6,600. Additionally, $7,965 for Fire Fighting equipment was proposed along with $5,000 to construct a concrete pad for a new salt storage area.

The board heard a report on the community health centers, staffed by Dr. Brent Speers and Joyce Wilkes a nurse practitioner intern and located at the corner of South Main St., and Route 202.

The Speers said the center now handles some 15-20 patients daily and has been operating for 15 months.

The center also has an informal relationship with the police department to provide emergency services in the event of traffic accidents, he said.

Speers also said the center associated with Wing Memorial Hospital in Palmer had gotten preliminary approval for a certificate of need from the Western Massachusetts Health Planning Council.

Internships, a chance to put education to use

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

Isolationism may be useful in foreign policy relations, but for aspiring students it is no key to success.

Too often students everywhere remain isolated from the "real world" for at least four years of undergraduate study.

The UMass Office of Internships, located in the basement of Goodell, offers a solution to this problem. Internships in New York City, Washington, D.C., and even places as far away as Tasmania, France and England are now available to aspiring students searching for a chance to put their education to use — before graduation.

Men and women alike, from a variety of majors participate in this program. Started in the fall of 1972 with just 11 student participants, all political science majors, it now has grown into a capacity, 400 students per year operation. At present, over 700 available agencies are on file for students looking for an internship.

Interested students are urged to attend an informational meeting detailing the program tonight at 7:30 in CC 101. For those desiring placements for the summer or upcoming fall, it is especially important to commence, internship registration now.

According to past interns, it is a wise and rewarding decision to make.

One journalism major working at a national magazine said of the experience, "The internship has provided me with an immensely useful bridge between theory and practice. My investigation story taught me much about the relationship between Congress and the Washington press, and how free the press really is."

Another political science major working for a congressman said, "I have proven to myself that I am capable of working at a professional level in a vibrant and innovative office, and have gained immeasurable knowledge both from daily contact with the office staff, and observations of Congress as an institution and a legislative body."

A sign hanging on the walls of the Internship Office reads, "No goal is too high if we climb with care and confidence." The UMass Internship program is designed to help students in that climb.

Local developer reveals University Drive plan

By DAVE GRAM
Collegian Staff

Amherst Selectmen last night listened to a proposal by a local developer to build a cluster of office buildings and stores along the eastern side of University Drive between Amity Street and Route 9.

KLC Associates told the Board they plan to seek a zoning change for the land at this May's Town Meeting. The land is presently zoned for single family homes. KLC representative Chris Riddle called this zoning "unfair and inappropriate.

Riddle said the land is not suitable for residential use because it abuts on University Drive, a heavily traveled road, and because the land across the street is already occupied by commercial property.

Riddle said KLC will negotiate the particulars of its proposal with the town Planning Board over the next several weeks and will make its final presentation to Town Meeting in May.

The Selectmen also heard Town Manager A. Louis Hayward request that he be given no pay increase in the coming fiscal year. Hayward said, "In preparation of the Town Budget which the Finance Committee is currently reviewing, I made every effort to limit spending."

Hayward said he has "serious concerns over the impact of revaluation on Amherst property owners, the failure of many UMass employees to receive any salary increases and continuing insufficient state aid to local government." Hayward feared that these factors would require some further reductions to be made on an "already tight" town budget.

Hayward currently makes $31,500 a year, according to Assistant Town Manager Don Jacobs.

In other matters, the Board voted to grant sewer hookups for two new dormitories at Amherst College. College officials said the new dorms would house 77 students when they are completed.

Womens Week...Monday in review

Diane Shonak of the Uktanee Dance Troupe performed yesterday in the SUB before a crowd of 100 people. Uktanee, which means sisters in Arabic, grew out of a colloq taught by Nancy Rose Dow, another of the 7-member collective. Belly dancing, said Shonak is an old mid-east art, traditionally done by women for women to help them through pregnancy and childbirth. Dow denounced misconceptions that belly dancing is done for men as a form of sexual enticement. The group is a non-profit and has performed in the Amherst area for approximately one year. In the middle of the performance Dow asked the audience to join; many did in chain dance.

Rape prevention

By DEBORAH BROIDE
Collegian Staff

Prevention of rape through education and direct services for rape victims were the two main topics discussed at an International Women's Week workshop entitled "Rape" which took place yesterday afternoon in the Campus Center.

Facilitating the workshop were members of the Hampshire County Rape Information and Prevention Project and the Counselor — Advocate group of the UMass Rape Task Force.

"Rape is not a sexual act; it's an act of violence," said Angela Giudice, one of the facilitators. She added that for years, rape was considered a sexual activity. But according to Guidice, rapists are not necessarily sexually frustrated.

Susan Markman, another facilitator, said that over half the men convicted of rape are sexually active outside of their rape activities. "Fifty per cent of rapists are known in some degree to their victims," said Markman.

Rape victims don't fit the stereotypical picture any more than rapists do, according to Markman and Guidice.

"Infants and women in their nineties have been raped. Victims don't have to be young, traditionally attractive women."

Women and Language

By LAURIE WHITING
Collegian Staff

Do women in our culture have a separate "women's language" or dialect? Are there certain expressions and styles of speaking particular to women?

These were among the questions raised at a workshop on "Women And Language" given yesterday as part of International Women's Week. The workshop was facilitated by Barbara Stack, a UMass graduate student in Education with a masters degree in linguistics.

Topics covered in the workshop, which was attended by 25 women, included naming and labels, the generic, values and assumptions inherent in the language, and political choices in language change.

Through an illustrative exercise on naming, Stack showed that language is not only a means of communication, but is also an expression of shared assumptions with its own set of implicit values and behavioral models.

Stack said the results of a sociological experiment have revealed that the use of the generie (i.e. "man", "mankind", "he") conjures up male images 30 to 40 per cent more often than female images.

Referring to theories espoused by linquist Robin Lakoff, Stack said the issue of whether women use a separate language or dialect is a new one and is still open to interpretation.

There is a movement currently underway to actively change the English language. The motivation for this change stems from wide political analyses rather than linquistic analyses, according to Stack.

"A wider political analysis helps people to make choices," said Stack. "Many people assume there is a correct linguistic answer to the problem of sexism in language. But it actually comes down to developing your own answers according to your own politics."

Feeling your feelings

By PATRICIA KEEFE
Collegian Staff

"Too many people are taught to supress their feelings rather than feel who and what they are," said Gene Zeiger, facilitator of yesterday's Women's Week Bio-energetics workshop. The workshop took place in Campus Center 165 yesterday afternoon, with 30 people in attendance.

Verbal resistance toward the presence of some men in the room was prompted by Zeiger's comment, but the men were allowed to stay by vote.

"Emotions are a tremendous source of energy," said Zeiger. "The purpose of bio-energetics is to move energy through the body and connect with feelings in your body."

Zeiger added that people who repress their emotions may become physically ill. Repression of emotions leads to muscle blocks called "muscle armature". Blocks are created when muscles are tensed to keep feelings in the body. Major areas of muscle armature are the jaw and back.

To allow this energy to flow, bio-energetics is used as a means of opening oneself to feelings, said Zeiger.

"The things which kept you from opening up in the past come back to you and with this consciousness comes change — mental and physical". She added that any real change of self is always reflected in the body.

After a brief introduction of what bio-energetics entails, the rest of the workshop was spent in exercises. These included stomping and shouting "NO!", jumping, breathing, pushing back with the arms and shouting, "Get Off."

Most importantly, Zeiger urged participants to reach down inside of themselves and realize their feelings. Through relaxation and concentration exercises, many at the workshop were successful.

Kate Carroll, a UMass junior said she felt "at great peace with herself after doing the various exercises," and added she felt "satisfied and together, yet wanted more."

Another participant, Lee Ann Gullikson, also a UMass junior, said "the workshop motivated people to become involved with everyone else. It helped you get in touch with yourself, to feel like a complete person."

Zeiger said the workshop "went very well because it was a beginning for some people since they learned and experienced something new."

Lesbian health issues

By JILL TRISCHMAN
Collegian Staff

Laura Punnett, women's health educator, conducted a workshop on Lesbian Health Issues and Self-Help yesterday afternoon in the Campus Center.

Punnett was trained five years ago at the Feminist Women's Health Center in Oakland, California. Since then she has been teaching self-help groups in the Five-College area.

"It's been assumed that Lesbians are young, childless and healthy," said Punnett. She added that this generalization is made by many people, including some Lesbians.

Many Lesbians assume that since they don't have sexual intercourse with men they don't require gynecological services, but this is untrue. Women have many health-care needs other than contraception. Childless women have some unique health-care needs:

Because of the absence of pregnancy and breastfeeding, which causes changes in the chemical balance of the body, in their medical histories, childless women are more prone to breast cancer than women who bear children. They are also more likely to contract endometriosis, the overgrowth of the endometrium outside the uterine lining, since pregnancy in heterosexual women brings about a hormonal balance that childless women do not experience.

The tell-tale signs of endometriosis are severe cramps and heavy menstrual periods. The disorder can be controlled by hormone theraphy, pregnancy and surgery. Herbal preparations can also be useful in controlling endometriosis.

Vaginal infections are common in all women. The yeast infection is most common. It occurs when the normal bacterial balance in the vagina is disturbed. Signs of yeast infection include a burning and itching sensation and an odorous mucous discharge from the vaginal tract.

Sexism and Education

By JONI-SUE BLINDERMAN
Collegiah Staff

"No child shall be excluded from or discriminated against in admission to any public school of any town, or in obtaining the advantages, privileges and courses of study of such public school on account of... sex...."

So reads a Massachusetts law which was the first anti-sex discrimination legislation of its kind in the country. Chapter 622, as the law is called, was the topic of a Women's Week workshop given yesterday in the Campus Center.

Facilitating the workshop was Kathy Salisbury, an administrator in the Amherst-Pelham School District who recently directed the district's Project Against Sex-Role Stereotyping.

Salisbury noted that although Chapter 622 offers "good incentive and impetus to remediate sexism in education," workshops, training sessions and support groups are essential if the sexist attitudes of teachers, staff, administrators and parents are to be challenged and then changed.

Idealistically, teachers attending workshops dealing with sexism in the classroom learn to be aware of even the most subtle of sexist attitudes and teaching methods. This newly gained knowledge makes it possible to keep such attitudes out of the classroom.

Aside from alleviating sexism in the classroom, Chapter 622 deals with sex equity regarding access to course of study and extra-curricular activities such as clubs and teams. For example, female students can no longer be legally excluded from industrial arts classes and male students must be allowed to take courses in home economics.

Salisbury said that students will often choose classes that have traditionally been assigned to students of their gender, which reflects the way in which children have been socialized within schools and communities.

In conclusion, Salisbury stressed the need for administrator's participation and support in monitoring teachers, coaches and club directors to make sure they are in compliance with Chapter 622.

Energy bill may lose key senator

WASHINGTON (AP) — A tentative settlement of the Senate stalemate that has long tied up President Carter's energy bill ran into apparent trouble yesterday when a senator expected to support the proposal announced he may vote against it.

Sen. John Durkin, D-N.H., said he may oppose the accord unless the Carter administration agrees to support an energy tax credit he said would benefit New Englanders who heat their homes with fuel oil.

Durkin acknowledged that such a move could torpedo efforts led by Senate Energy Committee Chairman Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., to end the three-month impasse.

But he told reporters "you'd have to put me in the doubtful category now" in terms of supporting the proposed agreement.

Without Durkin's support, Jackson would only have eight expected firm votes for the proposal — one short of the nine he needs to end the impasse on the 17-member Senate delegation to the House-Senate conference committee on energy.

Efforts by the conference panel to reach a compromise on the key issue of natural gas deregulation have been stymied since last Dec. 2 because Senate conferees have been unable to agree among themselves.

The Senate conferees are scheduled to meet this afternoon to consider the new proposal.

The plan calls for exempting newly discovered gas from federal price regulation after by January 1, 1985, with a steady increase in the regulated price between now and then.

In the past, Jackson counted Durkin among backers of the proposed agreement, worked out last week in three days of intensive, private negotiations attended by Energy Secretary James R. Schlesinger.

Jackson could not be reached yesterday for comment. But another leading supporter of the proposal, Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., said that while he was still hopeful most Senate conferees could support the measure, "I have some concern as to whether it will hold up."

Durkin said he wants the administration to announce its support for a provision of the Senate-passed energy tax bill that would give tax credits of up to $150 to help consumers pay their oil-heat bills.

Durkin said the tax credit is important for New England, where most homes are heated with oil. It was added during Senate floor debate and is not contained in the House-passed energy tax legislation supported by the administration.

There was no immediate administration reaction to Durkin's statement, but in the past the White House has indicated a clear preference for the House-passed bill.

That measure calls for rebating proceeds of the president's propoed crude oil tax to consumers, without special consideration to those who heat with oil.

A striking coal miner holds food as he makes his way through a crowd of 10,000 miners who were given food by striking farmers. The farmers donated flour, cheese, frozen meat and fresh produce to show their sympathy for the strikers. (UPI)

Others used Taft-Hartley before President Carter

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Taft-Hartley machinery which President Carter invoked Monday in the coal strike had been used 34 times by five presidents before him since it was enacted in 1947.

It was last used in 1971 by Richard Nixon against five related longshore and grain elevator strikes.

The law does not have a good track record in the coal industry.

President Harry Truman tried to use it in 1950, after an eight-month series of strikes and slowdowns in the coal fields.

Truman obtained a court injunction ordering the miners back to work for 80 days, but they refused to go even though United Mine Workers chief John L. Lewis ordered them back.

The government charged the union with contempt, but the court, citing on Lewis' public order, found the union was innocent of contempt.

The next day, March 3, 1950, Truman asked Congress for authority, separate from Taft-Hartley, to seize the mines — a step Carter so far has not taken.

Congress never acted on Truman's request. Within hours after his seizure message reached Capitol Hill, management and labor settled the strike.

National power cutbacks related to coal strike

[AP] - As President Carter sought to force striking coal miners back to work, the Midwest and Appalachia braced yesterday for drastic new power cutbacks that could throw tens of thousands out of jobs by the end of the week.

Officials in Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia were considering imposing an immediate 30 percent cutback on industrial customers of two utilities.

In Ohio, a major utility serving the Columbus area asked state officials to allow a 50 percent cutback to industry next Monday.

And Indiana officials decided this was no time to lift 25 percent cutbacks already in effect for businesses there.

The Indiana order has put some 4,700 workers on indefinite layoff and another 15,000 on shortened work schedules in areas served by three utilities.

So far, the Labor Department has said that layoffs related to power cutbacks have been limited to about 22,000 nationwide. But on Sunday, when it became clear that the United Mine Workers would reject a tentative settlement of the thremonth-old strike, administration officials predicted that one million people could be out of work by the end of March and 3¼ million by late April.

Judge calls charge 'ridiculous'

BOSTON [AP] — A federal judge Monday labelled as "ridiculous" a charge that a New York consulting firm bought protection for its state contract from Senate President Kevin Harrington with a $2,000 contribution.

"Are you trying to say that $2,000 offsets $40,000," U.S. Appeals Court Judge Bailey Aldrich asked lawyers for ex-senators Joseph DiCarlo and Ronald MacKenzie. "Are you trying to say that takes care of not having to pay anyone else?

"Well, for myself, that's ridiculous," Aldrich said.

Lawyers for the two men, convicted last year of extorting $40,000 from McKee-Berger-Mansueto, asked the court to grant a new trial in the case or at least a full hearing into questions raised about it.

DiCarlo and MacKenzie began serving one-year federal prison terms in January after U.S. District Court Judge Walter J. Skinner turned down their bid for a new trial.

Present for the 90-minute hearing before a three-judge panel were DiCarlo's wife Joann and his brother, Peter.

Lawyers Francis DiMento and Earle Cooley contend their clients are entitled to a new trial because their earlier defense "was controlled from Beacon Hill."

Cooley also raised the issue of "selective prosecution," noting an FBI report said Albert "Toots" Manzi had threatened MBM with trouble on the University of Massachusetts Boston campus project, if they didn't come up with $10,000 for the campaign of then Gov. Francis W. Sargent.

Cooley and DiMento contend defense lawyers Walter Hurley and Robert Mulkern never raised the names of Harrington, Manzi and Sargent during the trial because of their divided allegiances.

They said Hurley's law partner, Beacon Hill lobbyist Thomas Joyce, is a political advisor and confidant of both Harrington and Sargent.

"I cannot think of any tactical basis for not doing it," Cooley said of the decision not to raise the names of those political figures, "only if the judgment is made to protect Sargent and Harrington and to sacrifice these two men."

Facetiously referring to Harrington as "the good samaritan" DiMento theorized that the Senate president might have suggested DiCarlo hire Hurley, not to protect DiCarlo, but to protect himself.

First Assistant U.S. Attorney Edward Lee countered that "there was no evidence payments were made to higher personages for protection."

He added that if MBM President Gerald McKee made payments in 1970 to Manzi to protect the firm's interests, "then why is McKee being threatened in 1972 by Manzi."

DiMento responded that MBM at the time was still interested in getting the contract for Phase Two construction at UMass.

Mass House to vote on state contracts bill

BOSTON [AP] — Legislation creating a "Blue Ribbon" commission to investigate the awarding of state contracts will be on the House floor for a vote by April 10, House Speaker Thomas W. McGee said Monday.

The commitment followed a week of wrestling in the House in which the bill's sponsors and other representatives pushed for speedy action on the proposal filed earlier this session.

The main target of the probe would be a $6 million contract involving the New York firm McKee-Berger-Mansueto, which managed construction of the University of Massachusetts at Boston.

MBM, which used former Gov. Endicott Peabody as a lobbyist, has admitted making payments to Massachusetts politicians and was linked to the extortion convictions of two state senators.

The main backers of the proposed commission, Rep. Philip Johnston, D-Marshfield, and Rep. Andrew Card, R-Holbrook, said they were satisfied with the speaker's promise.

Earlier they charged the House leadership with delaying action on the controversial proposal, which would create a panel with the power to subpoena witnesses and records.

Johnston said he would fight any efforts to limit the scope of the investigation to the MBM contract.

"We operate on the assumption the MBM case is not an isolated case," he said at a news conference.

Democrats deplore Thomson speech

CONCORD, N.H. [UPI] — Republican Gov. Meldrin Thomson embarrassed all New Hampshire with a speech Saturday to the John Birch Society of California, New Hampshire Democratic Party Chairman Joanne Symons said yesterday.

Thomson said in that speech that President Carter's foreign policy is leading the United States "beside the Communist path to national suicide."

"Governor Thomson took his crusade for the Radical Right to the place it really belongs," Mrs. Symons said. "The John Birch Society is probably the only group remaining that can stomach the governor's increasingly extremist remarks."

"Speaking in California, marking yet another absence from the state, Thomson again embarrassed us all. He called senators who voted against the Panama Canal treaties 'Benedict Arnolds.' Apparently the governor now believes, as does the John Birch Society, that anyone who disagrees with their political line is a traitor," she said.

Thomson said the United States must "mount the greatest electoral revolution in the history of our nation by sending only Americans to Congress, and to our statehouses and legislatures."

"I would like to know what the governor means by 'only Americans'," Mrs. Symons said. "Does he mean 'only Americans' of his race, of his religion, of his sex, of his national background, of his philosophy? Perhaps only John Birchers?"

CAOS may not be funded

To the Editor:

I also went to the Elvis Costello concert Wednesday night which the UPC so adequately bungled up. I arrived at 6:15, only to wait over two hours before the doors were opened. When I did get in the first four rows were already occupied with various leeches from the "Below the Salt" staff, UPC people, etc. Who do these assholes think they are? Why can't they wait like everyone else? Thanks a lot UPC.

So I had to wait over two hours to get in; could anyone from the UPC have the decency to come out and tell us WHY the concert was being delayed? Rosanna was very accurate in comparing the wait to the UPC treating us like a herd of cattle.

The UPC then makes the lately timed announcement that all cameras were to be turned in. Can you imagine someone handing over their $200 Nikon to someone from the UPC? Why weren't announcements made beforehand if it was supposedly in "Elvis's contract?"

So the Boom Booms really had a bad night; come on, you have to admit that success has spoiled these young boys from Boston. Deservedly, they weren't called back for an encore. OK, but why does this Dee Greaze asshole get up and try to lecture us by telling us we were wrong to "boo" Willie off the stage? Somebody should have led him back to his cage. Why does the UPC let people like this actually get up on stage? A well-aimed bottle - would have done the trick.

Well, thanks UPC for ruining my night -- I should have gone to see "Rocky."

Jack Kelleher

Marley's presence desired

To the Editor:

I would like to encourage both the Black American Music Festival committee and the Union Program Council to make every effort possible to secure the talents of Bob Marley and the Wailers for the Spring Concert. To have Marley's music ang energy with us on a warm day in spring is like a dream too good to be believed.

Marley's presence would make all past disagreement over cost and programming irrelevant. It is worth noting that the Wailers have a large following among the white middle-class students who comprise the bulk of the student body. Yet their music and reggae in general are intrinsic aspects of the international black experience, making them perfect for the already good idea of a black music festival.

I hope that the intentions to have Marley play which have been expressed are real and that the attempts to have them on this campus are successful. Rastaman vibrations in the spring!

Jon Garelick

Program Council ruined his night

To the Editor:

Our agency is going through a crisis at this time which makes it neccessary for us to resort to making this request for assistance of all of you, i.e., adult learners.

Counseling Assistance for Older Students may no longer exist after July 1, 1978. The Undergraduate Student Senate has refused our budget request and will not hold a hearing to consider our budget. The administration [Whitmore] is not coming through with any financial support at this time. Due to this lack of both support and interest from these governance units it will be next to impossible to maintain our services at any reasonable level of efficiency.

We are now asking those of you who are our friends and/or have been helped by us in the past to please now help with your support. Some of the ways in which you can help are:

1. Write letters to:
  1. Amherst Record, Editor
  2. Collegian Editor
  3. Co-Chairs of SGA Budget Committee
  4. Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs

2. Attend the Student Senate Meeting [within next ten days]

3. Talk to anyone who may have input into the SGA or the Vice Chancellor's office

4. Run for office or support the slate of:
  1. Commuter Collective Council
  2. Commuter Collective Senate Seats
  3. Student Senate seats
  4. Board of Governors for the Student Union and Campus Center

Women's art: dispelling myths

Emily Dickinson

Sheltered from the world in her father's home Emily Dickinson wrote her poetry, conceptualizing a woman's view of the world. Dickinson's poetry marked the beginning of women's consciousness in women's art, what most critics have categorized as a "separatist women's art" where the artist concerns herself totally and exclusivesly with aspects of a woman's experience. This exclusive and political art has predominated most recently in all mediums. Through poetry, fiction, novels, painting, photography, sculpture and other sources women artists are expressing themselves and their ideas.

Theirs is an art much like Dickinson's life: one who stays inside oneself, glancing out the window at the busy street since that world has neither accepted her as an equal nor her art which is peculiar in that it expresses a woman's perspective. Theirs is an art of redefinition; they proclaim themselves in their own words, their own visions, undistorted by the prevalent male definitions of women and women artists.

Unfortunately both male and female critics have not seen the need for such concern in art, the politics at its base, nor can they understand the idea of art being political or based upon the individual artist herself and her politics.

Keats once wrote that the artist is in fact non-existent when considereing his-her product. Art, he said, must exist beyond the artist. Should its maker have a truly creative ability, the content of the art must soar beyond the individual's experience. Art is a form of freedom and that freedom should be used to its fullest.

This is an adequate definition of art. I feel, however, that when dealing with women's art one must come to a separate definition. The fact is that women artists have been ignored in society (ex. in the past ten years there have only been five solo women art shows in the Soho District of New York City) and women as topics in art have either been totally ignored by the male artist or have been characterized as a limited, romanticized, passifying powerless object to possess. The same need for revolution in society concerning women's place there is equalled by the need for revolution in the art world both for women artists and the depiction of women in art forms.

Women's art exists for three purposes. First, as poet Adrinne Rich said, women's art is an attempt to undue the great misrepresentation of women in art in the past. A woman's consciousness and perception of the world has been equally ignored. Secondly, women's art serves as a speaking ground for the women's movement in order to create social change. Third, women's art is a form of therapy for women to develop confidence in their identity, to achieve personal growth and to more fully understand their heritage as women.

The concept of women's art is best represented in the mediums of painting, sculpture, photography where the female perspective is visually expressed through color, lighting, and subject. Leading women artists such as Lucy Lippard deal with images of the household and human passion subjects close to a women's experience. Equally as representative is the growing movement of "Body-Art" which originated in the early 70's along European women artists and has now been popularized in the U.S. among such artists as Judy Chicago and Meriam Schapiro. Body-Art is a form of "body" self-portrait done in a variety of mediums. The art implies a factual statement of a women's physical being and not a sensual statement. In fact, this is meant to act against such representation.

In literature the predominate genre is poetry ranging from the traditional literary style of Sylvia Plath and Denise Levertov to the more political of Carolyn Kizer, Margaret Atwood, Gwendolyn Brooks, and Nikki Giovanni, to the confessional style of Anne Sexton and finally to the radically political voice of Rich and Marge Piercy. Each in their own way looks for the contradictions within society as they have experienced them. This poetry which is often simple because its message is considered more important than poetic craft, is often criticized as not being poetry at all.

Also important has been the publication of Rubbyfruit Jungle and Day of Her Own by Rita Mae Brown on lesbianism and the lesbian community and other books which have been published by women's presses.

The establishment of such press is for the publication of books which would not ordinarily be printed by established publishing houses.

An essential point about women's art is that it has brought together varieties of views, varieties of views which have in fact fragmented the movement. Lesbianism, socialist feminism, conservative feminism have all been brought under one roof.

There is still one item which should be handled under women's art and that is the freedom in art which Keats talks about. Beyond spreading the concept for social change, women artists can and should go beyond themselves to the world of imagination, to place their feminine perspective within the world at large as male artists have been doing for generations. Women artists are fortunate--they can liberate themselves.

Get involved in collective bargaining

Are You Aware?

.....That the Faculty Union and the Whitmore management have bargaining teams that are currently negotiating their first contract?

.....That we are the only school in Massachusetts that has students actually involved in the process?

Though the student bargaining team is an outsider in a primarily two party system of collective bargaining, our presence makes the negotiating teams aware that the students desire to protect their rights as consumers and decision makers.

In February 1976 approximately 1500 people participated in an election that, for better or worse, has changed the way academic decisions will be made at the University. None of those people were students. All were faculty members who voted to create a Faculty Union and enter into collective bargaining with the administration. The desire for unionization comes as no surprise, what with budget restraints and the "community of scholars" form of shared governance being transformed into a corporate model of management decision making. In short, faculty needed a tool to protect its interest.

That's great for professors, but what about students? Are we, the majority group on campus, going to sit idly by while a handful of union and management negotiators plot a course that guides our lives? Collective bargaining isn't only about wages. It is about the way the University operates. It deals with evaluation procedures, office hours, course loads, and much more.

During the summer of 1977 the students won their rights to sit at the bargaining table and discuss the current issues and other issues that are of student concern. The students are restricted to certain guidelinss which prohibit them from signing any agreements of ratifying the finalized agreement. All student "observers" are backed by various task forces and committees. These committees, in concert with staff personnel from LSO and SCER, formulate student positions which are presented at the table by the observer. Simultaneously, students at UMass, with the financial and organizational support of the Student Government Association, are working to organize undergraduate councils in every department. These departmental councils are initiating new programs and new forms of student participation in their departments. They are working to make the departments more responsive to the students in them, and they are gathering information about thow their departments work.

Each side is out to protect its own interests.

While both sides claim to be on the side of "quality public education," neither side includes the consumers of that education. Neither side includes people who must cram in a work week along with three five credit courses, who must wait in long lines for financial aid, hoping that they will be able to afford this year's tuition and fees. The faculty and administration sides are made up of people who have vested interests. Students, too, have a vested interest in the bargaining process, which is just as legitimate as the interst of the "two parties."

Some questions which you might ask, and which we hope to be dealing with are;

What role do students have to play?
What do we have to bargain with?
What do students have to lose?
Do students have ratification powers?
Would CATE be a determining factor in tenure decisions?
Does bargaining effect student government?
What is the impact of faculty wages on tuition?
Will our classes be taught by teaching assistants instead of professors, or possibly by TV's?

It is the hope of the student Negotiating Team to answer these questions and any other questions that you may have about the role that students have in decision making and the radical effects of Collective Bargaining on our education.

Blaming the victim

A year ago, Southwest students confronted a serious problem. Bricks and other heavy objects were being thrown from the top floors of some of the high rises.

Fortunately, no one was seriously hurt. But the story of the way the Southwest brick-throwing incident was handled includes some insights about the causes of some problems that you have undoubtably heard many students complain about: the abscence of a real " student community " at UMass, the helplessness of the student body to prevent its interests from being regularly trampled on by the University and the persistence of what others have labeled the " UMass Inferiority Complex."

Before I reenact the solution to the brick-throwing problem- and the curious logic that was used to reach it- let's try to understand the cause of the problem. Why would anyone in his or her right mind risk hurting another student by heaving a brick out a 21st story window?. The answer has to be that someone who would do such a thing is clearly not in his or her right mind at all.

Such and answer, however, only raises more questions. If something was amiss in the lives and minds of the brick throwers. What was the cause?. This question begins to cut close to the root of the matter. The brick-throwers, I suggest, reacted the way they did in response to the inhuman and alienating nature of their environment.

Southwest Residential College, let me remind you, is the second most densely populated patch of concrete on the planet earth(the first is in Tokyo, Japan). It is, for the most part, dirty, cramped, and delapidated. Very little grows there. When former Vice-Chancellor Gage visited Southwest in the summer of 1976, reportedly for the first time in two years, he was so shocked by what he saw that he wrote a strong memo advising that the place be fixed up before the student's parents got a look at it(according to a former University employee).

There is a second dimension to Southwest besides the oppressive physical environment, and that is the oppressive social environment. The terms of life in Southwest are carefully managed by a group of administrators who do not even live there. If this doesn't seem an unusual way to live, compare it for a moment with the complex web of family, church, and community organization relationships that compose a normal city neighborhood(or any human community). Southwest resembles not an urban community, but a city living under martial law.

The social structure, like the physical structure, is a direct consequence of Southwest's founding principles and goals: to cram as many students into as small a space as possible, stretching the monitary and social costs as far into the future as they will reach. The mentality that built Southwest began by thinking of students not as people, but as products rolling off a four-year assembly line.

Now, I do not for one minute mean to imply that brick throwing is ever justified; it is not, even under the worst circumstances. The rigors of Southwest are in no sense an excuse for making things worse. That is not my point.

Nor do I mean to discount the importance of Southwest's various community centers and enclaves of support and fellowship. These groups deserve our respect and, I think, our admiration for even surviving in the Southwest environment.

My point is simply this: given that over 5,000 students are forced to live under the conditions I have described above- which all spring from the initial ideas and objectives behind Southwest- the extensive vandalism, low morale, alienation, lack of community, and even the violence and the brick-throwing, become not only predictable, but inevitable. With this undestanding of the brick-throwing problem in mind, let us consider the solution that the University finally adopted.

Within a few weeks of the brick-throwing incident, the University announced that it would weld steel mesh screens across all the windows in the Southwest high rises. This is an interesting solution to a problem caused by cramped space and an impersonal, almost regimented atmosphere: increase the cramping and regimentation even further. Make Southwest even more restrictive of personal space. And, while this is happening, don't blame the University, whose disregard for the personal needs of the student caused the problem in the first place. No, blame the victems, and make them pay a real physical and psychological price for both the problem and the solution.

According to the Collegian, the students in Southwest accepted the further infringement of their personal space rather meekly. Some seemed to feel so frightened by the prospect of being hurt by a falling cinder block that they were willing to agree to anything - welded windows, armed guards in the halls, TV cameras in every room - to protect them. Others seemed to be so deeply ashamed and guilty that other students would do such a thing that they submitted to the University's solution as though it were some sort of punishment they felt somehow deserved.

In fact, the strategy of "blaming the victim" is so successful that sometimes the victims start to blame themselves. The guilt and self-hate that stem from this are in turn the root of many serious problems in the undergraduate community.

In this column, I have tried to use Southwest as a specific example of what "blaming the victim" is, and how it works.

In my next column, I will try to show how the distorted logic of "blaming the victim" has affected almost everything at UMass, including our own attitudes and relationships with each other. As I have said, this self-deprecating dynamic is a primary cause of many of the things that students say they don't like about UMass.

Woman appeals convictions to state Supreme Court

BOSTON [AP] — Ella Mae Ellison, imprisoned mother of four, appealed yesterday to the state Supreme Court to grant her a new trial and overturn convictions leading to five concurrent life sentences without possibility of parole.

Her attorney, Max Stern, told the Supreme Court legal mistakes had been made and evidence supporting his client's innocence had been surpressed during her 1974 trial.

She was judged guilty of driving a getaway car for three youths during a November 1973 Roxbury pawnshop holdup in which a 55-year-old Boston police officer was shot dead.

Stern said Suffolk County Assistant District Attorney Newman A. Flanagan withheld from the trial statements the robbers made the day they were arrested. He said they did not mention Mrs. Ellison and claimed they fled the holdup in a stolen car.

Assistant District Attorney Robert J. McKenna, Jr., told the five-justice panel he did not know why the statements were not introduced at the trial.

He said the two men made them while under withdrawal from heroin doses the day after the crime when they were arrested in Danville, Va. McKenna said statements made the second day after the crime, when the men spoke in more "sober terms," were introduced.

Mrs. Ellison, 33, became the first woman convicted of first degree murder in Suffolk County in 20 years in November 1974. She has been in Framingham Women's Reformatory. Relatives in Rochester, N.Y., care for her children who range in age from 16 to 7.

A committee supporting Mrs. Ellison's case claims the two robbers implicated her as part of a plea bargaining process giving them lighter sentences.

The committee also claims Mrs. Ellison, a black, was a victim of Boston's tense racial conditions during her trial. The men, who also were black, recanted their testimony in November 1976 implicating Mrs. Ellison and now face a trial for perjury.

They are serving 15-year-sentences for second-degree murder. The third robber is serving five concurrent life sentences for convictions of first-degree murder and armed robbery, the same penalty as Mrs. Ellison. He did not implicate Mrs. Ellison.

She was convicted under a "joint enterprises" law requiring sentencing for murder for all parties to a killing during the commission of a felony.

Decorated Book Papers exhibit at Smith College

An exhibition of "Decorated Book Papers" is currently on view in the lobby of the Neilson Library at Smith College.

On display are modern marbled papers and paste papers used in bookbinding, including such items of local interest as marbled papers made by David Bourbeau at his Thistle Bindery, Northampton; pamphlets from Carol J. Blinn's Warwick Press in Easthampton; and paste paper used by Gillian M. Haven for the binding of a 1973 book from her Isis Press in Amherst.

Among the other items on display are a volume of poetry printed by Virginia and Leonard Woolf at the Hogarth Press in 1923 and Rosamond Loring's "Decorated Book Papers," which, although originally published in 1942, is still the standard book on the subject. The Smith College library copy of the Loring book is from the limited edition with paper samples tipped in as plates.

The exhibition, which was designed to coincide with the current Smith College color festival and the Leverett Craftsmen and Artists' program of lectures and workshops on "The Art of the Book," will be on view through March 25 during library hours.

Your Birthday

TUESDAY, MARCH 7

Born today, you tend to go to pieces over trifles and handle major disappointments well. A person of contradictions, you are often the one who laughs when everyone is silent or horrified, or who cries when everyone is roaring with glee. You are an interesting, sympathetic, completely forgiving person who neither holds nor inspires grudges.

Basically altruistic, you enjoy helping others, sometimes so much so that you may become annoying to those who would rather work independently. You tend to be overzealous. You begin all projects with a passion that may succeed in doing more harm than good to your chances of success.

It may be important to your mental and physical health that you have a partner, in business or in marriage, to look out for you. You need someone to remind you when to rest, when to seek change, and so on. Otherwise, you may do yourself lasting harm.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 8

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) — If your interests are consistent, you should be innocent of the day's confusion.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) — Save your ammunition for larger issues than what arise this morning. Keep discussions low-key.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) — Recklessness may be in order today. You may find a new interest through following a whim.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) — Join forces with those whose interests vie with yours for the attention of higher-ups.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) — Seek companions with similar intellectual and social ambitions as yours. Social progress comes at evening.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) — Efforts to please all of the people all of the time may cause trouble. You may have to choose.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) — Make desires known to friends who can influence in your behalf. Suit actions to possibilities.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) — Conquering fear is a major step today. You can overcome emotional barriers to success.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) — Love and loyalty join to make today exceptional. Friends glory in your efforts.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) — Responsiveness is essential in growing close to one you like. Act and react.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) — You may want to avenge an insult with violence. Don't jeopardize your position.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) — Give credit where it is due, and take it where you think you deserve it. Don't be timid.

Well, if there was anything wrong with the UMass varsity squad this weekend, apparently nobody told the sub-varsity team as Coach Dennis Fenton's little family waltzed to a first place finish and a New England championship. The scoring was highlighted by New England championships by Rich Schriazzi, 118 pounds; and Dave O'Brien, 167 pounds.

Also competing for the JV Minutemen were Dave Daly (118), Louie McDonald (134), Gary Rotatori (142), Joe Marra (150), Mike Mitrowski (158), Bob Smith and Gary Minski (177), and Marty Rogers (heavyweight). As a matter of fact, all of these athletes placed en route to the romp...

Indoor trackmen complete season

By KEVIN McCAFFREY
Collegian Staff

PRINCETON, N.J. — Competition during this year's unpredictable winter season became past history for Coach Ken O'Brien's indoor track squad, as the IC4A Eastern Championships signaled the final chapter of a disappointing season.

"Most of our indoor competitors suffered the same problems," explained O'Brien. "Intersession is a problem with us, as we have the longest holiday in New England. Considering the poor weather conditions and the unexpected flu bug, all we had was three weeks to get in championship form."

The IC4A's were held in Jadwin Gymnasium on the Princeton University campus. After completion of Saturday's and Sunday's competition, Villanova amassed an insurmountable 64 points, with runner-up Maryland a block behind with 39. New England champion Northeastern represented the Northeast with 29 points and third place.

The Minutemen sent seven athletes to the Garden State with the best performances rendered by Joe Martens in the 440 (6th) and Don Dowden in the high jump (tie for 7th). Martens and Dowden were the only UMass performers who qualified for Sunday's finals.

Although hampered by a hamstring pull incurred a week earlier, Martens registered a 49.5 clocking in the qualifying round, which was within .3 seconds of his best time of the year.

"The pull was very low in his hamstring and he said it didn't effect his performance, but certainly the 10 days of training he lost to the injury did," commented O'Brien.

Freshman Dowden rose to the occasion with a championship effort of 6'10" in the high jump. Performing in the same company of world record holder Franklin Jacobs, he utilized the highly competitive setting to clear the bar at a height he previously had never conquered.

"I thought he could go 6'10", said O'Brien, "but what is surprising is that he performed under the effects of two days of competition, which he has never experienced before."

All-American cross country runner Stetson Arnold dropped out after 1 ½ miles in the two mile event. Running in what he cited, "the best condition I've felt all year," Arnold simply appeared to run out of gas.

"Stetson has been taking medication for allergies that have plagued him most of the season," said O'Brien. "He has shown a solid improvement over the last few weeks and I'm very optimistic about his capabilities this spring."

is a question a lot of young people in high school and college are asking. Then, even if you get the finest college degree, where can you use it meaningfully?

Perhaps the answer lies in becoming an Air Force officer through Air Force ROTC. We have many different career areas in which specialists of all kinds are needed. And as an Air Force commissioned officer you can have unequaled opportunity for leadership and management experience, plus an excellent starting salary and benefits package.

Consider Air Force ROTC as a gateway to a great way of life for you. Find out about the benefits of a four, three or two year scholarship that pays $100 a month, tuition, book costs and lab fees. Couple that with what will be waiting after graduation, and you have the answer to what you've been looking for.

Derick's back!

DETROIT [UPI] — Former Boston Bruin star Derek Sanderson has been recalled from Detroit's minor league Kansas City club for a tryout with the National Hockey League Red Wings.

Detroit General Manager Ted Lindsay said Sanderson would get a chance to play against his old Bruin teammates Thursday if he could prove himself in practice.

Sanderson came to the Wings after long bouts with alcohol and drugs and a hospital stay for burns suffered in a kitchen accident. Lindsay said Sanderson's trip to Detroit was an "opportunity" for the former star, who paid his own room and board to work out with the minor league club.

"A chance for him to see where he is at with our team, how far he has come, how far he has to go," Lindsay said. "Maybe he is there."

Sanderson and John Hilworth arrived in Detroit Monday to work out with the NHL team. Hilworth also was called up from Kansas City and Lindsay said he will definitely play Thursday against Boston.

Since Sanderson's first game with Kansas City last week, he has scored a short-handed goal and picked up three assists.

Player of the week

NEW YORK [UPI] — Left wing Bob MacMillan of the Atlanta Flames, who registered four goals and three assists in four games last week, Monday was chosen the National Hockey League Player of the Week by the Professional Hockey Writers' Association.

The 5-10, 185-pounder was acquired by Atlanta along with Dick Redmond and Yves Belanger in a trade with St. Louis last Dec. 12 in which the flames gave up Curt Bennett, Phil Myre and Barry Gibbs. MacMillan leads the Flames in scoring with 27 goals and 28 assists for 55 points.

Jumping for jazz

NEW ORLEANS [UPI] — Pete Maravich, out of NBA action for 35 days with an injured right knee, yesterday participated in his first Jazz practice session, shooting jumpers and practicing layups.

Jazz officials said they were uncertain when Maravich, the league's leading scorer, might rejoin the team.

"We're encouraged," said Dave Fredman, Jazz public relations director. "This is the first time the team doctors have allowed him to do it. Pete won't put any timetable on it. He probably won't know until the day before a game."

The Jazz is 25-22 with Maravich in the lineup, and 5-13 without him.

Maravich injured his right knee Jan. 31 against Buffalo while throwing a between-the-legs pass from midcourt to a teammate.

Sabers tie Bruins

BUFFALO, N.Y. [UPI] — Gary McAdam's 18th goal of the season midway through the third period gave the Buffalo Sabres a 2-1 NHL victory last night over the Montreal Canadiens.

The win boosted the Sabres into a tie for first place with the Boston Bruins in the Adams Division, but the Bruins have played three fewer games.

Skater seeks title

OTTAWA [UPI] — The top 109 skaters from 19 countries gathered in the national capital Monday for the five-day World Figure Skating Championships and defending champion Linda Fratianne of Northridge, Calif., was the top United States hope for a gold medal.

Competition opens Tuesday with the men's compulsory figures. The program concludes Saturday with the free dance.

The 18-year-old Fratianne succeeded Dorothy Hamill to the World Ladies Singles Championship last year.

Volleyball misses playoffs

By STEPHANIE SCHICKLEGRUBER
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's volleyball club fell short of a playoff spot by losing its final two games to Boston University last weekend at the New England Open Volleyball Tournament at Wentworth Institute in Boston.

The Minutemen needed only a split against BU to put them in contention for the tournament playoffs, and they came dangerously close to doing just that.

After losing the first game 15-5, UMass had the Terriers at match point in the second game but allowed them to slip away. The Terriers went on to win in extra points, 16-14.

The Minutemen opened their tournament play with two wins against Boston College, 15-5, 15-11. After building up a head of steam against BC, the Minutemen went flat and dropped two to Rhode Island, 15-8, 15-10. UMass then split with Middlebury, losing 15-9, and winning 16-14. Next, the Minutemen were bit by the Terriers.

UMass co-captain Al Morel said the BU games were "the best we've played all season."

"We were working on a new offense for two weeks," said Minuteman coach Michael Gurk. "And it really worked."

According to Gurk, the "multiple offense" is a recent development in volleyball and is suited for teams with versatile players. Gurk said the new offense fits UMass' style of play.

★ Title IX

UMass's athletic administrators say that if the task force takes a pragmatic approach and assesses equal opportunity progress within the department's budgetary means, its judgement should be favorable. The assessment will focus on women's sports.

Since 1974, the athletic department has made a continuous effort to upgrade the women's athletic program. Prior to 1974 the women's program was under the jurisdiction of the Department of Sports Studies.

The athletic department so far has added five intercollegiate women's sports — cross country, golf, track, indoor track and lacrosse. There are currently 13 intercollegiate sports for women and 15 for men at UMass.

"The next intercollegiate sport at UMass will be for women, without a question of doubt," said O'Connell.

Along with the expanding program has been an increase in funding of women's sports. According to O'Connell, approximately $27,000 was budgeted for women's sports in 1974-75. This year the sum is $68,900.

The increase in money results from an effort to improve the entire women's program, not just the addition of new teams. For example, in 1974-75 women's basketball was allotted $4,400 and women's gymnastics $4,100. This year those sports are budgeted for $10,600 and $15,200, respectively.

"That doesn't include post season travel expenses," said O'Connell. The women's gymnastics team has traveled to the nationals every year since 1971, at an estimated cost of $5,000 dollars a year, according to O'Connell.

The effort to bolster the women's program has forced budget cuts in other areas. Budget reallocations and poor economic conditions forced the athletic department to drop men's JV teams in hockey and basketball. No varsity teams have been disbanded.

"God forbid," said O'Connell at the prospect of dropping a varsity sport. "That's one thing we have stayed clear of up to this point in time. We'll keep cutting back to avoid that."

Before the mid-1970's the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (AIAW) prohibited athletic scholarships. This changed in 1974 and the athletic department at UMass immediately began to grant athletic scholarships for women.

In that year the women's program was given $10,000 for scholarships, but spent only $8,000. Although the program was then in the athletic department, its administration was separate from the men's program. The two programs have since merged and this year $22,300 is committed to women athletes.

"We're relatively new at funding women's sports," O'Connell said. "Four years ago we had nothing in the women's program."

Athletic administrators realized that along with granting scholarships to women, inflation would eventually drain the scholarship fund, the George H. Barber Fund. To avoid this, the athletic department, in the spring of 1975 decided that only four sports would receive scholarship money. From that point on only football, men's basketball, women's basketball and women's gymnastics would receive new scholarship money. The department still honors all scholarships granted to other teams before that time.

This decision was primarily based on the estimation that an average full scholarship (both instate and out-of-state tuition considered) would cost over $3,000 a year by 1978-79.

The scholarship distribution between the four sports is far from equal. Because of athletic department policy and AIAW rules, the men's teams receive a much larger chunk of the scholarship fund than the women's teams.

Football and men's basketball are the biggest money earners for the athletic department, and, because other sports benefit from the revenue brought in, athletic administrators feel they deserve special attention.

Currently, the football team has 56 players receiving full or partial scholarships. Under NCAA rules, 95 football players may receive scholarships. The men's basketball team has 13 players on scholarship, 12 of which are "full rides." The NCAA allows 15 basketball players to have scholarships.

Seven UMass women basketball players receive scholarships, as do six women gymnasts. The AIAW allows women's gymnastics teams to have ten women on scholarship and basketball teams 12 players.

UM sports shoot for Title IX

Editor's note. This is a two-part story on the athletic department's efforts to comply with the title IX ruling. Today's installment focuses on the progress in womens sports. Tomorrow, Part II will assess existing problems in reaching Title IX goals.

By MICHAEL SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

With the deadline for full compliance with the Title IX amendment prohibiting sex discrimination in educational opportunities coming up this fall, athletic administrators here believe that the progress made in womens sports has put the UMass athletic program in accord with the 1975 Civil Rights ruling.

However, problems may arise in areas concerning coaching staffs where full-time coaches for men's sports outnumber those for women's sports thirteen to three, and in sports facilities. Boyden administrators readily admit that the Curry Hicks Building fails to properly accommodate women.

Because of the law's ambiguity, Boyden administrators are uncertain whether these issues will be seen as violations by a federal Title IX task force due here later this year.

Nonetheless, administrators are confident that the advances made in womens sports at UMass will be assessed as having met Title IX criteria.

"We judge ourselves to be essentially in accord with Title IX," said Frank P. McInerney, UMass athletic director. "We've made great progress in that area."

Over the past four years the athletic department has widened the variety of women's sports, increased the funding of those programs and made athletic scholarships available to women in an effort to attain equity in the athletic program.

According to McInerney, "equal opportunity" for both sexes has been the goal of the athletic department ever since women's sports came under its jurisdiction in 1974, and was not instigated by the Title IX rulings.

"We are taking the role of educators and trying to meet student needs. And I think that's what we've done... We're not wringing our hands saying 'We've got to do this because of Title IX'," he said.

Resulting from this attitude is the athletic department's lack of knowledge about the particulars of Title IX. For one thing, many administrators were uncertain when the compliance deadline was.

"I don't hear Title IX being discussed around here very often," said Robert W. O'Connell, associate athletic director at UMass.

The Title IX amendments of 1975 call for equal opportunity for both sexes in all areas of educational institutions. Athletics have been among the most obvious areas where inequity has existed.

The object of Title IX in the sports world is to "provide equal opportunity to members of both sexes interested in participating in the athletics programs institutions offer," according to a 1975 memorandum from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare's (HEW) Office for Civil Rights.

Not unlike the Equal Rights Amendment, Title IX receives a wide variety of interpretations because of ambiguous language. Some insist that the ruling calls for a dollar for dollar parity in men's and women's sports. The UMass Athletic Department disagrees, maintaining that overall equity is the goal of Title IX, not duplicate budgets for men's and women's sports.

"Opportunity is the key," said O'Connell. "The ruling doesn't mean equal benefit in money, but instead calls for comparable programs."

HEW agrees "The point of the regulation," states the 1979 memo, "is not to be so inflexible as to require identical treatment... The equal opportunity emphasis in the regulation addresses the totality of the athletic program of the institution rather than each sport offered."

Freshman wrestler Allen wins heavyweight crown

By STEVE BUCKLEY
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I. — Freshman John Allen capped off an otherwise frustrating weekend for the UMass wrestling team by winning the 1978 heavyweight wrestling crown at the New England Championships at the University of Rhode Island.

Allen, the only gold medalist in the Minuteman lineup, will advance to the NCAA tournament in Maryland in two weeks.

As a team, the Minutemen fell short of their quest for a second place finish, ending up in fourth place. As expected, Rhode Island was the overwhelming first place winner with seven champions. Boston University, although unable to win one gold medal, placed second ahead of third place Connecticut and UMass.

The Minutemen started off hot in the opening round with wins by Dana Rasmussen (118 pounds), Keith Dixson (126 pounds), Charley Rigoglioso (142 pounds), Tim Fallon (150 pounds), Mike Carroll (158 pounds), and Monty Payette (167 pounds). Allen and Larry Otsuka (134 pounds) had been given first round byes.

Tragedy struck for UMass when Otsuka, seeded number one in his weight class, suffered a dislocated shoulder in the opening seconds of his match with Brown University's Brian Leach and was forced to forfeit the match. Otsuka had placed second in 1977 and was a heavy favorite to take first place this time around until the Minuteman co-captain's injury occurred.

Dana Rasmussen and Keith Dixson lost tough matches in the semis, and the loss of Otsuka led to further disaster for the Minutemen. Tim Fallon was upset in his weight class, Mike Carroll lost a close 12-9 bout, and then Monty Payette, leading 11-8 in his match against the number one seed in his weight was pinned with thirty seconds remaining in the contest.

Rasmussen, eliminated in the semis by UConn's eventual champion Joe Viola, came on to win the bronze medal with a hard fought win over URI's Bob DeSteffanis. At the end of regulation time the score was tied 3-3, forcing a three-minute overtime match. Rasmussen scored a take-down in the first period and then added another point in the third period for a 3-0 win. By taking the bronze medal, Rasmussen eliminated URI's chances of capturing medals in each weight class.

Rigoglioso, in his 142 pound match, advanced to the finals with a 15-1 victory over UNH's Nabil Boghos. In the finals Rigoglioso was pitted against two-time defending champion Frank Pucino of URI. Rigoglioso was unable to contain the experienced Pucino although he was able to score eight points. Pucino came away with a 17-8 win and Rigoglioso won the silver medal.

In Allen's semi-final match, he defeated Chuck Murray of Connecticut 9-8, setting up the final battle with BU's Paul Davis.

Allen's victory in the heavyweight division marked the eighth consecutive year that a UMass wrestler has won this weight class. George Ireland took the gold in 1971, and Carl Dambman won in 1972 and 1973. Dennis Fenton, now the assistant coach of the UMass team, won the New England championship in 1974, 1975, 1976, and 1977.

"I think Allen knew that we had taken this weight for seven straight years, and he didn't want to let us down," said coach Dave Amato. "He beat Davis on a basic side-roll. It's not a very advanced move, but it works and Allen made good use of it."

Allen trailed 5-2 in his match, but took the pin at 4:31.

Champions in each weight class were as follows: Joe Viola, UConn (118); Joe Davidson, URI (126); Scott Arnel, URI (134); Frank Pucino, URI (142); Mike Wilner, URI (150); Lee Spiegel, URI (158); Dom Macchia, URI (167); Moe Haislip, URI (177); Bob McNally, UNH (190); and John Allen (heavyweight).

Complete UMass results: Dana Rasmussen (118) def. Devin, Maine 13-5; lost to Viola, UConn 6-1; def. DeSteffanis, URI 3-0 (OT) to finish third ... Keith Dixson (126) def. Banberry, B.C. by fall at 6:44; lost to Thomas, B.U. 16-0; lost to Boghos, UNH by fall at 2:26 ... Larry Otsuka (134) seeded number one, drew opening bye; lost by default to Leach, Brown (dislocated shoulder) ... Charley Rigoglioso (142) def. Traylor, BU 11-5; def. N. Boghos, UNH 11-5; lost to Pucino, URI 17-8 to finish second ... Timmy Fallon (150) def. Salazer, BU 5-2; lost to O'Hara, BC by fall at 5:29; def. Lopillato, UNH 11-0; lost to Harris, UConn 8-5 to finish fourth ... Mike Carroll (158) def. Cerullo, UNH

Fly the friendly skies...

Opening day; I can't wait!

First came the multi-colored uniforms of Charlie Finley's (and hopefully to be sold) Athletics; shocking old timers and diehard pinstripe fans.

Then, nighttime baseball, even night World Series games (excepting Rigley Field and the Chicago Cubs — since they lack one basic necessity — lights). Closely followed by 5 cent beer night in Cleveland.

And now this: the Atlanta Radio Club is attempting to organize a live showing of 'Close Encounters' with a spaceship from Venus, Mars, or any other solar system or heavenly body.

As reported in Sports Illustrated (this week's issue) the club is attempting to get over one million CB operators throughout the world to broadcast the following message: "Living beings who travel throughout the universe from planets other than Earth are invited to make a peaceful landing on Earth at 1920 hours Eastern Standard Time on April 7, 1978. The location for this landing should be Atlanta, Georgia of the United States of America, at the Atlanta Stadium, latitude 85 degrees 25 miles west, longitude 33 degrees 44 minutes north."

It is presumed that by chance, some stray spaceship wandering way above our polluted ozone, will hear this earthling plea, and descend upon this humble city approximately ten minutes before our national anthem (will they stand up?).

This far out idea, no doubt thought up in a hoping Southern disco bar, has not been thought out completely — that is, there are problems if this flying saucer does come to a standstill a few feet behind second base.

Will they be asked for their tickets? The fans in Jimmy Carter's homestate have been known to go nuts on occasion, like any other fans, especially after a few Billy Beers. In anticipation of a possible appearance with the co-stars of "Star Wars", the aliens from another world, the game could be sold out. Are tickets being reserved especially for them?

Won't the astro-turf melt? Spaceships are theoretically run by some sort of nuclear reactor, or another highly-civilized source of energy that human beings haven't conquered. Will the game be held up while new artificial turf seed is planted?

What of the rule changes? Will Bowie Kuhn leave his box seat and truck down to the ship and explain the rule differences of American favorite pasttime and interplanetary baseball? Will Bill "Spaceman" Lee be there?

What if the outer-spacers (spaceshots?) decide to stay for the whole game? Is there an available parking space for their starship, some place where they won't be shipped away by Atlanta Towing (a branch of Amherst Towing), or will their ship be made to hover above the field for two hours — and what if a fly ball hits it; will it still be in play or what?

On the serious side (if I can be serious for ten lines or so) I personally don't feel any F.O. (couldn't be a U.F.O. it would have to identify itself in order to get a press pass) would waste its time to make stopover in a city like Atlanta (or for that matter, a state like Georgia).

Yet, exactly one month from now — a short thirty-one days, something resembling a Bell's pizza package (minus the paper bag and the pizza) is supposed to come floating through the sky, drift in a downwards motion from the cumulo-nimbus clouds, and become the most spectacular beginning to a baseball season since the invention of the aluminum bat (not yet authorized in the major leagues).

If I was in a spaceship cruising along at three light years a minute, this CB nut sending out messages wouldn't quite make my scanner scene.

And I doubt I would transport a shuttlecraft to make a grand entrance at Fulton County Stadium for a dumb baseball game. Hot dog prices have gone sky high since those Fenway Park commercials — not to mention the frosty's!!!

No, I cant see it. Sorry, astrologists, no 'Encounter' on April 7th. I can't wait for baseball season, but I will.

Not for a Braves-Dodger game. Now the Yankees-Sox, ahh.......

DNA slated for discussion

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER — City Council here last night unanimously voted to have its public safety committee meet with the UMass Medical Bio-Hazard Committee to discuss the school's DNA research, which had been conducted for almost three years without the Council aware of the situation.

The school had notified city manager Francis McGrath when it began its research but he did not notify the City Council. The Council also approved the motion to have the city's law department report the powers of the Council regarding safety guidelines, the Council can impose upon the DNA research.

Councilor Jordan Ledy, the sponsor of the motions, said he personally has no stance on the DNA research but he expressed dissatisfaction with the city manager's lack of informing the Council and also the lack of reports from the City Health Director John Smith, who was appointed to the Bio-Hazards committee by McGrath in 1977.

Smith told the Council the committee has met four times and has discussed nothing. McGrath said "I had no intention to keep anything from the City Council." He said "there is nothing wrong with the action I took."

McGrath also said newspaper articles made it look like "a sinister plot". He said he was assured guidelines were being adhered to during the research.

Worcester Magazine originally brought the controversy to light when it reported the research was being conducted without the knowledge of elected Worcester officials and residents. McGrath told Worcester Magazine he decided it was a "health problem" and not of immediate concern to the Council.

The research involved taking DNA from one species and infusing it into the intestinal bacteria from another species.

The same type of genetic research is being conducted in neighboring Shrewsbury at the Worcester Foundation for Experimental Biology. In that community, though, the selectmen regularly get updates from the three residents who serve on the Foundation's Bio-Hazards Committee, Worcester Magazine reported.

The research has been funded by the American Cancer Society since the research began in 1975. The current funding is at $65,000 according to Raymond L. White, assistant professor and one of the eight people involved in the daily research.

Councilor and chairman of the public safety committee John Anderson said "I see good legitimate action on the part of all involved." He said the Council did not necessarily have to know about the Bio-Hazards Committee unless a policy decision was going to be made. He also said the Council should be "quite careful not to raise unjustified fears concerning the research."

Anderson also said he would be happy to meet the Bio-Hazards Committee to discuss the research being conducted.

R.W. Butcher, associate dean for scientific affairs at the medical school, said the researchers "are not contemplating plans to experiment at a higher level." But if they do, he said, they would notify the city.

Councilor David Forsberg, said the issue "has been blown out of proportion." He said he studied the research being conducted and is assured that strict measures are being taken.

Ledy also said he has no problems with UMass. According to correspondence distributed by the city manager at tonight's meeting, UMass has been open about its research and promised cooperation.

Selectmen talk on water pact

By PAMELA LINDMARK
Collegian Staff

Amherst's water supply may at last be secure, as Amherst-Hadley Selectmen last night agreed upon terms within the first draft of a proposed emergency water supply contract between the two towns in a public meeting at Hadley Town Hall.

The contract, whose details have been contested by both Amherst and Hadley town members, specifies terms under which Hadley would be obligated to provide Amherst with water, if it were enacted.

No final decisions can yet be made, however, as the contract must now be approved by town members in respective town meetings.

"We agree to a contract such as this, although both communities must vote to implement it," said John Kolaski, chairman of the Hadley Selectmen. "It is a 'treaty negotiation', only to be implemented as it is with no amendments."

According to terms of the contract resolutions, the town of Amherst would agree to purchase from Hadley a minimum of 30 million gallons of water per year.

Water would be delivered to Amherst in increments of a maximum rate of 0.5 million gallons per day at the times and dates requested by Amherst, under the condition that water for Hadley is available above the base reserve of 2.5 million gallons per day.

Controversy arose among Hadley town members attending the meeting concerning low prices to be charged to Amherst, as well as the need for a specific definition of viable Amherst "emergency situations."

However, Hadley Chairman Kolaski warned, "If we just flatly say no to Amherst, the Department of Natural Resources will allow them to come in and explore for water on their own, considering the water problem throughout the nation.

"Our concern is that we can lose control of the situation. I'd hate to see state government come in and take over."

If this were to happen, Hadley would no longer receive income from the sale of water to Amherst.

Under terms of the proposed contract, a flat rate of $250 per million gallons would be charged for an amount of up to 30 million gallons per year.

Once the amount of water supplied exceeds the first 30 million gallons, a starting rate of $113 per million gallons would be charged, with a permit of $3 increments each year.

Citizens continued to voice objections to resolutions, however, and said that as the contract stood, its ratification in Hadley seemed unlikely.

Amherst Selectman Nancy B. Eddy said she felt Amherst will ratify the contract. "It is in the best interest of both towns," she said.

"Hadley does appear to have an excess of water supplies, and the contract assures the sale and an income for the town. It assures Amherst some needed water."

Selectmen members toasted the contract's success, drinking cider provided by Amherst Selectman William C. Atkins.

Violence feared

Miners may resist Taft-Hartley

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The administration yesterday sought to ease fears of violence under a Taft-Hartley back-to-work order against striking coal miners, but union president Arnold Miller said the government "can expect resistance."

With at least two more days remaining before formal federal court action can be imposed to stop the 92-day walkout, the government worked to set up the Taft-Harley machinery.

President Carter told Democratic congressional leaders over breakfast he is hopeful the miners will go back to work, and that he has no plans to seize the mines as an alternative if they do not.

Labor Secretary Ray Marshall, appearing on a television news program, discounted reports from the coalfields that the back-to-work order may spawn disorders.

"We don't really expect a lot of violence to take place," Marshall said, expressing belief that only a scattering of the strikers are predicting trouble between those going back to work and others choosing to stay out.

But Miller, head of the 160,000-member United Mine Workers, said in a separate television interview that violence is "always a possibility when you invoke the TaftHartley law."

Related story, p. 9

"You always can expect resistance," said Miller. "I don't think anyone can accurately predict just exactly what will happen."

The Bituminous Coal Operators Association issued a statement saying the coal operators "have leaned over backwards to end the strike. All of us must now support lawful efforts to work without rewarding irresponsible conduct."

However, the coal industry ran a full-page ad in the Washington Post saying UMW members "have openly told the American people that 'we may freeze, but you will freeze with us.'"

A special board of inquiry, appointed to investigate the situation and report back to Carter, was briefed in private yesterday by chief federal mediator Wayne Horvitz and aides.

The three-member board scheduled a hearing today to take testimony from officials of the union and the soft coal industry.

Soon after the board reports back to Carter, the president is expected to ask Attorney General Griffin Bell to go into court, probably tomorrow, and seek an immediate restraining order against the walkout.

That would be followed by a request for a permanent injunction during an 80-day "cooling-off" period.

Burgess' death

UMass driver found not guilty

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — Hampshire Country District Court Judge Clement Ferris yesterday found an Amherst man not guilty of driving as to endanger and guilty of speeding in connection with the Feb. 4 accident on North Pleasant Street in which a UMass sophomore was killed.

The defendant, David Sukol, 23, of 543 Puffton Village, had pleaded not guilty to both charges. His attorney, Joanne DeLong of Amherst, yesterday said her client will appeal the speeding conviction to Hampshire County Superior Court.

Sukol was the driver of the van which struck 19-year-old Scott C. Burgess early that Saturday morning as Burgess was running across North Pleasant Street near the Morrill Science Center. Burgess was pronounced dead on the scene of a broken neck by Hampshire County Association medical examiner Dr. Donald B. Rogers.

After hearing the four hours of testimony yesterday, Ferris said he would center his decisions around Sukol's estimated speed at the point of impact, and his ability to see Burgess on the darkened morning of the accident.

District Court Prosecutor Frank Collins repeatedly pressed witnesses as to the quality of light in the accident area. All witnesses agreed the lighting in the area was excellent. Two eyewitnesses, however, said that regardless of the lighting, Burgess had darted into the road so quickly Sukol never had a chance to react and avoid the collision.

One eyewitness, John Shea, a hitchhiker Sukol picked up minutes before the accident, testified that "only two or three seconds elapsed between the time we saw him (Burgess) and the impact."

"We just saw him out in the middle of the road and then it was over," Shea testified.

Another eyewitness, Walter Nemes, a UMass student, testified the victim ran by him on the path leading from the Campus Center to the brick bus stop on North Pleasant Street, and then bolted into the street without hesitating. "It all happened so fast that the van never had time to stop before hitting him," Nemes said.

Nemes also introduced testimony which raised some doubts over Sukol's ability to see Burgess as he left the sidewalk and ran into the street. He said as Burgess ran into the street, he was nearly hit by a car going south on North Pleasant Street. Nemes said Burgess avoided being hit by the southbound car, as he crossed over into the northbound land and was struck by the van.

Both the defense and Ferris suggested that this near miss in the southbound side of the street may have accounted for Sukol's not seeing Burgess before impact.

She estimated the van was traveling between 25 and 35 miles per hour at impact and Nemes estimated the speed to be between 25 and 30 miles per hour.

The posted speed limit for that stretch of North Pleasant Street is 25 miles per hour. Testimony from other witnesses also offered varying estimates at the van's speed.

Inspector Mark Vachon of the Dept. of Motor Vehicles estimated the van's speed to be "no less than 35 miles per hour." Vachon said he reached the estimate based on skid marks and road conditions at the time of the accident.

He also said his estimate did not come from actual figures, since no test was performed the night of the accident. Instead, he said his estimate was reached with simulated figures of what he believed the road's condition to be.

Three Amherst police officers testified that on the night of the accident, Sukol told them he was traveling "between 35 and 40 miles per hour on North Pleasant Street.

However, Sukol strayed from that statement once he was on the stand. He testified yesterday that he told officers "the fastest he could have been going was between 35 and 40 miles per hour.

Sukol told the court that on the night of the accident he gave the police that estimate because he feared punishment for a wrong answer. Testimony also revealed that Sukol's speedometer was not working on the night of the accident.

Shapiro speaks about Red press

By ROB YARVITZ
Collegian Staff

Henry Shapiro, a retired correspondent for United Press International who covered the Soviet Union for 40 years, spoke at UMass yesterday to a class of journalism students about the authoritarian press in the Soviet Union.

Shapiro is on a week's tour of the five-college area and is being sponsored by Five-Colleges Inc.

"In the Soviet Union, the accepted, official idea of the function of the press is that it serves as an instrument, a weapon," Shapiro said. He quotes Lenin as having said "the press is the sharpest weapon of the Communist Party."

The Soviet newspaper, Pravda, published in Moscow and distributed nationally, has the largest circulation to date of any paper in the world, Shapiro said. He referred to it as the most important newspaper in the Soviet Union, and "the organ of the Soviet Party."

Shapiro said he still finds reading Soviet newspapers a tedious process although he's been fluent in Russian for several years.

He attributes this to poor news story organization common in most Soviet newspapers. American newspapers put the basic idea of a news story in the first paragraph. In a lot of Soviet papers, Shapiro said, the basic punchline is often buried in the body of the article.

Shapiro first went to the Soviet Union in 1933 and covered all the major events until 1973 including the rise of Stalin, the purges of the mid-1930's, World War II, the death of Stalin in 1953, and the rise and fall of Khrushchev. He has conducted numerous interviews with top Soviet leaders, including Khrushchev, and Brezhnev.

Shapiro said Stalin granted only five interviews, four of them to American correspondents. Though Stalin was a forceful dictator, he was publicly shy, and ruled mostly from within the Kremlin walls in Moscow, claims Shapiro. Stalin gave his last interview in 1936.

Krushchev, Shapiro said, was a more extroverted leader than Stalin. He had a fine sense of public relations with the press and was famous for his ability to talk continuously on almost any subject. Shapiro said, "when you asked him a question, you didn't get an answer, you got a speech."

Brezhnev, like Krushchev, possessed a flair for public relations, Shapiro said. He added that Brezhnev, just prior to his last trip to the United States to confer with Richard Nixon, granted him a special interview in honor of his long years of service as a foreign correspondent in the Soviet Union.

Throughout the lecture, Shapiro shared occasional anecdotes with the class setting an enjoyably light atmosphere. On one occasion he asked the audience if it knew the differences between capitalism and communism. After a brief pause, he finished the pun — "of course you do, in capitalism man exploits man; in communism it's vice-versa."

It's been said that American newspapers serve to inform, to educate, and to entertain the public. Some have also said its function is to act on as a fourth estate of government; to play the 'watchdog' of public affairs. In the Soviet Union, news must have relative political importance or else it is not news, Shapiro said. Editorials are allowed if nothing critical is said of communist policy, he added.

Shapiro will be giving a lecture at 8:00 p.m. Thursday, March 9, in Rm. 231 Herter. His topic will be "Stalin's Russia."

Why frosh chose UM

Project Pulse, which conducts weekly telephone surveys for Student Services, contacted 140 freshmen last November to determine what influenced them to come to UMass.

Low tuition was cited by 31 per cent of the freshmen as the primary reason for attending UMass. Other major reasons were the availability of a desired major, academic reputation, geographical location, and social life.

Thirteen per cent applied only to UMass, while 76 per cent applied to three colleges or more. UMass was the school of first choice for 49 per cent and the second choice school for 32 per cent of the respondents. Four per cent declared UMass as their fifth choice or lower.

Factors that were of little importance to the freshmen polled in their decision to attend UMass were: the influence of high school guidance counselors, teachers and friends; and the ability to receive financial aid, for which 53 per cent applied and 36 per cent are now receiving. Factors of moderate importance were the size of UMass and the prospect of dorm living.

Nuke broadcast begins

The "Center for Community Access Television (CCATV)" will begin broadcasting over cable channel 3 on Sunday, March 12th at 8:00 p.m. with an eight part series on nuclear power, made possible through a grant from the Massachusetts Foundation for Humanities and Public Policy.

The first program in the series, "Nuclear Power in Our Backyard", was inspired by the Northeast Utility Companies recent proposal to build a major nuclear power plant in Montague. The featured panelists are William Semaine, Montague information officer for Northeastern Utilities, Anna Gyorgy of the Clamshell Alliance Resource Committee, and Blue Carreker, the coordinator for CCATV.

The nuclear power series and the Community Access Center will be opened by Lou Hayward, the Town Manager of Amherst and Nathaniel Reed of the Massachusetts Foundation for Humanities and Public Policy.

Community Access Television is the only cable television station where local community members are in control of the entire operation.

Bargaining group speaks out

By CHRISTOPHER H. SCHMITT
Collegian Staff

The American Association of University Professors, which last year lost the opportunity to represent the faculty in contract talks, now appears to be taking a "we could've done it better" attitude.

The association last February lost a collective bargaining agent election to the Massachusetts Teachers Association.

Northeastern Professors Association Director Martin Lapidus called the teachers association proposal a "disappointment." He made his remarks in a recent letter to local professors association officials. The Collegian was sent a copy of the letter.

Lapidus said the letter contained a "series of recommendations" designed to "obviously" bring the Teachers Association's contract proposals into line with the professors association's standards.

Meanwhile, Massachusetts Society of Professors Chairman Larry S. Roberts said "one might be tempted to say sour grapes" when he was informed of the professors association charges. The MSP is the Amherst chapter of the teachers association.

The professors association said both contract proposals submitted by the UMass administration and the faculty have features which, if implemented, could "inflict incalculable harm" on the University.

"Both proposals were lousy," Lapidus said. "However, (our letter) is not a first shot in a challenge (to the faculty union). We would want the faculty and the University to have a solid agreement."

Lapidus declined to say how the association obtained the contract proposals.

Roberts, however, said Lapidus "doesn't know what's going on. He just sits back in his office removed from the situation."

"It is greatly premature to knock the union or the administration," he said.

The association last February lost the election after a previous collective bargaining election produced no winner. In the earlier election, faculty chose between the teachers association, the professors association, or no agent. The teachers and professors association competed in the run-off election in February.

The major proposal of the administration's contract proposal is the elimination of tenure. The faculty has asked for a 36 per cent pay hike.

Top managerial posts still elude US women

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

Paula Gold, Assistant Attorney General for Consumer Affairs, spoke about women and their lack of power in an International Women's Week event held yesterday.

Gold explained that women do not hold top managerial positions in this country, nor do they hold jobs paying top-level salaries.

"When you look at the facts and see that of the women who make up 39 per cent of the labor force in this country, only 5 per cent hold managerial positions, and only 2.3 per cent of the women in business hold jobs paying more than $25,000 a year, you realize that women do not exercise power," she said.

Gold urged women not to let themselves be intimidated into maintaining a defeatist attitude. "If you never try, you'll never win," she said.

She said she felt "the barriers that exist are qualifications," and urged women to prepare themselves to achieve success. Gold outlined the problems women encounter in non-clerical political and business positions.

"It may be fine to get your foot in the door, as a token, but you should know tokenism is a double edged sword," Gold said, adding women may become locked in positions created just for them. "You should try to get in the door in any legitimate way you can" she said. "If you have to sell your soul to get where you want to go, you won't be free to exercise power," Gold added.

The "Locker room syndrome," as Gold called it, was said to be another obstacle in the way of women pursuing success in business. "People of the same sex feel more comfortable with one another," Gold said, explaining that male workers in top positions may share a social as well as business camera devie.

Gold urged the crowd of fifty persons to be aware of the need for women to create "support networks". She cited law as one profession in which discrimination against women has been dramatically decreased due to a greater number of women in the field, and their mutual encouragement for achievement.

Gold also cautioned women against becoming victims of the "Bitch Phenomenon" in which men chatise women for aggressive behavior acceptable in men. "I was told that I really was a bitch," Gold said. "I realized the remark was meant as a put-down. What the man was telling me was that I should just be a nice little girl."

Gold ended her speech by urging women to "set goals and keep an eye on what you want. Realize that you can't change everyone overnight and concentrate on achieving those goals," she said.

Senate rejects Canal treaty amendment

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate yesterday rejected yet another amendment to the Panama Canal treaties, this one seeking continued U.S. control over a Navy monitoring station in the Canal Zone.

The anti-treaty proposal by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., one of the pact's most active opponents, went down 58-36.

Helms wanted to exempt the U.S. Navy electronic monitoring facility on Galeta Island, at the waterway's Atlantic entrance, from the terms of the Panama Canal turnover so that its operations could continue beyond the year 2000, when Panama is to take full control.

Galeta is part of a chain of monitoring facilities that take position bearings on submarines, surface ships and planes in the Caribbean and Atlantic.

"According to testimony and unclassified data released by the U.S. Navy, Galeta is irreplaceable in its mission and could not be relocated in another country," said Helms.

Sen. John Culver, D-Iowa, disputed Helms contention, saying the Navy considers the facility "a candidate for closure" because of spending limitations.

Both Helms and Sen. John Tower, chairman of the Republican policy committee, acknowledged the Senate is unlikely to approve any treaty text amendments except two designed by Senate leaders to clarify U.S. defense rights in the waterway.

Candidates voice issues

By ROBERT FALETRA
Collegian Staff

Seven of the 16 Student Government Association presidential candidates spoke before the Southwest Assembly last night.

The team of David Barenberg and Susan Birmingham stressed, "the main issue of the campaign is the SGA is not doing its job." Barenberg said the Student Government Association has to be made relevant to students and information must be made public.

Howard Greene, of the Greene and Lawrence ticket, cited the SGA's history of continual blunders and inability to create an interest in student government.

Greene said he is prepared to move the president's office to the Bluewall if that is what it takes to generate student interest.

Jay Flynn stressed the waste of Student Activities Fund money. Flynn said he has seen many people hired and payed without ever doing any amount of work.

Flynn said he will propose a student-run building authority which he said would be a step in insuring that once a building has been paid for by the students, it will then be student owned rather than being turned over to the state.

Donald Bishop said the role of the Student Government Association president is to represent the students needs to the faculty and administration. He said the referendum could be used to see what the students needs are and how they feel on issues.

Steve Ross said, "I am running for president, not co-president," saying the president needs to draw on research and make a decision whereas two people might waste time arguing between themselves. Ross said before he can speak in the students' interest, the students must tell him what they want. And before they can do that they must be made aware of issues.

Ross said he will hold a weekly news conference to let people know what is going on and what is coming up in the student government. He said if people knew what was going on, the controversy over the Black American Music Festival would not have happened.

Bones of man's oldest ancestor found in Africa

DURHAM, N.C. [UPI] — A Duke University researcher recently announced the discovery of the first limb bones from a fox-size ape many scientists believe to be man's oldest known ancestor.

Elwyn L. Simons, director of the university's Center for the Study of Primate Biology and History, said parts of two upper arm bones belonging to the ape were recovered in November during an expedition to the Fayum Depression about 50 miles southwest of Cairo, Egypt.

Simons, who discovered the first evidence of the ape in 1965 and named it Aegyptopithecus, said he withheld announcement of the recent find until a preliminary analysis of the fossil bones was completed.

The expedition brought back the best Aegyptopithecus jaw bones ever found and bones from early monkeys, he said.

Simons said the inch-long bone fragments are from the arms of the animal and are particularly significant because they show part of the elbow mechanism. He said they provide "further connecting links in the history of primate development" and should help reconstruct the physical characteristics of the first apes.

The only living animal with a forearm resembling that of the Aegyptopithecus is the howler monkey, found in the jungles of Central America and South America.

The Aegyptopithecus appeared about 35 million to 40 million years after the first primates, Simons said. After the first discovery of the ape's existence in 1965, Simons headed an expedition two years later that uncovered a skull with well-preserved teeth.

Simons, who is studying the ape with Dr. John Fleagle of the State University of New York at Stony Brook, said the Aegyptonithecus probably was a tree-dweller that was about as tall as an 18-month-old child.

The research project is funded by the National Science Foundation, the Smithsonian Institution's Foreign Currenty Program and the Etyptian Geological Survey.

Upward Bound holds annual 'Community Day'

By TERRELL EVANS
Black Affairs Staff

Former director of the UMass Upward Bound program, Wayne Wilson Jr. was the keynote speaker at the Upward Bound Community Day, held Sunday, March 5.

Wilson focused his speech on the 1977 UMass summer program saying,

"Students demonstrated ever so clearly academic, recreational and cultural enthusiasm. During my tenure at Upward Bound I never witnessed this degree of student involvement in striving for academic excellence."

Presently the coordinator of the Office of Career Development at UMass-Boston, Wilson said the summer '77 program had also been the most difficult and demanding that students had ever faced before.

He began his speech, "Community Spirit" by defining 'community' and 'speech'. Combining these definitions gives "a social chemistry that characterizes to the "T", the Upward Bound I've come to know over the past three years," said Wilson.

Wilson commented that students had defended their right to pursue academic and social harmony by destroying a villain entrenched in our community, known as apathy.

Some students were discouraged he said, but then exemplified students determination by reciting what a young girl had written at the end of the summer.

"Together we are as strong as the hardest rock,
"Together we are as high as the highest mountain,
"Together we are more powerful than any force on earth,
"Together we are Life.

The program opened with a brief welcome from the director of Upward Bound, Rhonda A. Gordon. There was a slide show presentation by Bill James of the past summer program that showed students participating in various academic, cultural and recreational activities.

Elizabeth Feliciano of the New Students Program and Diane Green a Berkshire County caseworker organized old and new students into groups so that everyone would have a chance to meet each other. Afterwards Lee Kohlberg and Ewrin Driskell introduced the new students to the audience.

Carlos Gonzalez, "Mr. Upward Bound" for 1977 spoke on his first semester at UMass. Directing his speech mainly toward the new students he said,

"In college, cutting class is no good because the classes are interesting." He explained that college is nothing like Upward Bound because Upward Bound has restrictions on you and in college you can do whatever you want.

'Ms. Upward Bound' of 1977, Elizabeth Daniels said,

"Upward Bound helps you even if you don't go to college." She remarked that Mt. Ida Junior, the college she now attends has many restrictions, and Upward Bound has helped her to adiust to them.

In closing, Wilson recited the following poem by Dudley Randall.

"It seems to me," said Booker T.,
"It shows a mighty lot of cheek
To study chemistry and Greek
When Mister Charlie needs a hand
To hoe the cotton on his land,
And when Miss Ann looks for a cook,
Why stick your nose inside a book?"

"I don't agree," said W.E.B.
"If I should have the drive to seek Knowledge of chemistry or Greek,
I'll do it. Charles and Miss can look
Another place for hand or cook.
Some men rejoice in skill of hand,
And some in cultivating land,
But there are others who maintain
The right to cultivate the brain."

"It seems to me," said Booker T.,
"that all you folks have missed the boat
Who shout about the right to vote,
And spend vain days and sleepless nights
In uproar over civil rights.
Just keep your mouths shut, do not grouse,
But work, and save, and buy a house."

"I don't agree," said W.E.B.,
"For what can property avail
If dignity and justice fail?
Unless you help to make the laws,
They'll steal your house with trumped-up clause.

A rope's as tight, a fire as hot,
No matter how much cash you've got.
Speak soft, and try your little plan,
But as for me, I'll be a man."

"It seems to me," said Booker T.--

"I don't agree,"
Said W.E.B.

Misunderstanding at Carnegie Mellon causes,

Rhodesian students to enroll at UMass

By ELLEN PLAUSKY
Collegian Staff

As a result of what was possibly politically based misunderstandings, two black Rhodesian students who were expelled from Carnegie Mellon University have enrolled at UMass.

Last July, Robinson Khosha and Henry Mawokomatanda, now enrolled at UMass, were only two of the 240 Rhodesians who answered the newspaper advertisement announcing the availability of the scholarships. "Managerial skills are in high demand in Rhodesia," Khosha explained.

The controversy resulted from a requirement later stricken from the program which required the students to work for the Rhodesian government for three years after finishing their education.

The purpose of the program was to provide scholarships in management to 40 qualified recipients. The students were to spend one year at Carnegie Mellon, and then transfer to a Rhodesian university for one year of studying "real world problems," said Kenneth Service, a representative from Carnegie Mellon.

Rhodesia, where racial segregation is practiced and a white minority rules the black majority, was chosen as the recipient of the program. Service said, "Within time, we feel there will be a turnover in the government of Rhodesia, and we would like to make contributions to the new system in the form of education."

The scholarship program was originally conceived by Carnegie Mellon President Richard Cyert, Deans of the School of Urban and Public Affairs were instrumental in helping Cyert to organize and implement the program.

The scholarships were funded through private organizations, foundations, and Carnegie Mellon itself.

Cyert, and the deans involved, lectured in Rhodesia during the summer to the applicants, before determining, through a series of tests, the 27 who qualified. Of those, 25 accepted. Khosha, 24, an industrial chemist, and Mawokomatanda, 28, a high school chemistry teacher were among them.

While the Carnegie Mellon officials were still in Rhodesia, Carnegie Mellon issued a press release which was the subject of later controversy. It said, "In exchange for training, the participants have a three year commitment to work for the minority ruled government in Rhodesia." This release was printed by numerous newspapers.

The quote was deleted from the contract which the students signed. They had no knowledge of it until they arrived in the United States in late August and saw it in the media, Service said.

Originally asked by Carnagie Mellon to adjust to American life before speaking to the press, the students felt they were being restricted from trying to rectify the earlier media coverage.

In a Roiter's Report issued in December, the students said "they were being made to look like puppets in the program."

Service feels the initial confusion in the press release by the media was in the term "public management positions." An attempt by the public relations department of Carnegie Mellon to correct the earlier release, proved almost futile, for many newspapers had already overemphasized it.

Many of the Rhodesian students began protesting because of the press releases. They were also under the impression that they were being continually misquoted to the press, according to Khosha.

As a result of these disputes, Khosha and Mawokomatanda began boycotting classes in November, along with eight other Rhodesian students. Fifteen remained in the program. Among them were six former workers in the Rhodesian civil service department. Khosha said, "Then we began deliberation with the officials at Carnegie Mellon." "Our strategy," Mawokomatanda said, "was to tell them this program was bad, and it was their responsibility as our guardians to put us in other schools."

Dean Davis tried to convince the Rhodesians to remain in classes explaining to them their options would be better if they did. According to Service, they were warned about this several times.

In response to the situation at Carnegie Mellon, Bishop Able Muzorewa, a member of the United African National Council (U.A.N.C.) issued a press release. He said, "It has been brought to my attention that since September, political divisionists are seeking to discredit and possibly terminate the program at Carnegie Mellon. The program is apolitical, and has the full backing of the U.A.N.C."

As a result of their boycotting of classes, they were expelled from Carnegie Mellon in December. They were told if they were completely unhappy with the situation that they could be given plane tickets home at any time. According to further U.S. media, the press releases here have endangered their lives, should they return to Rhodesia.

One student member of the program, who rebelled has returned to Rhodesia. Carnegie Mellon has reportedly received a letter from him, stating that in his instance there have been no repercussions from the incident.

Still wanting to continue their educations in the United States, Khosha and Mawokomatanda applied for admission to UMass. "We enrolled here because we could start classes quickly." Khosha said.

"The possibility of their being deported back to Rhodesia, after their expulsion was an official possibility, but in my opinion, highly unlikely," Service said.

When asked about the cost of tuition, fees, and housing at UMass, Mawokomatanda said, "An organization responsible for South African refugees is funding our schooling. After two years, they will decide if we can continue our educations here at their expense."

Khosha and Mawokomatanda are graduate students here working toward their doctorages in Chemistry.

When asked about UMass, Khosha contrasted its "quietness" to Carnegie Mellon, which is based in Pittsburg. "UMass can be lonely, though," Mawokomatanda said, echoing the thoughts of many students here.

They spend their spare time among friends. One of them is Tanonoka Whande, an exchange student from Rhodesia majoring in Mechanical Engineering. When asked if he could get in trouble with the government after returning to Rhodesia for being friends with Khosha and Mawokomatanda, Whande said, "It's an honor to know them even if I would get in trouble for it."

"You know," Whande said, "the problem with the Rhodesian government is not "black vs. white," it's the system itself, people don't understand that.

"Now in Rhodesia," Khosha said, "we are united to fight, after fighting, united to stay united."

When they return home, Khosha would like to teach and possibly do research with analytical chemistry. Mawokomatanda would like to work in industry. "But before we can go back," Khosha said, "there must be a change of government, not just officials. Right now the government is waiting for us to return."

Khosha and Mawokomatanda both feel that if they return now, the government will imprison them as traitors. They also agree that there must have been an obvious corroboration between the Rhodesian government and Carnegie Mellon.

Service insists the Rhodesian government was only contacted by Carnegie Mellon to get their approval for the program, nothing more.

Until the change of government Khosha mentioned takes place, they will remain in the United States, with their letters home heavily censored by the Rhodesian government. They appreciate all efforts here for the liberation movement in South Africa. They will work with all groups who support their cause, but not join any of them, as some have conflicting views. They have been called upon to lecture on the Rhodesian situation.

And they will remain here until the political situation changes.

CCEBS

All CCEBS graduating seniors should note that on Tuesday, April 4, a representative from Aetna Life & Casualty will be in the New Africa House. He will be conducting interviews for management trainee positions with Aetna. Students who will be getting their degrees in either liberal arts or business are preferred. These positions have a starting salary of $11,700. Anyone interested should sign up for an interview with Brian Maher in room 209 of the New Africa House immediately. Also, on Wednesday, April 5, a representative of the John Hancock Insurance Company will be in the New Africa House. He will be conducting interviews for various openings with this company. Interested candidates should sign up in room 209 New Africa House immediately.

CCEBS students interested in a career as a Telephone Company executive should sign up immediately in room 209 for the planned field trip on April 11 to the company's Northampton facilities. A free luncheon will be provided on this trip.

All CCEBS students interested in going to medical school should note that on Wednesday, April 19, CCEBS is sponsoring a trip to the UMass Medical School in Worcester, Mass. This trip is crucial to anyone who is considering a career in medicine. Sign up for the trip in room 209 New Africa House immediately.

The Furies of Mother Jones performed by Boston's Little Flags Political Theatre, brought the story of Appalachian coalfields to a capacity crowd in the Student Union Ballroom last night. A cast comprised of individuals of various races and ages showed in dialogue and song how miners have survived, worked and fought throughout the years.

Mother Jones was a voice from the past. She sang, "To be Born ain't the beginning, to die, ain't the end."

She told many stories, one about a children's march from mill towns and mining hollows to the White House. She demanded a stop to put to the maiming of children in the mines and factories and condemned the company bosses to the president. The audience was familiar and applauded many of the Mother Jones quotations.

Faithful to Appalachian traditions, the music was strong. Banjo, guitar, harmonica, solos, choruses and a Barber shop quartet, with a woman member, presented authentic mountain culture.

The strength of the women was portrayed in their response to a company man ordering a character off her land; "Don't girl me... us mountain girls are built to last."

Early in the play, James Oesterich sings a beautiful ballad concerning the washed-out land from the rains and the mining. The play ends with a flood in a mine shaft. After the sirens sound, the miner's headlamps go out and amid the outcries and chaos, Mother Jones says, "They don't die easy."

The Furies of Mother Jones will next be presented in the coalfields of West Virginia and Kentucky, where it originated.

'Lost' women found in writers' workshop

By JILL ERICKSON
Collegian Staff

"Letters and Diaries of New England HIstorical Women Writers," a Women's Week workshop held yesterday, focused on the long forgotten dreams women once lived for and their importance to women today.

Margo Culley, who led the workshop also teaches the class "New England Women Writers," and shared many of their discoveries with the women present.

The class uncovered writers, a woman astronomer, and a sculptor among many other women who have long since been forgotten.

Maude Wood Park was one woman discovered who wrote many plays focusing on social issues, including the theme of suffragettes. Although her plays are stored at Radcliffe College, she remains a lost woman.

In Culley's class, women share a part of the life of the woman they discovered through their studies and, according to Cully, most are looking for someone like Park.

The workshop was inspired by Culley's class, where women have been involved in nontraditional study of women's diaries and letters as part of a nation-wide campaign to discover lost women writers.

The women in the class are discovering more about their own lives by looking at other women, said Culley. One woman remarked, "It (the study) gives us a sense of solidarity with women in other times and other places."

One difficulty in studying these lost women is attempting to dig up records they left behind, said Culley. "Many of these archives are hidden in family attics, historical societies or found through the use of oral histories." As Culley said about her students' research, "most of what they found was by accident."

The workshop ended by having all the women participating in the workshop break into two circles and perform a matrilineal chant. Each woman gave her name, her mother's name, her grand-mother's name and so on for as far back as she could remember.

Older women discuss age

By GRETA GILBERTSON
Collegian Staff

A workshop on "Aging and Growing" held yesterday gave older women an opportunity to discuss women's changing roles in society and the effect of the feminist movement on older women's lives.

The workshop was a panel discussion with five members of the campus group Older Women's Lives (OWLS) serving on the panel. OWLS is a support group for women aged forty and over which has been meeting for over three years.

The younger generation of women is not the only one that has felt the impact of the women's movement. For the women in OWLS, this is a time of radical changes in attitudes and lifestyles that have come to them after years of living with traditional values and roles.

Marion Wadsworth, a member of OWLS, said older women should become more active in asserting their needs and rights as important members of society. Other members stressed the importance of academic and career achievements as an integral part of women's lives.

Panelists reminded the younger workshop participants that growing old is not

No-fault divorce eases dollar worries

By JULIE EAGLE
Collegian Staff

Susan Dudley, Cynthia Holmes, and Virginia Rice are all young, energetic, and recently divorced. But instead of going through what could be years of agonizing court hassles and spending exhorbitant legal fees, the three women each settled their own no-fault divorce cases in only a few months for just over $60.00.

"Taking Charge of the Divorce Process: No Fault and Pro Se," was a panel discussion held by the three women who said they had been taught how to write their own affidavits by two female lawyers who ran a class on divorce offered by Project Self at UMass.

"All three of us decided after some mental tribulations to file no-fault divorce — and we did it without a lawyer representing us," Dudley said.

She added, "I did it myself — and I convey my enthusiasm."

Although they admitted no-fault divorce "involves a lot more paper work, complicates property settlements, and takes about six months longer" than fault divorce in which one party sues the other for a particular injustice, the three women endorsed no-fault as the more preferable method.

"No-fault gave me an opportunity to go in as an equal — and let's you avoid proving you were victimized. I didn't feel I had been. No-fault is the closest thing to saying 'It just hasn't worked out'," Holmes said.

Dudley said no-fault benefits the couple "if they want to remain friends."

When asked what women can do if they are in an unhappy marriage but undecided about divorce, Dudley emphasized the importance of support groups. She said a woman in that situation "needs the support of other women to make her feel she's a more capable person — having that confidence opens the door."

Alternative health care topic of self-help seminar

By DEBBY HANDLER
Collegian Staff

Laura Punnett, facilitator of a Women's Workshop on "Self-help", yesterday introduced women to alternatives to the traditional methods of health care available to them.

The purpose of self-help is to allow women to play an active role in their own health care. Through practicing self-examination and acting as resources for each other, women can demistify the health profession which has held a monopoly on knowledge about women's bodies for so long, said Punnet.

According to Punnet, self-help groups provide a supportive atmosphere in which women can learn the technique of vaginal and cervical self-examination using speculum, mirror and flashlight.

"Learning to do your own pap smear is easier than learning to drive a car," she said.

Self-help groups can focus on many different issues of concern to women. Yesterday's workshop included discussion of abortion, vaginal and cervical infections, DES daughters and contraception.

She added that through involvement in self-help, women can learn to be "in tune with their bodies" and learn to recognize healthy and non-healthy conditions in themselves. "Birth control is a massive experiment," said Punnett.

She stated that "A lot of power comes from our sharing of information and experiences." Many participants in yesterday's workshop showed an active interest in joining self-help groups.

★ Owls on growing old

necessarily a negative experience. Mary Couchon described youth as "feeling like you're fighting inside a paper bag. I've become less afraid of doing new things as I've grown older," she added.

Among the myths about older people refuted by the group, was the myth that "there is no life after forty" and the myth that those who are no longer young have no need for enjoyable activity.

OWLS members said the lack of age integration in American society makes aging a difficult process of adjustment. They attributed the "generation gap" to a lack of open communication between old and young people, particularly in a family setting.

Panelists said they became conscious of their aging through external rather than internal circumstances. They said time seems to go by faster when one gets older.

While the group said it is important for individuals to acknowledge aging as a reality, they stressed the physical process of aging need not affect the mental functioning of those in middle-and-old-age.

OWLS members feel their support group has helped them to integrate their changing values into their lives. Women all over the country are forming such groups to combat the stereotypes applied to older women.

"With age," said one panelist, "comes increased clarity and a greater understanding of oneself and others."

St. Patrick's Day put off

BOSTON (AP) — South Boston's traditionally rousing St. Patrick's Day parade has been postponed two weeks because neighborhood streets are clogged with snow.

Instead of the scheduled celebration Sunday, March 19, the largely Irish neighborhood will honor the saint on April 2.

The real St. Patrick's Day is March 17, but in recent years the South Boston parade has been held on Sundays.

"The parade route will be cleared of snow by March 19," said Walter E. Clark of the Parade Day Committee. "But side streets along the parade route will still be clogged with snow. The extra traffic we always draw would make those streets impassable to fire trucks, ambulances and other emergency vehicles."

WANT INSTANT RESPONSIBILITY?

Being a missile launch officer in the Air Force is an awesome responsibility. But it's an exciting job with leadership opportunity from the word "go".

Air Force ROTC can help you prepare for this exciting field by granting two, three or four-year scholarships. These will pay for tuition, books, and lab fees, and give you $100 a month for some of your other college expenses.

Then, if you can qualify for the missile field, you can work on an advanced degree through special graduate education programs, and the Air Force will help with the expenses.

If you're the type who's looking for an exciting future, a future of commitment and pride, look into this one. See if you qualify to be an Air Force missile launch officer and help perpetuate the traditions that have made our country great.

Flynt fights for life

Two sought as witnesses

LAWRENCEVILLE, Ga. (UPI) — Police issued composite drawings yesterday of a man and woman wanted "as witnesses" in the ambush shooting of Hustler magazine publisher Larry Flynt, fighting for life with a bullet in his stomach.

Despite six hours of surgery, failed to remove the second of two bullets that struck the 35-year-old Flynt on a streetcorner Monday during a recess in his obscenity trial.

"If the pain wasn't so bad, this would be duck soup," he told his wife Althea, 24, during a period of consciousness. He remained in critical condition and rumors persisted that he was paralyzed. A friend said he "couldn't move his toes" but felt pain in his legs.

At a news conference late Tuesday, Gwinnett County Police Chief John Crunkleton was still uncommunicative about the investigation. He released composite drawings of a white man, aged about 30 to 35 with light-colored hair, a mustache and natty clothes, and a white woman about 30, 5-feet-4 inches tall and weighing 170 pounds. Crunkleton insisted police were searching for the two as witnesses and not suspects.

The chief again refused to describe the weapon used — although police have a bullet recovered from local attorney Gene Reeves, also wounded in the shooting. But an officer said privately the weapon was believed to have been a .44- caliber Martin deer rifle.

"We've received a lot of information," Crunkleton said, "and investigated a lot of leads, but all of them so far have proved to be fruitless."

Andrew Jaffe, director of news for Flynt Publication, told reporters that Mrs. Flynt — who is president of the organization —had fired 25 per cent of the staff of its two sex magazines, Hustler and Chic, and the newly launched Ohio magazine in the past few weeks. He said she described it as "getting rid of fat and dead weight."

Crunkleton was asked whether police believed the sniper might be a former employee, and he said "I have no comment."

Crunkleton refused to confirm that police had decided the shots that cut down Flynt and Reeves came from an abandoned hotel across the street from where they stood. He said "we are considering that as highly.....giving that a lot of consideration."

Jaffe and hospital administrator John Hughes did nothing to dispel the rumors of paralysis at a briefing late Tuesday.

Jaffe said a neurologist examined Flynt Monday but "he could not make any determination about paralysis because he was in such pain. We were advised to put this problem aside — it is not of pressing medical concern. We are trying to get the patient through the shock" of two sessions of surgery.

Hughes said that Flynt was still in critical condition in the intensive care unit. He said Reeves, 47, had been taken off the critical list and was in satisfactory condition.

The millionare publisher from the Columbus, Ohio, suburb of Bexley was shot twice. One bullet passed through his body but the other remained in his stomach. Jaffe said it would have to be removed later.

Flynt's 24-year-old wife Althea, looking haggard and disheveled, spoke briefly with newsmen in the hospital lobby. "Larry was able to hold a semi-conversation with me," she said. "He's a lot better today than he was yesterday."

Mrs. Flynt said she thought police "are doing an adequate job, and they are keeping me informed."

The hospital lobby began taking on circus aspects. Al Goldstein, publisher of Screw, arrived in a bullet-proof vest. Throughout the day a man identifying himself as Michael Hood, a disciple of the swami Paranahansa Muktananda, and two female companions stood stiffly at opposite points of the lobby, their eyes closed, their bodys swaying. They said they were exerting healing powers for Flynt.

Moments before Mrs. Flynt appeared in the lobby, Hood began swaying back and forth and yelled "Larry Flynt! The power of God is invested in me. Get up and walk and come in here!" Two policemen grabbed him and took him to jail, where he was to be charged with creating a disturbance. The two women remained in the lobby, swaying.

Exam leak probed

BOSTON (AP) — The state began probing a report yesterday that advance copies of the civil service exam taken by 13,930 prospective firefighters last Saturday were sold to at least 12 individuals.

But the man heading the investigation, State Police Capt. Peter Agnes, said the probe would only be "a fishing expedition" unless the newspaper that obtained an advance copy of the test cooperated.

A copy of the leaked test was shown to The Boston Globe, the newspaper reported yesterday.

Jack Driscoll, assistant executive editor, said the newspaper would not provide Agnes with any information connected to its report.

"We do not turn over any materials as a matter of policy," Driscoll said.

The individual who provided the newspaper with the test said he had received it from a friend in early February, the Globe reported. The friend had paid between $25 and $50 for it, the source told the Globe.

The tests results, which will not be available for several weeks, will not be invalidated unless Agnes' investigation substantiates the cheating charges, according to Administration and Finance Secretary John R. Buckley.

A decision is expected this week or next week, Buckley said in an interview.

People who pass the exam will be hired to fill approximately 1,185 positions in fire departments across the state in the next two years.

on the budget stage and the Committee for Rents and Fees will discuss the present position for the funding of the Student Government Bus System.

The Academic Affairs Committee will brief the senate members on the current status of the Course and Teacher Guide and whether the guide will be ready for publication this spring. Government Affairs will discuss who will be working at the election. There is also the possibility that the talent for the Black American Music Festival Spring Concert will be debated.

Some of the proposals waiting to be discussed at tonight's meeting are:

The proposal to eliminate the Board of Directors of the Student Organizing Project and instead place the responsibility with the senate. Another proposal would allow students from academic departments to send representatives to the senate. There is also the proposal for the reorganization of the Student Government Association structure.

This is the last senate meeting to be held before the Spring Break. The meeting for next Wednesday has been canceled due to the senate elections. The next senate meeting will be held on March 29.

Coal miners afraid serious trouble brewing

(UPI) - They grumbled that the "yellow dogs" may be coming again.

From Wade's Barber Shop in Harwick, Pa., to Betty's Place on Cabin Creek in West Virginia, striking coal miners yesterday felt serious trouble was brewing.

And they were no less angry at President Carter than UMW President Arnold Miller.

"Carter is no better for the government than Miller is for the miners," said Nick Hatalski, 53, who went into the age 15, 37 years ago, and has no intention of going back until the government takes them over.

While the president's men worked toward an injunction under the Taft-Hartley Act that would order 160,000 miners back to work, the rank and file of the UMW showed no signs of going peacefully back to the pits.

"What can they do to us?" asked Hatalski.

Hatalski remembers how in 1928 the coal companies in the hills north of Pittsburgh hired strike-breakers on horseback — "We called them yellow dogs" — who were given to bashing heads with nightsticks.

He was four, he said, when one of those riders of the "Coal and Iron Police" slapped his mother off the porch of the barracks where the strikers and their families had been herded.

"She died three days later," said Hatalski, who will be 53 Friday. "Are they going to do that to us again?"

That is not likely, but some non-union coal companies were passing out guns and planting booby-traps on their property even while Labor Secretary Ray Marshall was telling a television news program, "We don't really expect a lot of violence to take place."

"I personally know of six mine operators who have placed dynamite along the perimeter of their property," said Rex Corn, an official of Low Sulfur Coal Co. in Pike County, Ky. "If officials don't act decisively to prevent a confrontation, there could be a severe loss of life."

In Dilles Bottom, Ohio, Bill Lamb, a member of the UMW executive board, sent a telegram to President Carter urging him not to "bring undue pressure to bear on the coal miners of this country."

One Ohio miner, who didn't want to be identified, said he had considered returning to work but his life was threatened. "My family had to leave home," he said.

"It is too dangerous to go back to work," the miner added. "Can President Carter protect me?"

John Forbes of Shadyside, Ohio, was in the mines in 1950 when President Truman invoked the Taft-Hartley Act.

"There was sabotage, machines always breaking down. People were saying, 'Well, it's just an accident.' But we knew better.

"The coal miner is like a mule. If you kick him hard, he's going to lay down."

Carter sent telegrams to the governors of coal states urging them to maintain order.

"I was hoping he would request federal troops be called up and placed on a 24-hour guard at coal facilities," Corn said.

The effects of the 92-day strike continued to spread Tuesday.

Comic contradicts Women's Week

To the Editor:

We were very disappointed when we read Rob Ranney's cartoon "Wally Dorf" in yesterday's edition of the Collegian.

It's a pity that after all the effort truly motivated people have put into making Women's Week possible, their labor should be debased by a piece of carelessly written trash. We can't understand how the time spent by the Collegian staff in making an extensive layout of Women's Week's goals, events and happenings can be so ridiculed by a useless cartoon that besides being malicious in nature is completely lacking in humor.

Rob Ranney's prejudices seem to be limited not just to the "optimistic liberalism" of women, but to all women in general.

Michelle O'Brien
Rima Molis

Editorial content inconsistent

To the Editor:

Rob Ranney's "Wally Dorf" cartoon in the March 6 issue of the Collegian has, at the same time, set the struggle against sexism back several notches and reiterated the intense need for programs such as International Women's Week. It is disheartening to see that the Collegian continues to print material that can only be detrimental to the causes of IWW. The rash generalizations and stereotypes portrayed in the cartoon are the result of the ignorance of one man about such an important issue as sexism and the feminist movement.

The Collegian Board of Editors stated on their editorial page Monday that, "the feminist movement is as diverse as the women involved in it. It touches the lives of women of all races, socio-economic backgrounds and sexual preferences." Yet they proceeded to print a cartoon that depicts women involved in the feminist movement as lesbians and black, militant Angela Davis types.

The struggle against sexism here at the University is a difficult one made no easier by entrenching in the student reader's mind such stereotypes as were depicted in the cartoon. The aforementioned editorial went on to say that "you need look no further than commercial television where programs and advertisements portray women in stereotyped and demeaning roles..." I posit that one need do no more than turn the pages to find such examples of sexism. On the one hand the editors have, in a fine editorial, condemned sexism and supported International Women's Week while on the other hand have allowed Mr. Ranney's cartoon to be printed.

I am asking the Collegian to submit a written retraction and in the future apply more scrutiny in deciding what should appear in their pages.

As for Mr. Ranney, I suggest that he attend some of the conferences, speeches and workshops offered during International Women's Week. He may then realize the inherent wrongness of his cartoon and the norms or values that would lead him to write it.

Strip should not be censored

To the Editor:

It seems that Americans enjoy freedom of the press. That is, those Americans who own the presses.

For Friday, March 10, Rob Ranney drew his customary "Hot Damn It's Friday" comic strip. The Collegian has chosen not to print that strip. Most of it was written by two women. Many other women, as well as men, found the strip humorous, or, at worst, dumb. A few people have found the strip disturbing. We have shown the strip to a significant number of people [68]. Those offended are a minority [14]. We realize that people have varying tastes, but we feel that it is up to the reader, ultimately, to decide what s-he would like to read. We are insulted by the Collegian's need to protect us from any form of humor. After all, it is only the comics page, and not a serious editorial.

In the past, the Collegian has printed material which was potentially controversial. Two examples are Steve Laffler's depiction of a charred Bursar's Office teller and Dick Jansen's castration "joke". Some people were offended by each of these strips. We, on the other hand, support the right of each regularly published cartoonist to fill her-his 13-and-a-quarter square inches with whatever s-he deems appropriate for her-his strip.

We are more offended by the censorship than by the comic strip itself.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

Letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages. They should be sent to the Executive Editor, co-o the Collegian, or dropped off at the Collegian office.

All letters are subject to editing for either content or space according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed. Letters for a specific publication date must be submitted by 4:00 p.m. on the day preceding that date.

Mid-winter Pepperland in New England

Damon Thomas

It has been a month since the time of the heavy snow storms of early February, the "Blizzard '78" that paralyzed New England and effectively shut down three states there, including Massachusetts. Yet it is interesting to reflect on what the storms brought and what we as people regained and then relinquished during that period.

There is a sort of mystical, fairyland quality about snow. Each snowflake dances about as it drifts downward from the heavens, settling on the earth and the roofs and the trees, keeping company with a trillion other snowflakes, all different from each other.

The landscape, blanketed by a virgin white covering, imparts to the observer a quiet, gentle feeling of childlike innocence and purity. For snow hides a great deal of ugliness that would normally be sensed. And snow, it seems, beckons us to come out of the confinement of our overheated offices, homes, and classrooms; it invites us to baptize ourselves in its purity, to roll about in it and laugh and play.

> People discovered, though it was only for a few short days, a sense of community that arose out of dealing with a common crisis. People, however unwillingly, abandoned their useless cars and...

Of all the things that have happened to man, perhaps the deepest and least understood is his loss of the land, of weather, of growing things, and of the knowledge of his body that these things give. One thing that is certainly lost is the ability to adapt to physical circumstances. As February's blizzard has illustrated, a storm can disable a city, even a whole state or region; this is said to be because our technology is so interdependent and therefore so vulnerable. But it must also be true that human beings have ever less ability to cope with any new circumstances.

As the highways became impassable, as cars died in their tracks, as schools and work places were forced to shut down, people were displaced from their routines. This meant, in one sense, that they could not depend on some things which have come to be regarded as necessities (especially cars) since Mother Nature rendered them useless.

This "state of emergency" also meant, for many people, that the only thing to "do" was to go out and face the harsh elements; there was now time to shovel the snow, play in it, walk to the store in it.

What was it that we saw was happening? People discovered, though it was only for a few short days, a sense of community that arose out of dealing with a common crisis. People, however unwillingly, abandoned their useless cars and took to the streets by foot. In doing so, they came face to face with neighbors and strangers (oftentimes one and the same). Many people "rediscovered" walking. They saw, smelled, heard, tasted and felt their neighborhoods for the first time in ages because for the first time in ages these people travelled about not in the sterile comfort and "security" of their automobiles, but upon sleds, skis, and their own two feet.

There it was — people opening up to each other and to themselves, helping strangers carry their groceries, businessmen helping children to erect snowmen. This was not a glimpse of Pepperland from the Beatles' Yellow Submarine; this was Haverhill, Mass., Boston, Mass., Providence, Rhode Island.

But, like Pepperland laid waste, this frolicsome little dreamland eventually faded away, thanks to the diligent efforts of city workers and their Blue Meany bosses who capitalized on the storm by appearing to assume some sort of control (though they themselves were apparently the most mystified as to what to do next). The roads were eventually cleared for that Great God of American Culture — the all-powerful Automobile — and people once again came in off the streets. Society was back to "normal" and it was now time for everyone to get back to business and to literally stop playing around.

It is interesting that we should have to depend upon crisis situations to unite us.

Interesting, when one realizes that all around us everyday are crisis situations which we fail to respond to, either because we feel powerless to do so or because we feel we are not affected by them. We can sense the immediacy and severity of a snowstorm, and we react quickly and without hesitation.

Maybe for other issues the problem at hand isn't as apparent. It is interesting, too, that only during crisis periods can we, in the situation's own unique way, be genuinely human and relate to each other on a warm, personal basis.

Well, the storm and the subsequent shutdown were fun while they lasted (except for those families who lost homes, property, and loved ones on account of the storm). Much of the snow has now melted, and "Blizzard '78" is now part of our past. But so is the expression of human feeeling and solidarity that surfaced only briefly, until things once again returned to "normal".

Leaky racial awareness

By KENNETH S. SHAIN

Every campus, it seems, has its fixtures. You know, those faces in the crowd that never seem to go away, those persistent personalities that hang on to this campus year in and year out, fingering every pie and having nothing (except in some rare cases a PhD.) to show for it. The only time trouble ever arises is when one of those fixtures leaks. Uncorrected, these leaky valves of misinformation and disorder can become open gushing faucets of ignorance and deception.

In Monday's Nummo News, one of these fixtures sprang a leak. In "Why We Need The Whole Truth", an article dedicated to "clearing up a major contradiction on this campus," Mr. Nkrumah Olinga, a "social analyst and concerned individual", contributed greatly to not only the growing reservoir of misinformation about the Puryear-Bromery conflict, but in doing so, helped to perpetuate the very racism he claims to be against. For the time being, I'll try to identify the leaks for you, but seeing as this article, far from clearing up major contradictions, will succeed only in putting pressure on the pipes, please stand by for the gush...

Leak number one: You can always tell a leak when the pipes are wet. Olinga, in his article, legitimizes a racist expression by referring to Bromery as a "house Nigger". By capitalizing the "N," Nkrumah has further legitimized (canonized?) the term and has made it seem not only appropriate to use, but in this case, downright poetic. Being Black himself is no excuse; Olinga must know that when whites see something like that in print, especially if the pen-hand was Black, it reinforces their racism, not minimizes it. This particular usage slanders not only Bromery, but the entire Black community as well. By using racist language, whatever his excuse, Mr. Olinga reinforces the language of the oppressor he so vocally opposes.

Leak number two: From a drip, we move to a trickle. Here a gasket is blown as Nkrumah tries to sweep the basic underlying issues between Bromery and Puryear under the ever useful carpet of opportunism. By accusing Bromery of firing Puryear simply because he wanted to be president of the University is showing both a gross disregard for the issues and proven the depthlessness of his method. Responsible analyses must go to the root of a problem. By not considering the fundamental differences between Bromery and Puryear, Olinga obscures the very contradictions he is allegedly clearing up by giving the appearance that nothing is going on except people's self-interests.

On the issue of racism, definite and distinct differences exist between Bromery and Puryear. From these differences arise the real and practical way in which these men deal with the problem, both on campus and off. Bromery, not unlike Andrew Young, would like to show the world that capitalism can work without racism. By recognizing the historical source of racism as being within the system, Bromery defines racism as a social problem which can be alleviated through various social programs. This position identifies the source of racism, but in advocating "cosmetic" changes to the system, closes itself off to alternatives to the system.

Puryear, on the other hand, sees racism as having little or nothing to do with the system. Racism, in this view, stems not from capitalism but from industrialization and assumes a psychological character only negotiable through changes in consciousness. In this analysis, racism loses its historical link and gives way to various "post-industrial" arguments about racism and human nature. By failing to recognize the source of racism, Puryear's view, however critical, also denies capitalism any alternative.

Clearly, there is a genuine and definite difference between their positions. One deals with racism as a social problem, the other deals with it as a psychological problem, but neither deal with the economics of racism. I suggest that any young freelance analyst out there who wants to study this case, start from here, the economics of racism before elaborating any further on any real or imagined contradictions, lest you be caught running at the joints.

Leak number three: This is a cracked mainline with a steady stream that has all the potential for flooding one revolutionary basement. By claiming at the end of his article that Bromery has lost the support of the progressive elements on this campus as a result of dismissing Puryear, Olinga leaves himself open to a gaping and inquisitive "who?" Most progressives, recognizing the wide theoretical gap between these two men, refused to get involved in the dispute. Any genuinely progressive position on the dispute should be based on a critical examination of both men's theories and policies. Olinga does this campus a disservice by trying to play one off against the other. In struggle, we must subject everything to ruthless criticism, not just the things that we don't like. It is a sham to champion one over the other and a shame not to critique them both.

Like the classic debate between A. Phillip Randolph and W.E.B. DuBois, the dispute between Puryear and Bromery is not without its political and historical significance. To get carried away with one to the exclusion of the other is to miss the point of the role of ideas in history altogether. As the new strategies on the Black agenda of the sixties and seventies were forged out of a critique of Randolph and DuBois, so too should the strategies of the eighties follow forth from the criticism of Puryear and Bromery. If through racism, slander, and misrepresented "facts", Olinga thinks he can impact history, that's fine. That is his embarrassment. However, if he thinks that this strategy of division will work, he underestimates the power of our mighty bilge-pump pens.

Well, as you can see, I'm no plumber, but besides having a way with words, I know a leaky fixture when I see one. Drip, drip, drip it goes, on into the night. The trouble is, the only person who knows how to stop the leak is the person who installed the fixture and unless he or she comes to replace or repair it, we're stuck. In the meantime, get out those pens! A deluge awaits us.....

Consequences for every choice

Frank Denton

The onslaught of midterms is barely begun. Students still have time to cultivate the excuses which will fertilize their egos after major exam. While many students are not prepared to work, these same students are not prepared to flunk, either. Apologetics have become the rhetoric of the University.

Pathos of the rationales would make even the hardest of hearts murmur.

"I was in an altered state of conscious when I studied; I needed a joint to retrieve what I knew."

"I'm protesting the capitalistic competitive system, so I didn't study."

"It was a high curve — it's a major's course."

"My dog urinated on the crib sheet."

However, we come by our rationalization honestly (try using that excuse sometime). The highest officials in the land have finished playing Truth or Consequences and commenced playing Truth or Dare. They have discovered, like Nixon, that the more curule one's seat, the greater the immunity one has. If a bank clerk had done what Bert Lance did, he probably would have been boiled in oil.

This phenomenon is visible on campus. The most outrageous statements made come from student senators. These representatives, while blasting policies and politics, manage to justify having a no-show job system that rivals work-study in scope. They have risen above the consequences.

And what are the consequences? Why does such violent and vituperative protest arise when someone receives their just deserts? Why, indeed?

Recently, a Collegian columnist walked into the Southwest dining commons. He was dappled with ink from the previous night at the presses and he carried no student I.D. When he was refused admittance, something he could have anticipated, he began launching chairs. He was placed in Northampton State for observation. Most vigorous remonstration ensued. Justice, you see, was being abused.

Shortly after that columnist was released, he took the liberty of oxidizing dessicated weed in the campus center, when what to our wondering eye should appear, but a police officer with a glowing career. In retaliation for the brutal arrest (brutal because it was an arrest), our writer trounced enthusiastically upon the car of said officer. Once again, the hackles of outraged activism was raised as the poor victim was replaced in the institution at Northampton.

The incarcerated author made a choice. Now he is reaping the aftermatch of that choice. Although he is not objecting, a number of students are. To defend his stance as an expostulation is ethical. To demand clemency from prosecution for his infractions is not.

The prime function of civil disobediance is to display that one is willing to pay the price for violating a mandate. Should the penalty be retracted, this stance would lack the force of conviction. For instance, if one is really supportive of the Seabrook protesters, one will not curse the state for jailing so much as to admire those with the courage to go to prison for their convictions.

Does anyone still believe in punishment to fit the crime? Does anyone still believe in punishment? This campus is up in arms over the peccadillos of Carter, Dukakis, and the Board of Trustees (not to mention Whitmore). When it comes to one of our own, however, we simply cannot see our way clear to punitive correction.

Real justice, I am told, is blind to social differences. I am here to say that to speak of justice on this campus is to speak of hypocrisy. It is the hypocrisy of refusing to acknowledge the disobedience of civil disobedience and refusing to be civil about it.

We must learn that justice is impartial, even to us.

Our entire perspective of what is right is colored by what WE want to see done the way WE want it done. There ARE consequences to every choice: excuses are useless. If one monkeys with the fiddler, one should be prepared to dance to the music.

Write letters for murdered dolphins

To the Editor:

On Friday, Feb. 24, 1978, over a thousand dolphins were murdered off the island of Iki in the Pacific Ocean. As I write this, I am looking at an aerial photo of the beach where the bodies have washed up and lie rotting in the sun. Their killers were Japanese fishermen who, with approval from their government, herded the animals to land and mowed them down with machine guns.

Dolphins are referred to as "gangsters of the ocean" by the Japanese fishermen, whose nets are sometimes ripped by the dolphins as they feed on the tuna the Japanese catch. No doubt this results in a loss of income for the fishermen, but it does not excuse or explain their cold-blooded murder of an entire herd of these intelligent, friendly animals, or the acceptance of the Japanese government of such deplorable crime.

The rest of humankind has got to show Japan that we will neither condone nor tolerate such disregard for life. Concerned persons can write to the Prime Minister of Japan, and refuse to buy Japanese tuna or the many other products that flood the American market. Boycotting can be emphasized by writing to the company whose products you refuse to buy. If we take a stand now, such killing may be stopped in the future.

The leader of Japan is: Prime Minister Takeo Miki, Embassy of Japan, 2520 Massachusetts Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20008.

Thank you.

Concern for quality education

To the Editor:

Students United for Public Education [SUPE] is seeking the support of all RSO groups to request an open meeting of the Board of Trustees at the UMass-Amherst campus on April 5, 1978 so that they may hear student views on crucial educational issues. The Board, as our administrative body, is responsible for fighting for the interest of UMass. In order for the Board to make decisions regarding the "needs" of students, they must first find out what we think!

The proposed hearing is particularly important at this point because there is a real attack on public education in Massachusetts. The attack has come in the form of budget cuts, tuition increases, abolition of tenure, "vocationalization" or "professionalization" and reorganization proposals which include all of the above for the state college and university systems.

SUPE is an RSO group concerned with the quality of public higher education. We believe that education is a right and not a privilege. An education must give all people the tools they need to understand their world in addition to specific career training. A public university is the only place where all students, black, white, hispanic, Asian — working class and middle class can attend in large numbers. Therefore we must fight to guarantee that the public universities can survive and provide high quality education. SUPE's program is:

No budget cuts, no tuition increase,

No public funds to private schools,

No to the parks plan for reorganization (or any smiliar plan),

No faculty or students on budget cutting committees.

We are asking all RSO groups and concerned individuals to support our demand for an open meeting of the Board of Trustees. We don't ask that you necessarily accept our program, but we would like your endorsement for an open meeting. If there is not sufficient support of the student body for this hearing, the Board will either deny or postpone the meeting until the summer when we, as students, will not be able to make our views known. At this point, the Long Range Planning Committee [a sub committee of the Board of Trustees] has agreed to meet with SUPE in mid-March. Based on this meeting, the Long Range Planning Committee may determine whether or not to recommend that the whole board has an open meeting. SUPE would like to go to this March meeting with broad based support from the campus for an open meeting at which many students may speak.

If you are concerned about quality public education and support us in our demand for an open meeting of the Board of Trustees, please contact us. Our box number in the Council Chambers is No. 464, or you can find us at our table in the Campus Center Weds-Fris. We also invite all RSO groups or interested individuals to a meeting this Thursday night, March 9th at 7:30 p.m. in CC 802. At this time, we can more fully discuss the content of our program with you and what we can do about it. THIS ATTACK IS ON ALL STUDENTS AND WE MUST ACT TOGETHER NOW.

A logical reason for apathy

To the Editor:

On March 6, I attended the SGA Presidential Debate held in the Campus Center Auditorium. I believe that the purpose of this debate was to allow students the opportunity to listen to the various candidates discuss their platform as well as their opinions on central issues concerning the University. This so-called debate turned out to be a complete farce and injustice to the candidates running for SGA president. A small percentage of the twenty-five students who attended this program armed themselves with coconut pies and noisemakers. This small percentage of students rudely interrupted candidates during their five minute opening statements with noisemakers and pie throwings. These events continued for a period of forty-five minutes, until the moderator was attacked with a pie. This finally brought an end to all this chaos.

The attendance of twenty-five students, out of a undergraduate class of over thirteen thousand, proves that the debate was not adequately advertised. Maybe it was a good thing that a lot of students did not attend this circus, because they would begin to accept the role of Student Senate and SGA president as a joke. The debate, which was sponsored and run by the Student Senate, had the responsibility to maintain proper order during the candidates' statements. Isn't it a logical reason why students are apathetic towards student government and policies, when there is no display of leadership from the Student Senate.

Farmers continue campaign

(UPI) - Striking farmers in the nation's midsection yesterday passed out pamphlets, bumper stickers and sometimes coffee and sandwiches, urging truckers to cease delivery of food supplies "to make sure Congress knows we're still out here."

Two freight trains also were stopped in West Texas by the dissident farmers and another group said they would close the international y at Nogales, Ariz. A food distribution warehouse was blockaded in Missouri.

A leader of the American Agriculture movement, which started a nationwide strike in December to protest low farm prices, said the farmers wanted to put pressure on food supplies and force Congress into action.

"We're trying to disrupt the supply of food to the grocery store," movement leader Mike Paschel said in Hereford, Texas. "We don't want to starve anybody. We'd just like to get their attention.

"We want to make sure Congress knows we're still out here."

The farm strike had been relatively quiet since hearings began in several congressional committees this winter on new farm legislation. The farmers previously had blockaded food distribution centers and grain and livestock markets to get their point across.

But last week about 200 farmers were arrested when they tried to block a port-ofentry at McAllen, Tex., to protest importation of Mexican farm goods. American Agriculture leaders promised a renewed nationwide protest for the following week.

The informational pickets were set up yesterday at state ports-of-entry at Texico, N.M., and Belle Fourche, S.D., as well as along highways outside Lubbock and Lytle, Tex. Two Burlington Northern freight trains were stopped by farmers at Kirkland, Tex.

'No nukes' may become a reality

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A federally funded study under way in California suggests the United States may be able to scrap nuclear energy and rely heavily on solar power without seriously disrupting the nation's life style or its economy, Ralph Nader said yesterday.

A preliminary report on the study said California technically might achieve energy selfsufficiency within 50 years, without relying on either oil or atomic power, through conservation and heavy use of renewable energy sources.

The document said the state could achieve that goal in 2025 while maintaining its present living standards, almost doubling its 1975 population and realizing a Gross State Product almost four times larger than that of 1975. It warned, however, that severe suburban sprawl and environmental impacts might result.

Nader said the the Energy Department, while not trying to suppress the heavily qualified initial report, has done nothing to make the public aware of findings in it that "severely tested" arguments against the widespread use of solar and other alternate energy sources.

"If these preliminary findings are upheld it could be a serious blow to atomic power and a major impetus to solar power for California," Nader told a news conference. "It is clear that while this report uses California as a model for investigation, the implications travel far beyond its borders."

The manager of the study, Paul Craig of the University of California, joined Nader in the news conference and said a refined intermediate report due out in a few weeks upholds the major conclusions of the preliminary report.

Energy Department officials sponsoring the study, who also were at the news conference, said the preliminary report got no publicity when it was published in September because it was issued strictly for comment by energy experts across the nation.

"To explore future alternatives is to place one in the position of being almost certainly wrong," the report warned. But it said a growing awareness of social and environmental impacts from conventional power sources creates a need for more careful analysis of turning to alternative sources.

US charges Soviets

GENEVA, Switzerland (UPI) — The United States yesterday accused the Soviet Union of continued religious persecution and discrimination against Jews.

U.S. delegate Edward Mezvinski, in a statement to the U.N. Human Rights Commission, also called for an investigation of human rights violations in Argentina and Chile.

Mezvinski said the United States is "deeply troubled" by eports of "religious persecution and anti-Semitism" in the Soviet Union.

Mezvinski also condemned "the arrest of 15 Soviet citizens whose only crime was to monitor their government's implementation of the 1975 Helsinki Final Act."

In his reply to Mezvinski's statement, Soviet delegate Valerian Zorin objected to what he called "emotional language and unfounded assertions."

Warning against a return to the Cold War, Zorin said the charges were "purely propagandistic in nature" and designed to "weaken the influence of the Soviet Union and undermine its prestige throughout the world."

Commenting on Zorin's reply, Mezvinski later told reporters that the Soviet position "has always been negative."

'Control cloning now'

NEW YORK (AP) — Three scientists said yesterday they plan a federal court suit intended to explore the production-line potential of cloning, a process by which a male child reportedly has been artificially created.

"If we wait much longer, we run the dangerous risk of being unable to regulate the production of human beings by this means," said Dr. Ethan Signer, a biology professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, one of the designated plaintiffs.

"It would be folly to let this happen when, by taking action right now, we can open the issue to a reasoned, responsible, infrmed and thorough discussion of all its implications."

Under the Freedom of Information Act, the suit will seek access to any information the federal government has on cloning, test tube fertilizing of human eggs, screening methods for genetic defects, and the technology that allows scientists to take genes from one species and transmit them to bacteria.

A forthcoming book by science writer David Rorvik claims that a boy, now 1 months old, was created from the a cell of an unidentifed wealthy unmarried man.

"If it hasn't been done already, it will certainly be accomplished within the next 10 years," said Jeremy Rifkin, a co-plaintiff in the planned lawsuit. "This technique should be outlawed; it's antisocial."

Cloning involves the introduction of a single cell into a female egg cell from which the nucleus has been removed. The hybrid egg then is implanted into any female uterus where, according to theory, it develops into a human fetus, having only the characteristics of the cell donor.

Joining Signer as designated plaintiffs in the suit are Dr. Jonathan Beckwith of the Harvard Medical school, and Liebe Cavalieri, a research biologist for the Memorial-Sloan Kettering Institute for Cancer Research.

Other plaintiffs include Rifkin and Ted Howard, both of the Peoples Business Commission, a Washington-based organization interested in genetics.

"It is time that the whole array of scientific and medical 'advances' which allow meddling with the human gene pool be explained to the U. S. population," declared Beckwith.

Rifkin and Howard have written a book on cloning, a system which they said has been used successfully in the creation of animals.

"With the development of human genetic engineering, a tool even more awesome than nuclear weaponry is now available," Rifkin declared. "Genetic engineering makes it possible to irreversibly alter the biological structure of millions of men and women and their descendants for all time."

Storm funds

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts residents flooded out during last month's storm would get state aid to purchase other land through legislation filed by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

The $10 million bond issue would finance state purchase of land in flood-prone areas.

"Many owners will have to relocate, either because their land literally doesn't exist anymore or because buildings and sanitary codes won't allow rebuilding," Dukakis said.

Many of the hardest hit areas should not be rebuilt at all, he said, but should be used instead for recreation or natural flood control.

Unless zoning prohibits rebuilding, a homeowner's decision to sell his land would be voluntary under the legislation.

Dukakis said the state aid is necessary because existing flood relief programs offer compensation for structural damage but do not help victims buy replacement land if they wish to relocate.

Boston defies state order

BOSTON (AP) — Boston city officials have "defied" a state order to produce records concerning property tax concessions granted to major construction projects, State Secretary Paul Guzzi said yesterday.

Guzzi said he was referring the matter to Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti for possible court action.

Guzzi said his assistant, Public Records Supervisor John J. McGlynn, had ordered the city assessing office on Jan. 13 to release files, including background documents, concerning 82 pre-construction tax agreements. Boston Fair Share, a consumer group, had complained to Guzzi they were denied access to the material and alleged the state Freedom of Information Act had been violated.

Guzzi said the city had released copies of some of the tax agreements but no background material.

He said city officials had told him that they could not find several of the tax agreements, including those made with Filene's, Harbor Towers, Provident Institution for Savings, Tremont-on-the-Common and Kenmore Square Apartments.

Your Birthday

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 8
Born today, you are fired with ambition. Highly creative, intelligent, and gifted with imagination to spur thought, you should prove an asset to any enterprise. You enjoy the things that money can buy, but you will find as life tests you that you are able to get along without most of them.

You are by nature and choice head of your household. You will wish to have the final say in all decisions. Time, and a few run-ins with loved ones, should teach you the value of the round table discussion of family matters.

Though you have strong "nesting" instincts, you also need success outside your home. You will not be able to get full satisfaction from family affairs. You are inventive, and this may make you a name for yourself. You are always ready to risk failure, and so you will not be afraid to risk success.

Also born on this date: Sam Jaffe, actor; Kenneth Grahame, English novelist.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

THURSDAY, MARCH 9

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) — You should have total success today if you aim for minor accomplishment.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) — Don't let your actions today embitter others and cause them to abandon efforts to improve.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) — Family ties may be weaker than usual. Do your best to heal the break.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) — Take a partner for the day. It is essential that you remain calm at evening.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) — Make sure you don't seem to be riding on another's coattails. Make your own mark.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) — Chances of success with a new project are slim today. Go over plans again with care.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) — Today may bring the break you've been striving for. Don't give in to frustration.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) — Your creative instinct may be working overtime. Stop and listen to others.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) — Professional goals appear closer than they are. Wait until you are fully prepared.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) — Concern for the ill-treated is not enough; do something constructive.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) — You may gain brief recognition at work today. Be satisfied with the first step.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) — You may sustain emotional injury from conflicts with co-workers. Let nature take its course.

Puck club has good year

By RAYMOND L. ROY
Special to the Collegian

You may not know it, but the UMass Ice Hockey Club is well on its way to a successful inaugural season. The 19 team league — made up of dorm, fraternity and independent teams — is currently in its fifth week of its 6 week regular season.

Due to the high ice rental fees (games are played in Holyoke, Easthampton, Greenfield and Amherst), club members have had to raise over $8,000; some of these funds have been used to finance the club's extensive referee program, which is made up entirely of students.

The competition is surprisingly good; the action is fast, if not a bit chippy. Most of the members are experienced high school players; there are, however, quite a few novices who make up in hard work what they lack in experience. Regardless of ability, the games are taken seriously.

According to Dustin Burke, club founder and president: "The games are intensely played. Clearly, if we are to continue to have a league which promotes fun and safety, we must train the officials. While at the same time, insist that all players respect the referees, as well as each other." Currently, vice-president Mike Sullivan, and referee-in-chief Wayne Blake are planning qualitative improvements for the playoffs which includes more selectivity in terms of referee ability.

At present, there are two undefeated teams favored for the league championships, namely Breen's Bruins (4) and Beta Phi (18). The league is competitive, however, and either of these teams could be knocked off at any time.

The regular season finishes up on the sixteenth of the month and playoffs will begin the Monday following spring vacation. The two top teams in each division will advance to the playoffs. As everyone knows, anything can happen in the playoffs.

Validate I.D.'s

All students, faculty, staff and continuing Ed. are required to give a validated plastic UMass I.D. card to the lifeguard on duty, for the duration of their swim. Recreation stickers for faculty, staff and continuing Ed may be purchased in the Ticket Office at Boyden and must be affixed to the back of your photo I.D. This policy has been instituted to eliminate the use of pool facilities by those who don't pay student activity fees or recreational fees for faculty and staff. Your cooperation in this matter is greatly appreciated.

Water polo-ers begin spring A.A.U. season

By ROBERT CORB
Special to the Collegian

The UMass water polo team has begun practicing for the upcoming spring A.A.U. water polo season. This year the water polo club is hoping to expand enough to sponsor two men's and a women's team. The water polo club is an R.S.O. group, and receives matching funds from the University's athletic department.

Because water polo is a club and not a varsity sport, all newcomers to the sport are welcome.

The club has two major goals; to learn and teach how to play water polo, and to have a good time doing it. The club currently teaches two P.E. courses and is trying to start intramural water polo for next year.

The men's "A" team will be attempting to defend its title as the New England Water Polo Association A.A.U. champions. At this time the men's squad looks like the team to beat with the return of virtually the entire team of last year.

The team is led by high scorers Russ Yarworth and Duncan Lomas, and goalie Ric Notini. Returning N.E.W.P.A. all-stars Bob Corb and Henry Maclean, along with experienced players Rick Mansfield, Joe Hebert and Bill Tharion, make this team one of the strongest in UMass history. If new players Geff Miller and Dave Landesman can play this spring, the UMass team will have the bench strength it has always lacked.

This year's men's "B" team is a young but experienced squad. Led by junior goalkeeper Bill Tharion, this team holds the future of UMass water polo. Experienced offensive threats Jim McIver, John Gallagher, and Steve Latter, will team up with defensive specialists Dave Young, and rookies Ben Thompson and Mike Riordon. At UMass these players constitute the "B" team, but at many other schools, these same players would be starters on the varsity squad.

The women's team has the potential of being the most successful of any of this year's polo teams. Led by former New England all-stars Deb Hoxsie, Adrienne Fredey, Nancy Campbell, and swimmers Deb Schwarz and Becca Reggio, this squad may put it all together this year. Several women from the highly successful women's swim team have shown an interest in playing water polo this spring, and with their added strength in the pool, the women will finally be in a position to dethrone perennial powerhouse Boston College, as N.E.'s top women's team.

This spring promises to be one of the strongest campaigns the UMass water polo club has ever sponsored. The club is always interested in new members, and anyone interested should contact Bill Tharion or Ric Notini at 549-0779, or Bob Corb at 549-2662, or just drop into Boyden pool any evening at 6:00.

JoJo White out for year

BOSTON [UPI] — Boston Celtic's guard Jo Jo White will be lost to the team for the rest of the season because of bone spurs in his left heel, a club spokesman said yesterday.

The 6-foot-3 guard has been severely hampered since earlier this year with the painful bone spurs, and team physician Dr. Thomas Silva decided "there's just no answer but an operation," the spokesman said.

White will meet with Celtics' president and general manager Red Auerbach in the next few days and is expected to decide by then whether to have the operation.

But whether he has the operation or not, "we'll forget him for the rest of the season," the spokesman said.

Steveskey accepted role of sub

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Out of all the seniors on the UMass basketball team, this season, the least publicized was 6'4" 180 lb. Chuck Steveskey, a player who came to UMass in 1974 with a lot of scoring potential but for many reasons was only accustomed to seeing only a few minutes per game.

Still, Steveskey took his role patiently and without making waves. In the Eastern Athletic Tournament playoffs last season several members of the press asked UMass Coach Jack Leaman about the role of Steveskey.

"Chuck," said Leaman, "is a very fine outside shooter who can burn a lot of teams when he is hot. With the backcourt we have (Alex Eldridge, Derick Claiborne), it's extremely hard for Steveskey to get playing time.

"Even though he doesn't play, a lot of his enthusiasm on the bench helps the team. In many ways, because of his attitude at practice and games, he's like another coach. He is a very hard-working performer who has shown continued improvement during his year here," said Leaman.

In four years, Steveskey, because of Eldridge and Claiborne, and assorted knee problems, only managed 68 career points. He appeared in 20 games this season, playing 115 minutes and only averaging 1.3 points per game.

Even though I didn't play much or score many points, I have learned so much about the game through relationships between players, coaches, at home and on the road. It's been an invaluable experience for me," said the hotel and restaurant administration major.

Steveskey came into UMass with a lot of promise. Having captained his high school (Auburn NY), and voted MVP with a 21 points per game average, along with the honor of being on the All Central N.Y. All Star team, he expected to help the UMass backcourt tremendously.

For two years, Steveskey averaged 19 points, playing on the UMass JV squad. He expected to play his junior year on varsity, but after injuring his knee as a sophomore, Steveskey knew his role on the team would only be as a backup.

"When you can't play," said Steveskey, "somebody takes your place. In my situation, my sophomore year, there were a lot of players who had the same level of ability as me. But with my injury, they passed me and it became impossible for me to catch up with them.

"I realized it wouldn't be possible to break into the starting lineup, so I resigned myself to be ready physically and mentally as a backup. But when you are a senior, the coach wants to develop his younger players for next year. So unless you're in the starting lineup as a senior, you won't play much," Steveskey said.

Steveskey, who's been around basketball since the age of six, with his father coaching a high school and college basketball in central NY said a feeling of indecision faced the UMass team for the last four years.

"For four years, you would go to practice and wouldn't know what to expect. I guess you could say it was a metamorphosis of change, whether it was racial, or conflicts between coach and player, or between player and player."

"This season, we started out at 8-0 and if there were problems, everyone kept quiet because we were winning. I guess the problems were put into the closet. But once we started losing one, two, three games in a row, people started bringing out their problems about roles, or playing time, out in the open," said Steveskey.

"It's a shame our great beginning of the season deteriorated so that we lost to UConn, Maine, and UNH. We had hopes for the NCAA tournament this year," he said.

Planning to continue his basketball career in Sweden next year, while looking to getting experience in the hotel-restaurant field, Steveskey, like other members of the team, has read that Leaman might be leaving the UMass area.

"I don't know if those accounts are true. But I would like to say a few things about him. Jack is a really good teacher who gets a lot out of his people if they are receptive to his criticism. If people can take it in a right way, despite his yelling and screaming, they will profit by it.

"It seems that the UMass player has changed in the last few years. The teaching that's been involved has been muddled with character and personality clashes. It hasn't been easy for him," said Steveskey.

He would some day like to go into coaching but only if the ideal situation came up. "I've been around basketball a long time now, with my father, all the camps and clinics I have been to and have my own ideas about running a team. At this time I would say no but I'd leave it open in the future if the right job came up," Steveskey said.

Amherst invites all runners to compete in open meet

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

Amherst College will sponsor an open track meet tonight at its cage (next to Orr Rink) at six. The meet is open to the public, regardless of ability. There is a $1 entry fee, and post entries will be accepted.

"There are so many people jogging, the purpose of this meet is to try to meet their needs by having a competition in which they can compete at their own level," said meet director Tom Derderian.

The meet, which is the fifth in a winter-long series, has been drawing "about 100" participants to each meet. The mile is the most popular event, according to Derderian.

"We run it in sections, according to time," he said. "We have divisions from novice, people who have never run a race and want to see what they can do, up to expert."

The women's mile will be the feature event of this week's meet, with national class distance runner Charlotte Lettis, the UMass women's track coach; Dia Elliman, from Hampshire College and a 4:50 miler; Jane Welzel, former UMass runner, who has run 5:07 at Amherst; Sue North, former Springfield College miler (4:56); and Cindy Sturm, a 4:55 miler who will be a UMass freshman in September all running.

The meet standard of 5:02 may fall, and if it does, a $10 gift certificate will be the prize, as it is when any of the meet's pre-set standards are broken.

The meet has a full program of 16 events, including field events (high jump, long jump and shot put), relays (mile and one lap) and running events.

"These meets have been dedicated to providing people with the opportunity to test themselves," said Derderian. People will run in heats with runners of their own ability — a race like the mile is just as exciting when people are trying to break 5:30 for the first time as when people are trying to break four minutes."

Derderian said volunteers were needed to help officiate the meet, and could contact him at 549-1079 or 256-8423.

★Title IX

"These things can affect the overall goal of excellence, if that's what you're striving for," she said.

Although women have the opportunity to participate, they may not have as good a chance as men to excel in their sport because of the coaching situation. Much like the part-time coaches the three full-time women's coaches are limited in their output because they all coach at least two sports.

"There just isn't enough time to do everything," said Dianne A. Thompson, women's softball and volleyball coach.

'Cage' short of Title IX goals

Editor's note — this is the second part of a two-part story on the athletic depts. compliance with Title IX.

By MICHAEL SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

Despite advances made in women's sports here at UMass, inadequate facilities and a coaching staff where men's teams have four times as many full-time coaches as women's teams could be deemed violations of the Title IX amendments — but no one really knows.

A federal task force is due here later this year to judge whether UMass has compiled with the 1975 Civil Rights ruling that prohibits sex discrimination in educational opportunities. But because of the law's ambiguity, university administrators are uncertaan what the assessment will be based on.

"We don't know if people coming here are concerned with facilities, coaches, teams, team travel...Even the federal govenment doesn't know what it's talking about," said David C. Bischoff, dean of the School of Physical Education.

Just as uncertain is the exact arrival time of the task force from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW), which will assess Title IX progress in all departments at UMass, not just athletics.

"They could come any time, maybe this spring, the summer or next fall," said James I. DeShields, assistant to the chancellor for Affirmative Action and Title IX affairs.

Boyden administrators readily admit that the Curry Hicks Building does not properly accommodate women because of cramped locker room space and too few toilets. This could be construed as a lack in equal opportunity for women and might be considered a violation of Title IX. All other athletic facilities are suitable for both sexes, according to administrators.

According to a 1976 report by the School of Physical Education's Title IX task force, Hicks "has not been significantly redesigned or changed structurally" since it was built in 1931, when the student population at UMass (then Mass. State College) consisted of 500 male students. This semester there are 9,439 men and 7,597 women undergraduates enrolled at UMass.

The task force recommended that the university supply "funds to completely renovate the Hicks Building to comply with Title IX, as well as to meet state sanitary and health codes."

Dean Bischoff said his department is considering two alternatives to remedy the situation. One option calls for renovating Hicks, and the other suggests that a new facility be built to replace Hicks. Bischoff has hired consultants to look into the two possibilities. Bischoff said that any real action on either option, particularly the latter, is a long way off.

While administrators are certain the Hicks building does not comply with Title IX regulations, they are unsure about the imbalance of full-time coaches.

While the current situation of 13 full-time coaches for men's sports and three for women's may seem unfair, some Boyden officials note that the variety of women's sports has increased and the number of full-time coaches for men's sports has decreased by five since 1974. All full-time coaches held other positions at UMass; teaching is the most common.

"Opportunity is what's important," said Robert W. O'Connell, associate athletic director at UMass. "Equal opportunity does not mean identical treatment."

A 1975 memorandum from HEW states that exact parity between men's and women's sports is not the goal of Title IX, but instead the "equal opportunity emphasis in the regulation addresses the totality of the athletic program of the institution..."

However, Bischoff said he wants to improve the situation and is now looking for a full-time women's swim team coach who would also be the aquatics director at UMass.

"It's a situation that needs to be rectified," said Virginia L. Evans, women's gymnastics coach and full-time instructor in the Physical Education Department.

"If you're just trying to increase participation, then (full-time coaches) are not a factor," she said, adding that the frequent turnover of part-time coaches may mean "a difference in continuity and possibly quality.

John Allard, a UMass junior member of the ski team, is living out a dream come true on exchange in Switzerland. Last year, competing for UMass, Allard won four out of eight league races and competed in the NCAA's.

UMass skier has dream come true in Swiss Alps

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

UMass junior John Allard is involved in what would be a dream come true for the majority of college students who are also skiers.

Allard, of Keene, New Hampshire, is spending this academic year at the University of Fribourg in Switzerland, and while there has been training with the Swiss Academic Ski Team.

He qualified for and skied in the NCAA championships last year, but his high point in skiing has come while in Europe — he was the sole American to participate in the Student World Olympics, a gathering of national teams from all over the world, but limited to college students.

Allard, who began skiing at age five and racing at age 10, was ranked fifth in New England at the age of 13 among Junior class ski racers. He was an outstanding racer during his first two years at UMass, and his coach, Bill MacConnell, has said he has more potential than any racer he's coached in the last 17 years.

Allard wrote MacConnell two letters while at Fribourg and later, while in Czechoslovakia at the Student Olympics. The text of those letters follows, in part.

MacConnell wrote a letter recommending Allard be sent as a US representative, but Allard had decided to go and made all the other arrangements himself.

I came here to Switzerland to learn French and German and for the traveling experience. On the skiing side, I've traveled extensively through the Alps, meeting racers from every nation.

I have attended two training camps with the Swiss Academic Ski Team in Italy. At these camps we run every morning, run gates and free ski, and do exercises again in the afternoon — a wholesome Swiss life.

The quality of ski racing in Europe far surpasses that of the US. The training and the organizations of races and teams are better.

As far as his racing goes, Allard was trying to get his Federation Internationale de Ski (FIS) ranking down. The FIS gives handicap points which denote the ability of skiers.

The best skier in the world would have 0 handicap points. The races Allard competed in were of 40 handicap points or below.

"Our league would have handicap points of about 50-70," said MacConnell.

At the Olympics, Allard was competing in races with FIS handicaps of 10-20.

In the slalom I didn't finish the first run, so I was out. In the giant slalom I was 34th, and in the downhill I was 51st. I did as I thought I would — I was not the worst, but not the best — I finished well behind the winners.

Ski racing is not the most important thing in my life. One very special thing was to carry our flag in the opening and closing ceremonies. I felt great patriotism towards the US, as well as respect for all the other students there, and all the other nationalities.

The single best moment was in the closing ceremony, when, holding our flag, I met a Russian and spoke very briefly to him with the aid of a translator. We two, of the two most powerful countries in the world, stood side by side at the ceremony and posed for many pictures. Then I felt such international peace and friendship. Think of it — our two governments couldn't be more different, yet we were two people standing there as a symbol of this will to communicate. It is something I will remember all my life.

I was filmed on Czech TV, and on the hill after my races, I signed many autographs. I guess that for many Czechs, I may be the only American they've ever seen.

For the future, I can't wait to get back to my buddies on the UMass team for another great year.

Dreams or no, there is no place like home.

Steve Zack

Lay off, Bob Ryan

An open letter to Bob Ryan:

Mr. Ryan,

As a student at the University of Massachusetts, I find it in very poor taste for a writer of your supposed character to launch an uncalled for written attack on UMass basketball player Alex Eldridge.

To call Alex a "space cadet" is sort of ironic since you're the one who is out of this world.

You continually criticize Alex for one thing or another yet as I understand it, you have never met or talked to him.

In a recent column of yours in the Boston Globe [3-2-78] you printed a statement by an unidentified source that Eldridge was missing from action because he was on one of his "walkabouts." Did you ever bother to check out the real reason Eldridge was missing [strained knee ligaments] by contacting either UMass Coach Jack Leaman or Alex Eldridge himself? As I understand it, you did not and therefore I question your journalistic ethics.

If you think you can pick on someone for no reason except he plays ball 100 miles from where you write, then it's time you took a good, hard look at yourself.

You can take your beloved Providence, BC, and Holy Cross ballplayers and shove them up your you know what because it's time you realized that the number one ballplayer is one Alex Eldrige of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

While this may seem gung-ho and full of school spirit, etc., there is an underlying thought to be derived from it.

It concerns the rights of journalists. Should they be given the right to outrightly insult an individual as they please without proper cause.

What Mr. Ryan did may seem perfectly within his rights, but look at what he wrote from the point of Alex Eldridge.

The Boston Globe is a nation-wide newspaper meaning that hundreds of thousands of people will read what Ryan said about Eldridge and therefore judge Alex to be a person of questionable character.

Some of the people reading the paper could be pro scouts and thus Ryan could be damaging Eldridge's chances for a career as a professional ballplayer.

Here is the main point: Should reporters be given the right to publish anything they want about an individual whether it be based on fact or not?

The basketball season is over, plain and simple, and while all the mishaps cannot be blamed on UMass coach Jack Leaman, some of them can.

Jack Leaman was presented with a fast-break ball club made up of some of New York City's finest ballplayers. Yet Leaman chose to employ a slow-down offense, which I consider a cardinal sin considering the type of players he had. I suppose he used a slow-down game because he thought it was right for the team and we can't fault him for following his own beliefs.

It appeared that he didn't fully understand how to use his ballplayers, shuffling them in and out of the lineup faster than the official scorer could keep up with. But he did it because he thought it was the right thing to do.

Presently there are rumors circulating around that Coach Leaman is on his way out. If he leaves, his successor will prove whether or not Leaman was successful by how well he does in Leaman's place.

Another test of Leaman's success as a coach will come into play if he departs. If he is truly a good coach, then he will receive offers from other schools because a good coach is always needed.

Don't get me wrong. If Leaman leaves I'll be one of the first to say goodbye, but think for a minute. He's won a lot of games during his career here which says a lot for the man so maybe he isn't as bad as we all think he is. After all, he did guide the Minutemen to eight Yankee Conference Championships.

Court back-to-work order sought

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Carter administration will go to court today to seek an immediate back-to-work order against coal miners, an administration official said Wednesday.

The statement came as a presidential fact-finding panel completed a one-day hearing into the 93-day coal strike.

Administration officials said the president needed only to receive the panel's report before directing Justice Department attorneys to ask for the court order.

The fact-finding panel, established under the Taft-Hartley Act, took testimony Wednesday from representatives of the striking United Mine Workers union and from the soft coal industry, then began writing its report to the president.

The government will seek the order in U.S. District Court in Washington Thursday afternoon, "assuming the president gets the report," the administration official said.

The chairman of the presidential panel said he expected the report to be completed by noon Thursday.

The official said the request for a temporary restraining order would name more than 1,000 union locals and officials and coal companies as defendants.

Officials said other defendants will be UMW construction miners and member companies of the American Bituminous Contractors, who are negotiating a separate agreement.

The government is prepared to seek contempt citations and fines against defendants violating the back-to-work order, the official said, adding:

"There's not much point in getting the order if you're not ready to enforce it."

But it was not immediately clear how soon miners would return to work. The order the government would seek presumably would remain in force until a judge could hear agruments on a request for an 80-day injunction.

UMW President Arnold Miller said Wednesday that miners would likely disobey a back-to-work order by the thousands, and government officials said mines would have to be inspected as a safety precaution before miners would be allowed underground.

Senate discovers oversight

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

The mandatory housing requirement for undergraduates was not extended beyond June 1977 by the Board of Trustees, it was revealed at the Undergraduate Student Senate meeting last night.

Senator Dan Salce, who discovered the situation said the "oversight" could be resolved at the next trustee meeting or, Salce said in an emergency session, depending on "public interest."

"In my opinion students do not have to be there (in dorms) right now," Salce said. "It is the opinion of the administration that it was just an oversight, a 'technicality' that could be resolved by a vote of the Board of Trustees. It has also been inferred that the vote when made would be able to be retroactive."

Salce added "we need an interpretation from the Legal Services Office. Any student who feels they might have a basis to grieve should wait until we get that opinion."

In his presentation to the Senate, Salce gave background to the situation. In J 1965 the Trustees iniated mandatory housing requirements for students. This requirement was in effect for ten years. In June 1975 the Board Trustees extended the policy for one year. They extended it again in 1976. The policy was not renewed in 1977.

Salce added that both Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert Woodbury and the director of Residential Resource Management Robert Cambell are aware of their situation. The matter, according to Salce, was "overlooked."

The Senate covered a small amount of other business in a meeting which was tranquil in comparison to the heated Spring Concert meetings of the last two weeks.

The Senate passed a motion requiring Senators to work at ballot boxes during the upcoming student presidential election.

Study reveals UM frosh attitudes, choices

By CLAUDE TETREAULT
Collegian Staff

Estimates show that 72 per cent of 1977 UMass freshmen agree marijuana should be legalized. In comparison, only 55 per cent of the freshmen nationally surveyed opted for legalization of the "weed".

During the summer of 1977, approximately 300,000 freshmen nationwide completed the American Council on Education survey; this figure included some 2,800 UMass Amherst freshmen. The results of UMass students, tabulated by Kathy Daly of Student Affairs Research and Evaluation office, cover topics such as: student characteristics, academic and career aspirations, and social-political views.

An essential question to entering freshman is, "what are my reasons for choosing college?"

Forty-one per cent of UMass freshmen said the university "has a good academic reputation" and "low tuition" as two equally important factors in selecting UMass.

Sixty per cent of the national survey group cited "good academic reputation" as the primary reason for attending college. Low tuition, an important UMass concern, received a low 17 per cent vote in the national poll.

UMass freshmen, generally optimistic concerning what may result in the course of their college experience, tabulated the following points:

—49 per cent said there was a good chance that they would get a B average or better.

—Less than 2 per cent felt there was a strong chance they would fail one or more courses and-or drop out of school permanently.

—56 per cent thought there was a good chance they would find a job in their preferred field.

According to the American Council on Education and the research office UMass freshmen have more liberal views than national freshmen in the following areas: legalization of abortion (70 per cent vs. 61 per cent), pre-marital sexual relations (66 per cent vs. 49 per cent), and a national health care plan (72 per cent vs. 57 per cent). Such results might be attributed to an ever-changing society and fluctuating moral views, the study says.

Academic fields of study, an area students should be concerned with, ranked in the following order of preference among UMass freshpersons: business (15.1 per cent), arts and humanities (13.7 per cent), social science (12.9 per cent), engineering (11.8 per cent), professional (10.4 per cent) and undecided (5 per cent).

Interestingly enough, about 25 per cent will change areas of study by graduation day, according to current statistics.

There are also sharp differences between men and women in choosing their respective fields of study. Sixteen per cent more men than women will channel toward engineering. Men are also interested in pursuing business in higher proportions than women, while women plan to pursue arts and humanities, education, social sciences and professional areas in higher proportions than men. In addition, more women (16 per cent) than men (11 per cent) were undecided on their career choice.

Changes in attitudes over a five year period is most pronounced in professional and economic objectives according to the study. "Becoming an authority in my field," a professional concern, received a 56 per cent vote in 1972; in 1977, it skyrocketed to 77 per cent. Speaking in economic terms, 39 per cent of those surveyed in 1972 sought to be "well off financially". Five years later, 57 per cent of the voters chose the same.

SGA candidates

Donald Bishop

By ROBERT FALETRA
Collegian Staff

Donald Bishop is a candidate for Student Government Association president. He is a 20-year-old junior, presently undeclared. He is now a government affairs chairman and co-chairman. He was formerly a student senator, a member of the Board of Governors and a member of the Government Affairs Committee.

In a recent Collegian interview he had these answers to questions on students and student problems.

What are your impressions of the Student Government Association as it operates now?

"As it now operates it is lacking the students needs. This would come under a need for reorganization. I see a need for accountability restructure so that senators are made more responsive to their constituents. We need to try to set up an overall plan to get major student involvement in the senate. The way I see it is we just don't get the information out. We need some form of direct information flow."

Do you think students should have a larger voice on decisions on campus? If so how should this be accomplished?

"I think they should, right now we have hardly any say in what goes on as far as administration, as far as faculty, as far as where we live and what we do. An example of this is Pierpont. The way to do it is to organize students. Just how you do that is tough to say, it's usually easier to organize students around an issue. We need some ground work. The way to do that is just dissemination of the information. You can't be involved in something you're not aware of."

How would you assess the bargaining position on each side of the faculty-administration bargaining sessions?

"As far as classroom and research I think for the student's sake they would rather have their professors more accessible to them. I would say it would be in the students best interest to have the faculty teaching."

What do you feel is the best solution to the upcoming concert in the spring?

"I was one of the people who petitioned the presidents on that. I thought the two concert plan was the best alternative. What we came up with is still a compromise, it's not something everyone wants, it's not a spring concert, it's a Black American Music Festival. The compromise there was, yes it's free for students so now they have some free concert type event they can go to, but it's not their spring concert. When we raised the student activities fund we promised to upkeep services."

"I voted no on the proposal, I was in favor of getting a free show that would appeal to everyone. We still have no spring concert, we have a Black American Music Festival."

How do you feel the student senate bus service should be funded?

"I agree with the 70 per-cent 30 percent plan where 70 per-cent is from our money and 30 per-cent from parking fees. That is to our best advantage." If it came down to a five dollar fee from the students I would be in favor of the present 85 to 15 per-cent funding because that's five more dollars coming from the students.

Brickman and Vafiades

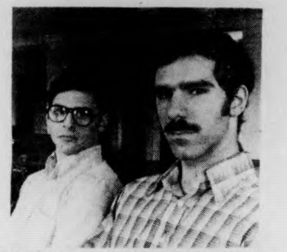
Steve Brickman is a freshman with no past positions on campus. Mark Vafiades is a second semester sophomore majoring in business.



By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

What are your impressions of the SGA as it operates now?

"The SGA operates as its own separate group...separate from the students. The Senate doesn't care what the students think. They don't even listen to their constituents."

Do you feel students should have a larger voice in decisions on campus? If you feel they should, how should this be accomplished?

"Definitely. First of all since $1.1 million of ours is taken and put into the Student Activities Trust Fund we should have the decision-making process as students because its our money. A good idea would be boxes outside the dining commons where you could put suggestions and grievances. That's another way students could have their input."

How would you assess the bargaining position on each side of faculty-administration bargaining sessions?

"Negotiations for what? asked Brickman. "The faculty has to have some say. Its questionable as to how much say they should have. If they had so much they could get away with murder we would see our tuitions just going up and up. They should have some say but they shouldn't have total say," said Vafiades.

I don't think the students should have a right to decide whether a teacher deserves tenure or not. Brickman said, "The Administration or whoever is in charge should listen and see what they have to say," Vafiades said.

What do you feel is the best solution to the upcoming concert in the spring?

"Not the way I was seeing it but I was talking to my constituents and everyone around campus and they felt there should have been two concerts. Basically that was what most people felt. Of course I'd go along with what they felt. (one BAMF, one free spring concert).

How do you feel the student senate bus service should be funded?

"We really haven't talked about that much. There's something definitely wrong when students have to pay the whole bill for that and a lot of other people use it. And the process keeps going up and the students have to dish out more money. They should definitely be looked into. We really haven't looked at the facts enough to see what is the best solution to that.

Susan Birmingham & David Barenburg

By CINDY REGET
Collegian Staff

Susan Birmingham, 22, resides in Peabody. She is a junior economics-women's certificate studies major. She is also a Student Senator. Some projects she has been involved are the Student Organizing Project, the Mandatory Dining Commons Issue, International Women's Week and Student Senate Women's Caucus.

David Barenburg, 19, lives in Newton. He is a sophomore and lives in Pierpont. He has not yet declared a major. He is a Student Senator. He is also the chairman for the Senate Lease Task Force, and has worked with the Student Organizing Project.

What are your impressions of the Student Government Association as it operates now?

"The Student Government Association is irrelevant to most students, it's a joke. It's very ineffective. It doesn't relate to any constituency. There are no direct lines of accountability, and there are no direct lines of decision making.

Do you think that students should have a larger voice in decisions on campus? If you feel that they should, how should this be accomplished?

"Definitely, students should have a larger voice in decisions on campus. There are many ways of getting students involved in their school. The way to get things done is to start talking to one another and get organized. It doesn't take that many people getting involved to have an effect on the University system."

How would you assess the bargaining position on each side of the faculty-administration bargaining sessions?

"I sat in on one of the sessions and as far as I could tell the administration is not giving an inch. They are putting as many cogs in the wheel as possible to the point where it is absurd.

What do you feel is the best solution to the upcoming concert in the spring?

"The issue of the Spring concert in the terms of the Black American Music Festival was dealt with very unfairly. The Senate has a responsibility, whether it will admit it or not, of putting on the Black American Music Festival because it voted for one for the last year and a half. The problem arose when Senators did not go back and inform their constituents about what they had voted on.

Grads seek opinion on Collegian funding

The Graduate Student Senate's Finance Committee has requested the Executive Committee to seek an opinion from the Legal Services Office as to whether the senate's funding level of the Collegian may legally be decreased.

The Senate is reviewing its budget for the fiscal year 1979 and is uncertain what its legal obligations to fund the Collegian are. According to senate treasurer Ken Ross the Collegian is not being singled out for budget cuts but is only one item on the Senate's budget that is being considered.

Ross said there are "a lot of graduate students unsatisfied with the paper" and "we can't even tell how much money will be in the budget until the transit budget is resolved."

UMass thefts prevented

Operation Indentification, a chapter service project of Kappa Omicron, is currently underway to provide all dormitory residents with the opportunity to engrave their valuables as a measure against theft.

Begun last semester in cooperation with the UMass police, residents of Orchard Hill and Sylvan have engraved their social security numbers on stereos, speakers, sports equipment, appliances, calculators, etc. Kappa Omicron plans to provide the service, free of charge, to all residents by the end of the semester and will begin in Northeast Area next week.

UMass police reported theft of valuables marked with the social security numbers from Operation Identification has decreased 80 per cent while 90 per cent of marked items that have been stolen are recovered.

Members of Kappa Omicron go door-to-door during the evening in the residential areas offering the engraving service.

Winds, buildings studied

UMass researchers have recently discovered something most UMass students already know — its windy at the base of tall buildings.

Anyone walking by the library or through Southwest knows the wind gusts to high speeds there. That's because winds often blow faster at the base of tall buildings because the buildings themselves channel high-speed upper-level winds downward, according to the researchers.

The high winds, say the authors of "Pedestrian and Wind in the Urban Environment," play an "important part in determining pedestrian comfort."

The study was a joint effort of the Institute of Man and Environment at UMass and Weather Dynamics, Inc. of Arlington.

Ex-provost Gluckstern still owns house here

Former Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs and Provost Robert L. Gluckstern still owns a house in Amherst, despite having left UMass in 1975 to become chancellor of the University of Maryland at College Park.

"The house has been for sale a number of years now," Gluckstern said. "We haven't been able to sell it."

The house, located at 100 Dane Street, has a 1978 assessed valuation of $58,500.

Town hears views on UM bus expansion

By DAVE GRAM
Collegian Staff

It was standing room only at the Amherst town hall Tuesday night when the town Committee on Public Transportation listened to the public air their views on the proposed expansion of the UMass Student Senate Transit Service.

The bus service is scheduled to receive 26 new buses in August through a US Department of Transportation grant to the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority. According to Town Planner Janes Cope, 22 of these buses will be used either to replace buses currently in service or will be added to existing bus routes to alleviate overcrowding. The use of four of the buses remains undecided.

The UMass transit service along with the Committee on Public Transportation presented a variety of options for consideration.

According to William Barrett of the UMass Transit Service, the two areas most in need of bus service are Echo Hill, on the eastern side of town, and the Orchard Valley area in South Amherst.

The Orchard Valley route proposed by Barrett calls for buses to travel south on Rt. 116 (West St.), turn right onto Longmeadow St., right onto Farmington, right onto Glendale, left on Rt. 116 and back to town and campus.

Barrett said a variation of that route would call for the buses to take Pomeroy Street to South Amherst Common and return to Rt. 116 via Shays Street.

The Echo Hill route outlined by Barrett calls for the buses to travel east on Belchertown Road to Gatehouse Road, Stoney Hill Road, Hetherstone Road, and Pelham Road back to town and UMass campus.

Barrett outlined two possibilities for scheduling along the proposed routes. Limited service would involve what Barrett referred to as "work trips", consisting of six trips per day "with the purpose of getting people to work in the morning and home in the evening, with some minimal movement during midday."

This limited service would require two buses if both the Echo Hill and Orchard Valley Routes are to be served, according to Barrett.

Full service, as described by Barrett, would consist of buses every 30 minutes during peak use hours and every 60 minutes during off-peak hours. Three buses would be required to maintain this service on both of the proposed routes.

According to Cope, operational costs for the expanded bus service would be split; the federal government would pay about 50 per cent, the state would pay 15 per cent, and local sources would pay the remaining 35 per cent.

The town will vote on whether it wants to bear the cost of the expanded bus service at the Town Meeting in May.

The new buses, which are being provided by General Motors, would seat 39, with standing room for an additional 20 to 30 passengers, according to Barrett.

Israel told it won't get jets unless Egypt does

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Defense Secretary Harold Brown told Israel's defense minister yesterday his nation will not get the advanced U.S. jet fighters it is expecting unless Congress approves similar weapons for Egypt and Saudi Arabia, defense officials said.

The officials said Brown, in a Pentagon meeting with Defense Minister Ezer Weizman, repeated the administration's position that $4.8 billion in proposed Middle East aircraft sales is a "package" that Congress must approve as a unit.

Discussion of that issue came as Weizman, who threatened to quit the Israeli government Tuesday in a dispute over peace policies, was opening Israel's longer-term bid for the largest infusion of U.S. armaments it has ever requested.

The officials did not say whether it was Weizman or Brown who raised the subject of the already-pending aircraft sale proposal, under which Israel would get 15 top-line F-15 and 60 F-16 fighters, while the Saudis would get 60 F-15s and Egypt 50 of the less capable F-5E interceptors.

They said, however, that Brown spent most of the time listening to Weizman present Israel's "inconsiderable detail" Israel's views of its long-term security needs — including what government sources have described as a request for $13.5 billion in military hardware over the next nine years.

That program is dubbed "Matmon C," from a Hebrew word meaning "hidden treasure."

President Carter will make the final decisions on the requests, which include large supplies of extra tanks, airplanes and some of the newest technology in the U.S. weapons development pipeline.

Officials said Brown made no commitments.

Spokesmen would say only that the talks covered Israel's material requests, dealt specifically with questions of aircraft and tanks, touched on the status of the stalled Middle East peace talks and reviewed the overall military situation in the region.

Discussions of Carter's current Middle East aircraft package proposal added a second potential element of tension to U.S.-Israeli relations.

The other is the simmering dispute over Israel's policy of expanding Jewish settlements in occupied Arab territories even as U.S. mediators seek ways of getting disrupted Middle East peace talks resumed.

Weizman inserted himself into that dispute with dramatic flare Tuesday just before he flew from New York to Washington.

He telephoned Prime Minister Menachem Begin and, by his own account, got him to promise there will be no further establishment or expansion of settlements at least until after Begin has concluded his Washington summit with Carter later this month.

Israeli officials traveling with Weizman confirmed he extracted that pledge by threatening to quit Begin's coalition government if the settlements issue were not put on ice during their U.S. visits.

Two SGA officers end terms

By JACK GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

SGA Speaker Pat Whalen and SGA Treasurer Prisilla West ended their terms at last night's Senate meeting. Whalen began by speaking of the "autonomous interests" of the Senate. He also stated, "I have not been impressed with the effectiveness of our advocacy agencies."

Reading from a prepared speech, Whalen cited the "lack of collective cooperation between factions in the Senate" as one reason for his decision not to seek another term. Also, Whalen said, '"After a few months in office I realized I was diametrically opposed to the many political happenings on the inside of the Student Senate."

Whalen also urged the Senate "to take a good look at the bureaucracy you control. It's a fascinating conglomeration of people and it could become more effective and efficient if only more would get involved.... there are a lot of ripoffs going down and it's with your money."

Whalen said it was an "excellent experience" to serve as speaker.

"It was extremely beneficial to my personal growth," he said.

"Because I wasn't supporting certain people, I didn't get the support I needed," he added.

Whalen said the only regret he had about his position was that it "could easily involve 80 hours a week. I couldn't put in enough time."

He concluded by saying "I only hope this body can see through reactionary and self motivated elements polluting its effectiveness and establish itself as a representative of those conditions necessary to produce an involved, progressive student body."

In her speech, Pricilla West said only "thank you" and that she was pleased with the Senate in her capacities as Treasurer.

UMass expert discusses coal miner's situation

By LEO PELOQUIN
Collegian Staff

Dangerous working conditions in the mines are the major reason that coal miners will defy any government orders to return to work, according to a labor relations expert at UMass.

Harvey L. Friedman, director of the labor relations and research center at UMass, said yesterday that under the current contract proposal the miners would have to go through a series of grievance procedures to walk off the job, even if dangerous conditions existed.

"If the mine was collapsing around them, technically, the miners couldn't strike," said Friedman. "The unsafe conditions of the mines are the biggest aspect of the dispute."

Friedman said he supported President Carter's decision to invoke the Taft-Hartley Act but that it wouldn't work in the current dispute. He said that it has been tried unsuccessfully three times before, where it was unsuitable for coal mining strikes.

"He (Carter) had no choice but to do it. Its the only way to start the negotiations working," Friedman said, "...but it hasn't worked in the miners' case. We have to view miners as a different kind of group to be treated differently."

He said the miners were "different" because coal mining was a horrible and dangerous way to make a living.

If the strike should continue for an extended period of time, New England would be indirectly affected, said Friedman.

"Although we use mostly oil and natural gas, as other factories close because of lack of power — say the automobile factories in Detroit — we have factories that make parts for cars and they would have to close down too. The entire nation's economy would be affected," he said.

Friedman said that although UMass had enough coal to last until June or July, he heard that two universities in "coal country" — the University of West Virginia and the University of Indiana (Bloomington) — were being closed down because they lacked power.

Friedman said he didn't think government troops could mine the coal but that the coal miners might go back to work if, in addition to invoking Taft-Hartley, the government seized control of the mines.

"There is coal being mined," said Friedman, pointing out that 50 percent of the country's coal is mined by the United Mine Workers and the other half is mined by other union and nonunion miners.

He said places where nonunion and union mines are very close together, especially in Kentucky, Southern Illinois, and Ohio, may be the scene of violent outbreaks.

Friedman said he had no idea of the direction that contract negotiations would take based on the events of the past week.

Employment bill debated

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House headed into debate on the Humphrey-Hawkins full employment bill Wednesday with Democratic leaders urging their troops to stand fast behind it. Republicans proposed a substitute.

Supporters of Humphrey-Hawkins, claiming it would point the nation toward full employment with low inflation, sought to rally support at a caucus of House Democrats.

The bill would set an "interim" target to reduce unemployment from its recent 6.3 per cent to 4 per cent by 1983.

It would require the president to annually send Congress five-year economic goals designed to lead toward full employment and production with reduced inflation. Congress could modify the goals.

The bill leaves the means to achieve these goals up to the president and Congress. But it says efforts must center on jobs in the private economy.

Journalist discusses Soviet-American policy

By CAROL ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

No considerable changes are anticipated in Soviet-American policy and relations are expected to progress at the same rate, according to Henry Shapiro, United Press International Moscow correspondent for 40 years.

"I think there will be gradual improvement unless the situation in Africa becomes more complicated. I think there will be a SALT agreement (Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty) sooner or later and trade will improve.

"Africa presents a complication," Shapiro said, in an interview yesterday referring to the uprisings in Ethiopia by tribal and political groups which have been aided by Sudan and Somalia. Cooperations agreements with Ethiopia were signed with the Soviet Union in 1977 as ties with the U.S. deteriorated. The U.S. was once a major arms and aid source to Ethiopia.

Shapiro is in the five college area this week on a lecture tour where his topics range from Stalin's Russia to Soviet Jewry to international reporting.

Shapiro, who lived in Moscow from 1933 to 1973, anticipates no drastic changes in the Russian policy. "There will be more of the same. More Jewish emmigration since Carter's Human Rights campaign," which he said is one of the Soviet Union's biggest gripes of the Carter administration.

"He singled out the Soviet Union in his Human Rights campaign," said the fluent Russian correspondent. The Soviet government felt this was "crude interference into Soviet affairs in the Soviet Union." They resented Carter trying to "tell the Kremlin how to behave."

"It's possible that Breshnev will come if the SALT agreement is completed. He owes us a visit." The 72-year-old retired correspondent pointed out that although two American presidents (Nixon and Ford), have made diplomatic trips to the Soviet Union, President Leonid I. Breshnev has only visited the U.S. once.

After Nixon's 1972 visit to Russia, Shapiro said, "Nixon had become popular, they liked his policy." While as Vice President, he had the "unpopular reputation of a McCarthyite," after his visit, he became liked.

"When Watergate occurred, for a long time the Soviet press ignored it. Only toward the end, when the president resigned did it appear in news articles and editorials."

Shapiro noted on Soviet commentary which claimed Nixon's resignation was "because he was forced by American reaction circles who opposed detente plus the Zionists."

Shapiro refuted Nixon White House Chief of Staff H.R. Halderman's recently published allegations the Soviets had asked the U.S. to join them in a nuclear strike against China's growing nuclear capability. "Why should we believe him, he perjured himself to a Senate committee and is now in jail?" Shapiro asked.

"You have to look at the plausability of it. It is true that chiefs of state always have contingency plans. I'm sure the U.S. government never seriously considered it.

"Some people in the Soviet Union and U.S. considered it. General Staff's always "look into all possibilities, Shapiro pointed out. "Russians more than anyone else know what war is."

The Soviet viewpoint of the 1962 Cuban Missile Crisis is different than the American, said Shapiro. "They feel the Soviet Union had saved Cuba from invasion when the Soviet Union removed missiles from Cuba. The official Soviet position is the Soviets won because Khrushchev pressured the U.S. into leaving Cuba alone."

Of his 40-year experience in Moscow, Shapiro said, "the best thing that has happened for the foreign press is the abolition of censorship in 1961." Up until then, all of Shapiro's articles were censored prior to leaving the country.

In summing up the Soviet conception of a journalist, he said "they're public relations people, their client is the Soviet Union. They think they're right, and we think they're wrong."

Shapiro is currently writing his memoirs, (which will include specifics of a private interview with Breshnev) going on lecture tours, and is an Honorary Fellow in the University of Wisconsin Journalism department.

Lawrence Pinkham, chairman of the UMass Journalistic Studies Department, said Shapiro was one of the few journalists during the Cold War period whose reporting was unslanted and did not produce anti-communist material.

UMass art exhibit depicts New York in 1930's

By STACY BELKIND
Special to the Collegian

New York during the thirties.

Most people who lived through those years want to forget them. We know that, despite the horrific living conditions millions were subjected to, creative energy continued to flow, producing a decade of memorable art.

The Herter Art Gallery is currently presenting a collection of prints and drawings, created during the Works Project Administration, by artists who worked on the project. The WPA was initiated in 1935 under Pres. Roosevelt as a national agency to distribute $4.8 billion for work relief over a period of time. Its conception marked the largest relief project of its kind in economic history. If a worker was unable to find a job, there was the WPA to turn to. Surprisingly enough, artists were included as well.

The Federal Arts Project, was one of the many divisions of the WPA. The FAP was divided into eight categories, graphics among them. The artists represented in this collection were employed by the graphic division of the FAP and were given a weekly pay check in return for creating art. Various public institutions, including schools and libraries, were to be the recipients of the art work. This was a very special historical moment for artists. Although the salary was meager, artists could pursue their profession with a feeling of independence.

The FAP continued into 1943, and was responsible for the creation of roughly 2,500 murals; 17,000 sculptures; 100,000 paintings; 200,000 prints from 11,000 designs; two million posters from 35,000 designs; and 23,000 Index of American Design plates which were done in watercolor. The figures appear phenomenal, even in light of the FAP in 1936. Almost fifty per cent of the artists were living in New York City. One such artist who is exhibited in the show and is professor of printmaking at UMass is Fred Becker.

Becker worked on the FAP from 1935-39 as a wood engraver.

Becker's vivid recollection of working on the WPA was full of insight and humor. His statements take on an international scope. He draws connections between the United States and Europe, which are extremely important for the understanding of American art during the thirties.

"In order to get on the WPA, the only requirement was to be a pauper. You had to take a pauper's oath which meant an income of less than ten dollars a week. The Project had supervisors to screen the applicants so that non-artists would not go on. My first interview was at the College Arts Association with Louie Lozowick, a famous lithographer of the twenties and thirties, who is also in this print show. He accepted me, but he was curious to know what kind of paper I use. I printed many of my engravings on a Japanese tissue. He wanted to know if it was toilet paper. It certainly was not! It was hand made from silk and is no longer available.

"I had to be on relief which is the same thing as welfare today except that it was a clumsy beginning to the welfare system. I received a large bag of potatoes, and a large bag of flour, although I lived in a furnished room without any cooking facilities."

Gas plan gets mixed reactions

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A plan by Senate energy negotiators to take federal controls off natural gas prices drew mixed reaction yesterday at a highlevel closed meeting in the House speaker's office.

House negotiators said they will study the 10-page plan and discuss it with the 25 House members of a congressional conference committee trying to reconcile the natural gas bill.

"Maybe they will have 25 different views," Rep. Harley Staggers, D-W.Va., conference chairman, said.

The House version passed last year retains controls on natural gas in keeping with President Carter's energy proposals.

The compromise plan would begin by pricing newly produced natural gas at approximately $1.88 per thousand cubic feet at the point of production, and then boost it regularly and steadily toward more than $3.75 per thousand cubic feet by 1985 when price controls would be removed.

Ephron urges women to action

'Stop blaming... and get on with it'

By JULIE MELROSE
Collegian Staff

In a Distinguished Visitors Program lecture held last night in the Student Union Ballroom, Esquire magazine senior editor Nora Ephron urged all women to "take themselves seriously; to stop blaming, stop whining and get on with it."

"You cannot let insight about your own situation or 'the system' become a substitute for what you're going to do about it," she said.

Ephron started writing about women for Equire in 1972. Prior to that, she spent five years reporting for the New York Post. At that time, she said, it was a point of pride for a woman to work on a newspaper without writing for the women's page.

"Then along came the women's movement. I realized I would have to deal with it in my writing in some way. Joan Didion once wrote that she 'writes to find out what she thinks.' The act of sitting at the typewriter forced me to come to grips with how I felt about the women's movement," Ephron said.

Ephron added that there was a point at which she felt the movement was well established; then she thought, "I can't hurt the woman's movement with anything I write about it anymore."

"I think that on some level I was wrong in my optimism," she said. "The movement is not just an idea; it's a group of people. How can we expect women to improve their lives if they won't even get off their butts and vote for the E.R.A.? The women's movement is in a slump; not just a period of retrenchment."

Ephron said that much of the change brought about by the movement was superficial. "Many women got divorces or better jobs, but they didn't really change personally. It's very difficult to take responsibility for your own life when you've grown accustomed to second-class citizenship."

When asked how she, as a graduate of Wellesley College, felt about single-sex education for women, Ephron said, "I see nothing wrong with all-women's schools, but it's not enough to simply set up a liberal arts college for women identical to those set up for men."

"I think women have to be forced to define themselves, or they'll make the sad mistake of finding their identities through the men they marry," she said.

Ephron stressed the importance of training as a reporter for any young person hoping to work as a writer. "You have to learn that the facts are more important than your response to them."

Stockbridge holds banquet; dean speaks, awards given

By MARTHA KIMBALL
Collegian Staff

Three hundred students, faculty and administration last night attended the 24th Annual Spring Progress Banquet of the Stockbridge School of Agriculture in the Campus Center.

Various awards for outstanding contributions by students and faculty to Stockbridge were presented.

Dr. John Denison, dean of the Stockbridge School of Agriculture, opened the program by saying, "tonight is the night we throw bouquets, and there are a tremendous number to throw tonight. Just look at all the past activities and those planned for the future.

Denison praised the improvement in Stockbridge public relations over the past few years. "Now when I meet with people on campus and at Whitmore they recognize Stockbridge and know what the Stockbridge philosophy is all about," Denison said.

Denison commented, "technical education has an important spot in Massachusetts; but it has not grown as fast as I would like to see." We can't miss with such dedicated people on our faculty and staff. Education will get into you students one way or another."

Freshman Peter Quinlan received the Outstanding Senator award for his contribution to the Student Senate and the school, especially through his work with Professional Development Day, held this past February.

Former Stockbridge student David White received an award for outstanding member of the Stockbridge Service Organization. Denison said, "David is a most active young man and will become a great leader."

Dr. Douglas Airhart, Student Senate advisor, presented 22 students with Service Award Grants for their service and contributions to the school.

Prof. Byron Colby and Mr. James S. Callahan, prof. of food and resource economics, received recognition for their years of service to the school. Both are retiring this semester. Colby, livestock extension specialist, worked with youth in the Future Farmer's of America Program, 4-H, and with students.

Colby also received the Stockbridge yearbook dedication from the class of 1978.

Geoff Macduff, student senate president, presented awards to outstanding professors and thanked all the professors for their help.

Mr. Tony Williams, coach of the Stockbridge soccer and basketball teams, presented players with certificates. He awarded Most Valuable Player Award to Anthony Realick for soccer, and Paul Gagnon for basketball.

Florence Luscomb yesterday afternoon as she spoke of the early stage of the women's movement. (Staff photo by Kathy Schmarsow)

Elderly feminist speaks; tells of early suffrage

By GAIL FLEMING
Collegian Staff

Florence Luscomb attended the 1892 National American Suffrage Convention when she was five and heard Susan B. Anthony speak on women's rights.

Luscomb yesterday told 100 people the experience was her beginning in the women's movement and then gave a history of the suffrage movement leading to women's right to vote in 1920.

Luscomb said the women's movement stemmed from the anti-slavery movements of the 1820's. The refusal of anti-slavery conventions to admit women spurred the 1848 women's conference in Seneca Falls, NY and the first "National Meeting of Women's Rights" in Worcester, Mass., in 1850.

Luscomb produced a copy of the "Women's Journal" from 1911, a newspaper published by Lucy Stone and her husband, Henry Blackwell. Luscomb said she "hawked" the paper in Boston in 1911 and 1912, which kept women informed on the issues of the day.

Luscomb traveled to the rural sections of the state making speeches in an effort to get the Massachusetts legislature to pass a referendum granting women the vote in 1915. The proposal was defeated despite Luscomb's 222 speeches in 19 weeks, but her work helped to create national awareness which led to the Constitutional Amendment in 1920 giving women the vote, she said.

Luscomb has been involved with the Civil Liberties Union and has been an inspector in the Boston garment factories, which employed mostly women. She was also the president of the union of office and professional workers in Massachusetts. She said of her involvement in human rights struggles, "It makes a more interesting life than sitting home and knitting."

Fac Sen sets Wo Stu's fate

By MEGAN O'REILLY
Collegian Staff

As an appropriate adjunct to Women's Week, the future of the Women's Studies Program will be determined today at the biweekly meeting of the Faculty Senate.

The busy agenda also includes a faculty proposal to rescind graduate faculty membership levels and 27 new course proposals up for senate adoption.

The Women's Studies Program is a program and not a major. The program's original two-year mandate has been extended twice pending a comprehensive review by the Academic Matters Council of the Senate.

Today, after three months of study, the Council will recommend to the senate that a Women's Studies major be approved and authorized to award the bachelor's degree.

According to commentary of the National Advisory Council on Women's Educational Programs, UMass' investment in Women's Studies is "parsimonious" compared with other universities and has received the least adequate space and resources of all the Special Programs reviewed in recent years.

The Program's desirable effect on the faculty and student body, its wide appeal to older students, and its fine counselling services are the specific factors which influenced the Council's recommendation stated the special report.

The senate will also tackle a resolution which attacks the current criteria for graduate faculty membership which, according to the proposal, is based on "numerical count of publications in highly specialized journals, according to the proposal.

Suspect in Flynt case released; 'all a hoax'

LAWRENCEVILLE, Ga. (UPI) — The only promising lead police have turned up the shooting of sex magazine publisher Larry Flynt fizzled yesterday when it was disclosed the suspect had concocted a hoax in hopes of collecting a reward.

Police in Norfolk, Va., released 20-year-old Teddy Morris after Georgia police flew there to question him about a call he had placed to them Tuesday inquiring about the case.

Morris told authorites a man he knew had told him he had been paid $1,500 to shoot a man in Georgia. Lawrenceville authorities immediately asked Norfolk police to pickup Morris, and he was arrrested in a bar Tuesday night and held under a quarter of million dollars bond.

Flynt and his Lawrenceville attorney, Gene Reeves, were critically wounded Monday during a lunch break in Flynt's trial on obscenity charges stemming from the distribution of Flynt's sexually explicit Hustler Magazine.

Flynt was removed from the critical list Wednesday at Button-Gwinnett Hospital and Reeves was reported in satisfactory condition.

Morris' attorney, Paul Lipkin, said when Morris phoned Lawrenceville police they "thought he was impersonating himself ... they thought he was telling on himself." But Lipkin said Morris was just "hoping to get a reward" for the bogus information. It was a "hoax," Lipkin said.

The attorney said that Norfolk patrolman Al Forbes had confirmed to investigating officers that he had seen Morris in Norfolk on the day of the shootings.

Capt. B. H. Blanott, one of the Georgia police officers who questioned Morris, said before returing to Georgia that Morris "has admitted it was all a hoax. We have definitely established that he was not in Lawrenceville, Ga."

Morris' mother, Frances Fodrey, claimed throughout that it was impossible her son could have been involved in the shooting because, she said, he was with her in Norfolk at the time. "There's no way he could have been in Georgia," said Mrs. Fodrey. "He and his girlfriend (Sissy Leland) went shopping with me that day."

Mrs. Fodrey was angry with both her son and police over the incident. "It's not only stupid, it's very embarrassing, I mean to be nationwide. I think it's really stupid. I think before they jumped to conclusions they should have known what they were working with first."

Blanott said the investigation "was nothing more than routine," and Lipkin said authorities were "just doing good poliice work ... looking for all clues."

"All I know," Mrs. Fodrey insisted, "is he got himself into a lot of trouble making that stupid phone call."

Meanwhile, the surgeon who worked on Flynt for six hours administering to his abdominal wounds said it was too early to say wheter Flynt would be paralyzed.

"Only time will tell," said Dr. Tahier Bagheri, when asked about the possibility of paralysis. "We have to go day by day ... because of the pain, we don't know."

Flynt's wife, Althea, said her husband was convinced that the attempt o his life was made because of a special the Los Angles Free Press — a Flynt publication — ran on the Kennedy assassination last month.

'All's fair... in school'

GOOD HOPE, Ala. (UPI) — Third grade teacher Margaret Thompson decided it would be interesting to see what new twists third graders could bring to old adages.

At the suggestion of a newspaper reporter, her students were given the beginnings of several old adages and told to complete them with their own thoughts.

"Two's company, three's a mess," Kelly Bice wrote. But she didn't stop there, adding, "Ask me no questions and you'll be smart."

Regina Richter recognized conflicts with the women's movement when she wrote, "Man shall not live for you women."

The students were given the beginnings of several other adages, such as "a penny saved..., silence is..., a bird in the hand is worth..., God made the country, man made the...."

They wanted the correct answers, but their teacher refused to tell them.

"I told them that there's were much better and much more interesting," she said.

Some of the answers were shrewd.

"Confession is good for getting out of school," said Darrel Godfrey. But Jennifer Alvert had another idea. "Confession is good for the paddling," she wrote.

"A bird in the hand is worth a dollar," said Dewayne Justice.

One third grader wrote, "All's fair in school." He also wrote, "Ask me no questions and be quiet," something he's probably been told before.

"Man shall not live without clothes," Jennifer Livingston wrote.

As for God and man, Kelly Bice wrote, "God made the country, and man made the pictures."

And another third grader said, "God made the country and man made the war."

Finally, who could argue with the Connie

State workers may strike

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (UPI) — Rhode Island officials Wednesday braced for a threatened Monday strike by two-thirds of the state government workforce but hoped an illegal walkout can be averted through new contract talks.

Leaders of Council 94 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees voted 22-5 Tuesday night to strike at 6:30 a.m. Monday in a wagereopener dispute from a contract that expires next October.

The threat came as a strike began by 400 steelworkers at the BIF division of General Signal Corp., in West Warwick and a walkout by 450 production and maintenance workers was in its third day at the Submarine Signal Division of Raytheon Corp.

Women's Week ... Wednesday in review

Women's Studies explored

By GAIL FLEMING
Collegian Staff

Gaining awareness about society and its treatment of women was one benefit students participating in the Women's Studies Program cited in a Women's Week workshop in the Campus Center yesterday.

Five women's studies students fielded questions from 20 women on the advantages of the program, and discussed their reasons for being involved.

Women's Studies is an interdisciplinary, academic program offering awareness into women's lives and achievements, and a feminist perspective in disciplines traditionally seen from a male point of view, according to the panelists.

The program organized in 1975, is nationally known as one of the best women's programs in the country. There are currently 85 students in the program.

According to the panelists there is a vital need for the Women's Studies Program.

Carol Tinkham, originally a political science major, felt "out of place in a curriculum that taught male history, art, and issues." She now combines women's studies and legal studies.

Maureen Carney expressed the need for women to communicate with each other as a way to cope with the "conflict between ignorance and consciousness."

Nancy Callahan turned to Women's Studies as an alternative to a major in psychology. She is combining women's psychology, history and law, and said "women's studies helps you learn about yourself."

Lisa Lofchie is an engineering major working towards a certificate, the equivalent of a minor, in women's studies. She is entering a predominantly male field, and feels women's studies is "strengthening her stand as a feminist."

The academic requirements of the program are introductory and advanced seminars, plus 36 hours of women's studies credit for a major and 18 hours for a certificate. These requirements allow for combinations of women's studies and other subjects like law, health, business, education and counseling.

The women's studies office is located in 508 Goodell.

Prison treatment subject of women's workshop

By JONI-SUE BLINDERMAN
Collegian Staff

Assata Shakur is a black woman who was called a "mad dog animal" by the New Jersey judge who convicted her of killing a highway patroller in March, 1973. Shakur's trial and subsequent treatment were the subjects of an International Women's Week workshop conducted yesterday in the Campus Center by Martha Pitts.

Pitts is a friend of Shakur and a member of Assata's Cell, a defense organization for Shakur.

Shakur was shot by a patrol officer with her hands in a surrender position, said Pitts. According to Pitts, no one has been able to prove Shakur fired a shot that day.

Pitts said that without any apparent reason, two weeks after being convicted, Shakur was transferred from a women's prison into an all male facility. The New Jersey officials decided Shakur was too dangerous to remain in a female institution and in contact with other prisoners, said Pitts.

Shakur remained in isolation, under constant guard, for two and a half years, said Pitts. She never saw the sun and the lights in her cell were never turned off, said Pitts. The only thing she was provided with was a basketball, said Pitts.

Shakur is a member of the Black Liberation Army. Pitts said this is the reason for the paranoia surrounding Shakur. New Jersey officials are known to refer to Shakur as "the soul of the BLA" and believe the BLA would go to any extreme to help Shakur escape, said Pitts. Yet no attempt has been made, in either New Jersey or New York where she was transferred in 1976, said Pitts.

Shakur had been charged with armed robbery and attempted murder in New York. During October, 1977 the attempted murder charges were dropped, probably, said Pitts, "because the state had no proof in support of them. The armed robbery charges will be appealed in the next two weeks."

If the charges are dropped, Shakur will be sent back to New Jersey for more legal proceedings. "But throughout that time her fate may be that of a woman who is not sent to the electric chair but feels its effects, all the same," said Pitts.

'Womancraft' practiced

By JILL TRISCHMAN
Collegian Staff

Womancraft, the development of women's physic skills, and the elements of physic healing, were discussed yesterday at a Women's Week workshop in the Campus Center facilitated by Jean Janani Erlbaum and attended by 100 women.

Erlbaum describes womancraft as, "relaxing yourself and getting in touch with that quiet space inside you that can be deepened and expanded."

Erlbaum led the group in relaxing, leading into the 'trance state.' Once everyone was comfortable in this state, they did exercises to "affirm the strength, health, and nature of the psychic skills," said Erlbaum,. "Practice of these skills is done by psychic projection of energy among groups of women, and to people they know that are not present."

Erlbaum also discussed color healing and aura cleansing. She said, "these techniques are done with the goal of sending healing energy and thoughts to ourselves, to people we know and love, and to the world around us."

"Most women find that they have been using these skills on their own. By making us consciously aware of our psychic nature, it helps us to choose how best to use our own skills in the effort to maintain and nurture good energy for ourselves, and others," said Erlbaum.

Erlbaum started studying yoga ten years ago, and was introduced to physic healing three years ago. She lives in Greenfield and has been teaching womancraft in this area for two years.

Lebron case discussed

By PATRICIA KEEFE
Collegian Staff

Representatives from the New York Committee for the Freedom of the Puerto Rican Nationalist Prisoners visited UMass yesterday to discuss the case of Lolita Lebron in a Women's Week workshop in the Campus Center.

The workshop facilitator, Madeline Gonzales, also works for the Union of Patriotic Puerto Ricans.

Gonzales began the workshop by announcing that "today is International Women's Day commemorating women as members of the human race. It took many women in sweatshops and political organizing for us to be where we are today." She then dedicated the afternoon to Lolita Lebron.

Lebron led a nationalist commando raid on March 1, 1954, attacking the U.S. Congress demanding independence for Puerto Rico. She has been imprisoned since 1954.

Gonzales said, "Lolita knew the consequences of her actions. As she shot her gun, the right of Puerto Ricans to bear arms in defense of freedom was reaffirmed."

Sexism as an institution in Puerto Rico is due to United States colonization, said Gonzales. She said, "Lolita was at times faced with male supremist views, but her spirit carried her on. Just as the historical role of women is distorted and undocumented, so is the history of Puerto Rico."

UPC replies to letter writers

To the Editor:

The Union Program Council is a Recognized Student Organization with students doing all of the work. We have been in existence less than one year. In that time we have produced nine concerts including George Benson and Randy Newman.

We have come far in terms of organization and knowledge, but we are still learning from every concert we produce.

The Elvis Costello concert is a good example of problems that we could not avoid and problems that were our fault which we will have to correct in future concerts.

Long lines are inherent with general admission concerts with well-known headliners. Yes, we should have explained the wait, but now we know better.

The late start was caused by Elvis' late arrival and sound system problems. This was out of our hands as was the heat which was unadjustable.

In response to Jack ["a well-aimed bottle would do"] Kelleher, those "assholes" you refer to are the people who work to make these concerts happen. Without the press and the behind the scene UPC workers doing publicity, booking, etc., you wouldn't have a choice between seeing "Elvis" or "Rocky." They deserve some reward for all their unpaid work.

Speaking of cameras, people had the right to bring their cameras in. Elvis also felt he had a right to change his mind and demand that all cameras be turned in. We did not enjoy making fools of ourselves by asking that all cameras be turned in. One of the reasons Elvis left early was because he spotted someone taking his picture.

All explanations aside, our goal is to put together a system to produce concerts at UMass and provide experience that is unavailable anywhere else on campus. Come see us in room 415 A Student Union. We welcome all constructive criticism.

'Green Suits' taking a break

To the Editor:

Ever try to find a place to park on campus? Well, if you've got a sticker for the lot you're in, chances are you'll find a spot six miles and four gasoline dollars away.

The blame, however, does NOT rest upon the shoulders of the Parking Office that is habitually accused of over allotting certain stickers. This, too, was my original explanation. It is unquestionably a multifaceted blunder created by the not-yet-famous "Parking Sgt." and his little troop of "Green Suits."

This conclusion has not been arrived at haphazardly but rather is the result of one and a half semesters of observation, four weeks of investigation, and several similar complaints from fellow drivers.

The situation, specifically, is that of Southwest; namely Lot 50. For the last few Fridays in particular, I have been using my car to run errands and have returned between the hours of 1:30 and 4 p.m. to do nothing but join the mini-parade of space hunters. On any given day, usually during the mid-afternoon, these convoys can be sighted speeding around Southwest in a vicious attempt to beat out a fellow parader.

What exactly is the problem, then, with the parking situation in Lot 50? It sounds too simple to say it's nothing more than illegally parked cars; illegally parked cars that are not towed, not even tagged [the latter, a tactic proven useless to date.]

And it's not that the Department of Public Safety is unaware of the situation. [My dialing finger got sore long before writers' cramp set in.] After the mad chain of phone calls aimed at finding the individual in charge, the buck stopped at the desk of the soon-to-be-famous "Parking Sgt." who, when contacted, hung up following a brief interim of the silent treatment.

I did, however, manage to draw out a "Damn Good Alibi" before the crass termination of our conversation. It seems that the almost-famous "Parking Sgt." is short on manpower. It also seems that this man has difficulty distinguishing between quality and quantity. Concerning his manpower the latter is present while the fomer is sadly hurting. I explained to the now-famous "Parking Sgt." that it is nearly impossible to get cars towed, much less tagged, with a sub-squad of "Green Suits" O.D.ing on coffee, etc., in the cafeteria section of Munchy's for more than 75 per cent of a "working" day. He promptly defended with the fact that his men needed their breaks. Now I ask: Breaks from what? Fact: Friday, March 3, 1978 not a single car was towed from ANYWHERE in Lot 50. Further I ask of the infamous "Parking Sgt.": I pay for my sticker; what's your excuse?

Kevin G. LeClair

More objection to BAMF

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to any comments, direct or indirect, made concerning the stated feelings of the Greek area at the senate meeting Wednesday night, March 1. It must be stated that a unanimous vote of the Greek Council in reference to the opposition to the Black American Music Festival was being represented.

The purpose of a student senator, in our admittedly naive opinion, is the fair representation of all students to the Student Senate. Last Wednesday night we were disappointed to see how few senators said what they really felt [let alone what their constituents felt] in reference to the BAMF for fear of ridicule, covert comments of "racist," or political devastation.

One general feeling in the senate is something to the effect of, "Don't step on anybody's toes." Some of the misdirected energy displays are absurd. People can get emotional about valid but removed issues such as a proposed building in Ohio, a legal case in California, etc., but issues on this campus which get the student body aroused, such as the BAMF, are treated by suppressing true feelings and covering tracks of an often misdirected senate.

The BAMF is, in our opinion, a conceptually great idea. If it could have taken place last fall, as was at one time planned, we believe none of this dissension would have occurred. It's unfortunate that it had to be planned for the spring and replace the usual Spring Concert. Although we realize the BAMF was not planned to take the place of the Spring Concert, it was voted by the Senate not to sponsor two concerts. So the BAMF is, in effect, the Spring Concert.

We, the Greeks, object to the BAMF being restricted to only black performers. To ask a community like UMass [the student body as opposed to the student senate] to put up such a significant portion of general SATF funds to sponsor a concert which represents such a small portion of the community is ludicrous. A basically cultural event without restriction on color would be acceptable because such an event would be more educational to all students. A deliberate choice of bands using the color of the members' skin as criterion is not only as racist as one can get but also injurious to our sense of what is right. Contrary to a comment made at the senate meeting by another senator, there has been third world representation at previous concerts. We don't think in numbers and percentages so it is difficult to realize other people do. What is considered the "fair" representation which that senator referred to? X per cent of performers from the third world to X per cent of third world students? Can't we all just be people and try to see past physical color or nationality? Racism, as defined, "the notion that one's own ethnic stock is superior," exists. We have to realize that but we also have to work to negate racist effects. This act of having a BAMF restricted to only black performers is one very sure way of perpetuating the racism that the third world community professes to hate so much.

We think a large percentage of the white community has a true appreciation for black performers; not as black performers, just as performers. A "talented" person is just that. We see no justification for any other adjective to describe that person — especially those adjectives which pertain to color.

INDEX denied $5000 SATF

To the Editor:

On Tuesday, Feb. 27, the INDEX, the UMass yearbook, had its annual meeting with the Student Senate Budget Committee. In a valiant effort to level fund all RSO groups, the Budget Committee has left the INDEX $5,000 short of the anticipated costs for the 1979 book. They are leaving the means of obtaining the additional funds up to the INDEX staff, suggesting a few ways to eliminate this deficit. We at the INDEX do not feel it is fair for a few students to make a decision which will set a precedent for years to come, so we are asking you, the paying students, for your opinion. The options are:

1. Raise the charge for the yearbook for undergraduates from $1 to $2.
2. Include an advertising section in the book.
3. Increase the price of the sitting fees for seniors from $4 to $6.
4. Ask the Student Senate to give the additional $5,000 from the Student Activities Tax Fund.

Problems:

1. We fear that students will resent paying an additional $1 for a book which has traditionally been funded by the SATF and revenue from senior portraits.
2. An advertising section would mean additional pages; if we charged $200 for each page of advertising [as the Collegian does], at least 25 pages would have to be added, which would increase the overall cost of the book.
3. If the sitting fee was raised to $6, seniors might be discouraged from having their picture in the yearbook.

The option which the INDEX sees as the most viable is to request the additional money from the Student Senate. They [we] have $1.1 million to distribute to organizations and activities. The award-winning INDEX is one of the tangible memorabilia which a student takes with him-her when leaving the University. A cut in quality is out, but feedback reagarding the other options is necessary before the charge for the INDEX sky-rockets at the Budget Committee's convenience.

The choice is yours. Please write the INDEX at 102 Campus Center or respond publicly in a letter to the Collegian. Let us know how you feel your yearbook should be funded. All answers will be forwarded to the Student Senate.

"Turning Point": striking emotional conflict

"The Turning Point"
Written by Arthur Laurents
Directed by Herbert Ross
Starring Shirley MacLaine and Anne Bancroft

Reviewed by MARK L. ATKINSON

Although ballet is an area of entertainment I share little interest in, the raves this movie has received aroused my curiosity enough to see what it had to offer.

The Turning Point was made in cooperation with the American Ballet Theatre, a group of outstanding performers who add an aura of excitement to the film. Director Ross used good judgment by utilizing the dancing as a backdrop and leaving center-stage open for some critical character involvement.

film

Mikhail Baryshnykov known for his ability as a dancer, is sensational in his screen debut. His role as a Russian heart-breaker brings his sex appeal to the surface when he charms a pretty young ballerina played by Leslie Browne. Her performance as both a dancer and actress almost steals the film from the more established stars Anne Bancroft and Shirley MacLaine.

Bancroft portrays an aging dancer who has devoted everything in her life to being a star. Her involvement was so intense that self-realization of other parts of life were presently oblivious. MacLaine is a friend who decided to settle down and raise a family. The frustrations of the past are readily apparent when the two friends meet again at a ballet opening. Complications arise when MacLaine's daughter (Browne) becomes close to Bancroft who has more influence on her life than her own mother.

The highpoint of this film is watching MacLaine and Bancroft in face-to-face confrontations. Their high-pitched emotions finally come to a hilt and are resolved through understanding. The results are predictable but the two stars carry it off extremely well.

Above all, the tremendous acting and versatile direction by Ross ("The Goodbye Girl", "Sunshine Boys") make the Turning Point one of the year's best. The film has recently been nominated for 11 Academy Awards.

Will apathy bury the score?

By DEBBIE SCHAFER

It has been more than fifty years since Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti were put to death in the electric chair for a crime which many people still believe they did not commit. Much has been written about them since that time, and one of the most notable works is an unfinished opera by Marc Blitzstein that now rests in the hands of David M. Knauf, charman of the UMass theatre department.

The future of that opera now seems as uncertain as its past.

Composer-playwright Marc Blitzstein retired to the island of Martinique in the fall of 1963 to work on "Sacco and Vanzetti," an opera which had been commissioned by the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York. He met an untimely death there in January 1964 when he was fatally beaten by three sailors; the opera was thought to be lost, until May of that same year when the manuscript was discovered in the trunk of Blitzstein's car and turned over to Leonard Bernstein.

Bernstein was a close friend and associate of Marc Blitzstein, and was named in Blitzstein's will as his literary executor. It was reported at that time that Leonard Bernstein would perhaps complete the opera, which was still under consideration by the Metropolitan Opera company, but the project was abandoned for reasons unknown to us at present.

Meanwhile, David Knauf tells us that he "has toyed with the project of getting the opera completed for several years now." Knauf became acquainted with Blitzstein in 1962 through the Wisconsin Center for Theatre Research, an organization which Knauf himself directed and which collected manuscript materials for posterity.

He acquired a number of Blitzstein's manuscript materials at Wisconsin, including "a number of personal things he gave me that I treasure a great deal." This also included the unfinished "Sacco and Vanzetti" musical score.

Knauf agrees that it would be "a wonderful thing" and "terrifically topical" to produce the opera through the UMass theatre department. But it will take a lot more than good intentions alone to make it happen.

"It's just so enormous that I don't see how it could be completed," he tells us, "unless, of course, Mr. Bernstein wants to jump into it with two feet and come here to help us out."

"I don't see how we could get it done otherwise," says Knauf. "It's just such a massive undertaking.

Blitzstein had reportedly completed the first two acts of "Sacco and Vanzetti" before his death, and had sketched out the third act at least partially. Ross Parmenter of the New York Times reported that Blitzstein had planned it to be "a grand opera in using large forces and having an almost orchestral symphonic continuity." As such, it would require a formidable chunk of creativity and hard work to complete---not to mention a great deal of money, also.

"If we could get somebody to donate us a hundred thousand dollars, then I suppose we could get it done," says Knauf.

One hundred thousand dollars is "in the ballpark" of total cost, according to Albert G. Huetteman of the UMass music department. To launch the project "you would need tons of money," he says, "probably at least $50,000 just to have it commissioned and to have copiers for all the parts" of a full length opera.

David Kantor of the university Fine Arts Council, said that he had not heard of the Sacco and Vanzetti opera previously but was willing to venture a guess that "the feasibility is not very good for it right now" when the high costs were considered. Several other sources were also of the opinion that such a project was far beyond the budget capabilities of the campus arts community.

Financial concerns aside, there are those who feel that the completion of "Sacco and Vanzetti" is beyond the capabilities of campus groups for other reasons. "We just don't have the talent here to do it," says Huetteman. "Undergraduates just couldn't handle an opera" and there are not enough graduate students to fill the bill. "We don't have enough singers," he says. There is only one graduate student in the music department who is majoring in voice, according to Huetteman. There are presently 30 graduate students in the theatre department.

William C. Venman, director of Continuing Education and local authority on "light opera," disagrees with professor Huetteman in some regards; "concerning opera in general, of course there is enough talent here to stge a production,"he says, as long as "something terribly complicated" was not being attempted.

He could offer no comment on "Sacco and Vanzetti" in particular because he had not examined the musical score although he was aware of its existence. "I am not familiar with the amount of work it would involve," he told us.

Apparently very few people on campus are familiar with the "Sacco and Vanzetti" score and libretto with the exception of David Knauf.

"We've talked briefly with some members of the music department here, Al Huetteman in particular. It hasn't really gotten beyond that point," says Knauf.

Huetteman recalls speaking "very casually" with Knauf "About a year ago" concerning the opera. It was not discussed in great detail.

"It doesn't surprise me" that David Knauf has that manuscript, says Doris Abramson. Abramson in the director of graduate studies in the theatre department. She notes that he "often comes up with materials, and has some marvelous ideas."

She is also unfamiliar with "Sacco and Vanzetti" but "hopes that there would be enough good talent" to produce the opera on campus. "It would be exciting, worth looking into," she told us.§

Since the opera is a part of the late Marc Blitzstein's estate, Knauf would need permission of the estate before he could take steps toward completing the score. It is Knauf's understanding that the estate is in control of Blitzstein's sister Mrs. Edward Davis of Philadelphia. He told us that he did "communicate with her several times, when this idea started" and that she seemed to be "very interested in it."

"There would be the necessity of obtaining permissio to do the opera," he says," but my sense of it at this moment in time is that the permission would not be difficult to come by. I also understand that the Metropolitan Opera no longer has an option on it" and there are no legal problems in that regard.

Alan Light, Concert Hall Manager for the Fine Arts Center, is just a bit more skeptical than Knauf is concerning "Sacco and Vanzetti."

"Who would finish the score?" he asks. "Not David Knauf. He's not a composer."

"He doesn't have the rights to it," Light explained, "It's not in the public domain. First

Leonard Bernstein, who introduced the three songs, said that "With a Woman to Be" was the only known surviving excerpt from "Sacco and Vanzetti." The manuscript was lost at the composer's death. "Idiots First," however, appears to be virtually complete, and Mr. Bernstein is going to finish and orchestrate it.

Blitzstein legacy: the conscious composer

It comes as little surprise that Marc Blitzstein (1905-1964) chose to focus his artistic efforts on the Sacco and Vanzetti trial; he was a lifelong defender of human rights, and was often the subject of political controversy during his own career.

Close friend Aaron Copeland writes in a memorial tribute that "Blitzstein's life exemplified a truism that needs to be re-emphasized today, namely, that 'every artist has the right to make his art out of an emotion that really moves him'... It was the basic motivation for Marc Blitzstein's art, and resulted in a contribution to American music that is yet to be fully evaluated."

Blitzstein is remembered by many for his translation of "The Threepenny Opera", but perhaps more notable, and more representative of Blitzstein's true talents is "The Cradle Will Rock", originally written for the Federal Theatre Project in 1937.

A story of industrial corruption and labor union heroics, "Cradle" was shot down by the government before it had official opening night. Producers John Houseman and Orson Welles staged it in a rented theatre without benefit of costumes, orchestra, or Federal Funds.

Theatre critic Brooks Atkinson noted at that time "we have proof that a theatre supported by government funds cannot be a free agent when art has an insurgent political motive."

"We do know that he was a radical, a social radical," says David Knauf, chairman of the UMass Theatre Dept., "and as such was a favorite of the artists and intellectuals of that period. whe wasn't writing works, though, that were supposed to be poopular as such."

He may not have had a wide popular base, but he was not doubt controversial. Even though "Sacco and Vanzetti" was never completed, it caused a controversy when the National Federation of Music Clubs opposed its production due to Blitzstein's communist affiliation.

Avatar fuses styles; music deluxe

by MONICA YATES

Tomorrow, (Friday) the office of Counseling and Assistance for Older Students, (C.A.O.S.), will sponsor a party for all students in the Five-College area. The party will be held in the Alumni House at Amherst College, at eight o'clock p.m., and will feature music by Avatar.

Avatar is the name of a Northampton based band with a difference, and it's a difference that people are beginning to discover they like.

At Smith College last fall, people were dancing and excited to be listening, aware that with Avatar, something special was happening. At Hampshire College, and at last semester's C.A.O.S. party, audiences tried to put it into words: "Usually, when I go to a bar, or a party at school, the music is just there --Avatar affects me," said a Smith student. "You can tell this band isn't just ' doing it for the money', for an ego trip -- they seem to be trying hard to play music they can believe in, and they're involved. I can feel that, it's exciting," said Joan Dermers, a UMass student who attended that C.A.O.S. party.

The band, which plays in a style which they describe as latin-jazz-funk-rock, features Toni Hardin on vocals, Jon Weeks on flute and alto saxophone, Raymond Blanchet on keyboards, Rudi Weeds on bass, and Dave Morin on drums.

Toni Hardin joined the band in December, and she has strenghtened the already exciting connection between this band and its audience. Her voice is smooth and rich, and covers a broad range. Her style comes from a sure and instinctive ability to relate completely to the songs she sings. When she does Chuck Mangione's '"Land of Make Believe" she is now pensive, now playful, and she takes the audience with her wherever she goes. She sings "Summertime" with a deliciously bluesy funky feel, and when she does Esther Satterfield's "Love Music," it is a happy invitation to get up and dance, and feel as just plain good as Toni Hardin does.

Jon Weeks and Raymond Blanchet have been playing together for several years, and it shows in the creativity of their work. It's as if the two of them aren't satisfied to simply play a song; like all good jazz musicians, they seem to say, here is a song, let's take it and go. The result is a performance that goes beyond what audiences in this area have been used to. They take such standards as "The Girl From Ipanema" to places where they've never been, using the feel and structure of the song as a basis for their own highly original work.

Equally at home on acoustic and electric piano, Blanchet is all over the keyboard, with riffs and chord progressions that are uniquely his. He describes his own style as "cosmic", and its effect on audiences is surely magic.

Jon Weeks has to be one of the more impressive jazz flutists around. His sound is pure and clean, with a variety of articulations that make for dramatic changes in mood and texture. On alto saxophone, he is emotional and expressive, his solos making swift, natural transitions from mellow to angry to forceful and back again.

On electric bass, Rudi Weeks is a solid performer. Avatar's repetoire is rythmically diverse, and Rudi handles the changes -- from latin to funk, to blues, to rock -- with versatility and style. A true bass player, he seems to sense the beat with his whole body; it's almost as interesting to watch him as to listen to him.

Cable station opens in Amherst

by JOSE TOLSON

After three years of negotiations, Community Access Television in Amherst is a reality. The "Center for Community Access Television (CCATV)" will begin operation over cable channel 3 on March the 12th at 8:00 p.m. with an eight part series on Nuclear Power.

The series entitled "The Center for Community Access Television Examines Nuclear Power" is made possible by a grant from the Massachusetts Foundation for Humanities and Public Policy which is a program of the National Endowment for the Humanities as well as the cooperation and participation of the Northeast Utilities Company and The Massachusetts Public Research Group (Mass. PIRG). This grant is the second from the Mass. Foundation for Humanities and Public Policy in their continuing support of Community Access Television.

The issue of nuclear power has become especially relevant to the people of this area since the proposal for a Nuclear Power Plant in Montague (Massachusetts) was submitted by the Northeast Utilities Co. The first program of the series entitled "Nuclear Power in Our Back Yard' will feature panelists; William Semanie: the Montague information officer for Northeast Utilities, Ms. Anna Gyorgy: of the Clamshell Alliance Resource Committee, and Ms. Blue Carreker: the coordinator for CCATV, with Prof. John Brentlinger of the Philosophy Dept. UMass as Moderator. The Nuclear Power series and the Community Access Center will be opened by Mr. Lou Hayward Town Manager of Amherst, who will explain the relationship of Community Access Television and the town of Amherst, and Mr. Nathanial Reed, director of the Massachusetts Foundation for Humanities and Public Policy, who will explain the Foundations position on CCATV.

The remaining programs in the series will address themselves to such questions as: Who Should Make the Choices?, More Jobs: Fact or Fiction, Is Local Power Desirable?, and concluding on Sunday April 30, with the final program, The Nuclear Controversy: How Can Citizens Effect Decisions? Each program is designed to offer a balanced perspective on the available information in an effort to allow the viewers ample time to draw their own conclusions. A portion of each program has been set aside for viewers at home to respond to the panelists with phone calls. Arrangements are also being made to repeat each program on Tuesday night at 8:00 p.m. as well as being re-aired in So. Hadley and Westfield on the cable systems there.

CCATV has other programs planned for the future and needs the help of people in the community as scriptwriters, camera crew, talent etc. Call us, we'll tell you all about it and maybe we'll see you on CCATV.

N.E./Sylvan Third World recruitment

The weekend of March 9, 10, and 11, the Northeast/Sylvan Area will host a Third World recruitment weekend. During this time students from Boston will be brought to Amherst. In the past Northeast/Sylvan has had a reputation of being nonreceptive to Third World students. Currently, Third World students choose to live in other areas because of more programming academically and socially available to them as a minority group.

In order to make this weekend a success, we need the support and cooperation of many University agencies. The schedule of weekend events is as follows: On Thursday, March 9; arrival, registration, and room assignments. Friday, March 10; a campus tour of classes and various departments, workshops with CCEBS, BCP, Financial Aid, and Admissions. A presentation by Eno is planned for the early evening and ending the day with a party in the Anacaona Cultural Center-Dwight Hs. CONT. FROM PAGE 14

David Morin, on drums, performs with intensity, control, and impressive technical skill. He keeps the beat and goes further, decorating it with the surprising little touches and delicate flashes of technique that make him a completely original performer. His solos are, in the words of Hampshire College students who heard Avatar at the Tavern last month, "incredible", "amazing", "unbelievable." In Stevie Wonder's "Another Star", Morin takes a ten-minute solo that leaves audiences begging for more. He begins with a hard driving rock beat, and gradually, subtly, using everything he has -- his sticks, his hands, fingers, elbows, feet, knees -- to get the precise sound he wants, he comes to a point where he is almost lying on top of the snare in concentration, the audience hushed as he taps a series of rim shots. Slowly he adds punctuation from the cymbals and the other drums, and finally he returns to the original beat, all without losing any of the momentum of the song.

About one third of the material Avatar plays is original. Songs like the danceable, happy-go-lucky "Funk-a-Fyde" benefit from the imagination and talent of the group as a whole. Rudi Weeks has written five of the originals, in styles which range from the summery, catchy, "Dear Eggs" to the almost angry quick "Wail Away", to a contemplative "Stars in a Cloudy Sky" which is reminiscent of Joni Mitchell's work. Blanchet's "Patricieux" and "Acsess to Euphoria" are thoughtful jazz tunes. Jon Weeks' compositions are imaginative and melodic. "Puppey Face" combines a wandering, light melody with a base line that suggests something deeper. His song "Now a-Daze" combines an almost trance-like quality with the appealing melodic line that is becoming his trademark.

The band performs selections by Antonio Carlos Jobin, Gato Barbieri, Carole King, Joni Mitchell and Chick Corea, along with the originals and the Stevie Wonder and Esther Satterfield tunes already mentioned.

It is a different kind of music, and all of the songs Avatar plays have a kind of audience appeal that is unique. "I always thought Jazz was boring, but if this is Jazz, it isn't. I love dancing to it," said Wendy Phillips, a UMass student, at the C.A.O.S. party last semester. "Going to hear a band like Avatar is an experience," said loyal Smith College fan. "You just feel good, dancing to this kind of music -- it's fun-- I don't worry about impressing anyone, the way I do with a straight Rock'n'Roll or disco band," says Rudi Weeks. "We're trying to reach a crowd that is tired of rock, who want something more. We're an alternative."

You can hear Avatar at the C.A.O.S. party tomorrow night at eight o'clock. They can also be heard at the Jolly Bull on rte. 9 in Hadley, on March 23rd and 24th. Don't pass up an opportunity to hear this exciting new band for yourself!

Fantacy Hill
First Step
RCA

Reviewed by RON MILLER

At the risk of sounding trite "Fantacy Hill's" first step should be their last. Their music is the combination of three chords which seem to be lowered or raised an octave as the songs change. At first the group appears to have potential, but as the listener realized he is hearing the same tune every song, the record gets dull.

Musically, the group is mediocre. The drummer, however, is particularly unpleasant. I have seen two-year olds banging on their cereal bowls play the drums better. The biggest joke of all on the album is the space junk they throw in to make the album snappier. It is a very poor imitation of Steve Miller-type space introductions.

The group is imitation rock and roll. They figure if they play loud and throw in a little space garbage they can pass off as musicians. I would recommend this album for ten to twelve-year olds. Then, however, I might be insulting the musical tastes of preteens.

Endless Wire
Gordon Lightfoot
Warner Bros.

Reviewed by ALEX STEIN

Saying that Gordon Lightfoot's new album needs to be grown into is like saying that there is graffiti in the library staricases. After turning out many excellent singles and albums in the past, he seems to have run out of new material.

The album features the usual Lightfoot mixture of sing-a-longs ("Daylight Katy," "Hangdog Hotel Room) and pitying dreamy-weapies ("If Children Had Wings," "Sweet Guinevere"). However, unlike his previous works, this album descends into the vast pool of mediocrity. There has been no artistic progression since the last album. If some of the songs here sound like older Lightfoot songs, it's because the music is very similar, and in some cases the same as his earlier songs. Another indication of his lack of new material is the (current) single from the album, "Thc Circle is Small," which was written in 1969!

The overall sound is different from past Lightfoot albums. Previously most Lightfoot songs featured a lead acoustic guitar, an electric bass, and an acoustic rhythm guitar, with some of the best moments coming when an electric lead guitar was added. In this album every song features an electric lead guitar, but nearly all fail miserably.

The only saving grace is the title track, which is the only one that successfully uses the electric lead. But more importantly, Lightfoot's unique vocal styling guides us through the imaginative images in the lyrics ("Down in the dark of a burnt out soul/There's a few good second hand dreams").

Besides that one cut, the only possible explanation for this piece of plastic is that it was just something thrown together to fulfill his Warner Bros. contract. If you're a total Gordon Lightfoot freak who absolutely can't live without this record, then buy it. If you're not, why not spend the same money on Lightfoot's classic album Sundown?

Waiting For Columbus
Little Feat-Live
Warner Brothers

Reviewed by MARK HARRIS LEVITAN

More appropriately titled, this double album would be called "The Best of Little Feat." It covers everything from Sailin' Shoes to Time Loves A Hero, and contains nearly all the Feats' favorites. And it's no mere coincidence that the best of Little Feat is a Little Feat concert. They are a quality rock'n roll band capable of really motivating an audience.

But this long-awaited release of live little Feat is not flawless. Some cuts on the first two sides come close to being flat. For instance, the ending of "Old Folks Boogie," falls apart and the segue from "Time Loves A Hero" to "Day or Night" lacks any sort of tension. The performances in these cases are clearly not the best available.

By side three, the venerable "Dixie Chicken - Tripe Face Boogie" and a good cut of "Rocket In My Pocket" put the Feat back in the drivers' seat. And side four with "Willin'," "Sailin' Shoes," and "Feats Don't Fail Me Now" is damn near what the whole set should sound like.

For sheer intensity, two of the underground live albums, Rampant Synchopatio and Electrif Lycanthrope are woth seeking. But if you demand a little better recording quality, Waiting For Columbus with all its flaws, waits for you. One way or another, Little Feat is still one hell of a rock 'n roll band.

Jefferson Starship
Earth
Grunt/RCA

Reviewed by ROSS NERENBERG

The Jefferson Airplane/Starship (take your pick) have long since abandoned writing songs in which "one pill makes you larger and one pill makes you small," but they still possess a keen social awareness, as well as tremendously loyal following. Their latest album, Earth, has just been released, and it is indeed one which was worth the wait. The nine selections contained here go a long way toward reestablishing The Starship as a still vital, still refreshingly creative group.

As usual, Grace "Let Me Save The Human Race" Slick and Marty Balin alternate lead vocal chores. The mandatory Balin ballad (a la "Caroline," "Miracles" and "With Your Love" is "Count On Me," a rolling love song with definite hit single potential. "Runaway" is another ballad sung by Balin which has potential. Ms. Slick's most satisfying number is "Show Yourself," which, rather than being a tune extolling the virtues of exhibitionism is, instead, a thoughtful lamentation on the state of contemporary America. "Take Your Time" is another of her better efforts. And only Gracie (in collaboration with guitarist Craig Chaquico) could compose the song that just may become an anthem for a large segemnt of American youth—the ne'er to be forgotten "Skateboard."

Closing the album out is its longest cut, "All Nite Long," a group composition which brings to mind the classic "Ride The Tiger." Indeed, it makes for an excellent conclusion to an excellent album. Earth has what it takes to please one and all and earns for The Starship a "even the cover art is great" A.

John Hartford
All In The Name Of Love
Flying Fish

Reviewed by MARK HARRIS LEVITAN

For a Mississippi riverboat captain, this man is quite a musician. His very personal form of music bridges country, bluegrass and comedy, and he is always taking the chance that will show him to be a complete fool. Some of his more humorous numbers include "Don't Leave Your Records In The Sun" and "Dancin' In The Bathtub" (which is on this disc.) But beneath the humor and the fact that he never takes anything or himself too seriously is a sensitive and very talented performer. John Hartford once wrote a stirring country love song called "Gentle On My Mind." Glen Campbell sang it and became a star. Glen Campbell is still a star. John Hartford is still writing open and honest love songs, becoming better with age.

This new album is his most coherent effort in a long time. It has a theme -- love -- and it has some great new material and some great old stuff on the subject. "The Six O'clock Train And The Girl With The Green Eyes" is an example of the new. It has a slow country feel, and the lyrics are story-like -- almost ignoring the fact that it's a song. So despite the nice tune and the solid performance, the feeling dominates. Nashville writers work their whole lives to write a song that has the feeling of any one of six songs from this album.

Most pleasing is the inclusion of a swinging updated version of the classic "Gentle On My Mind." The old masterpiece sails on strongly at the hands of outstanding musicians named Sam Bush, Buddy Emmons, Benny Martin, Roy Husky, Pig Robbins, and Jimmy Colvard. These gentlemen's talents are only one major reason for the album's success. John Hartford, performing on the banjo, guitar, vocals and lovesongs, is the other.

Pirates
Out Of Their Skulls
Warner Bros.

Reviewed by RANDALL BARISH

The Pirates' release Out Of Their Skulls is living proof that an early group of British rocc nnovators, disbanded since 1966, can come together again to successfully produce and improve upon the hard-driving and foot-stomping music characteristic of their early years.

The Pirates, established by Frederick Heath (alias Johnny Kedd) in 1958, were injecting heavy doses of rock n' roll into the British music scene several years before the Beatles took over; turning out a number of hits including the rock classic "Shakin' All Over."

On the album's live side, the Pirates belt out a group of early 60'ish hard rock tunes including two hits of their own "Please Don't Touch" and "Shakin' All Over" to an enthusiastic audience. The music is excitingly high-energy and represents early hard rock at its finest.

The studio side consists of materials arranged by Green. Most of the songs on this side are done in a more contemporary polished style than the live side but don't have as much of the vitality or intensity.

Spence's loud, gritty Presleyish voice together with Green's piercing wailing guitar riffs succeed in bringing the listener back in time to a more simple direct style in the rock n' roll era. Those who can appreciate early rock in its rawest loudest aspects will find Out Of Their Skulls an enjoyable album.

Wet Willie
Greatest Hits
Capricorn

Reviewed by TOM ANDERSON

With the Lynrd Skynrd crash still fresh in everyone's mind, the state of Southern rock seems to be in question. There is, however, at least one group which is still in good shape and still rising -- Wet Willie. The group recently moved to a new label and released Manorisms, a fairly popular album that has generated the first true hit single for Wet Willie. However, the boys released seven previous albums, and this collection traces their career from 1970-1977. Although this material will probably be instantly familiar to any of the group's fans, Wet Willie was never a widely-known group and Greatest Hits serves as a good introduction for those unacquainted with their past. Not surprisingly, the best cut is "Keep on Smilin'," but several others stand out as well: "Leona," "Dixie Rock," and "Everything That 'Cha Do." Wet Willie is raucous, loud and gutsy: a powerful blend of rock, blues and a little bit of funk as well. While the group may just now be gaining wide rcognition, this album shows what their fans have loved for the past seven years: good solid Southern rock & roll.

Gallagher And Lyle
Showdown
A & M

Reviewed by BRETT MILANO

Benny Gallagher and Graham Lyle have been making music together for the past eight years; first as part of a folk-based band called McGuinness Flint, and later leaving to begin a long string of duo albums. Along the way they've made some fine songwriting contributions to other peoples' repertoire- Fairport Convention have recorded a particularly notable version of their "Friendship Song." On their own albums, the duo have been evolving from their folk background toward a more eclectic style, and this new album continues this with a diverse and interesting collection of tunes. The title song sounds like an Anglicized version of Poco, with some nice contrast between the smooth vocals and funky instrumental arrangement. "Backstage" rocks along easily, with the addition of brass and some intelligent lyrics about the theatrical overtones of life. Their folk influence is more evident on "In Your Eyes", a ballad driven by acoustic guitars and vocal harmonies. My favorite song here is "You're the One," which combines a strong chorus and expressive vocal with such diveres touches as accordions combine with electric guitars in the instrumentation. G&L have had a number of British hit singles, and songs like "You're the One" could provide some well-needed quality if they ever make it to the American airwaves. Their back-up band is composed mainly of little-known but thoroughly capable musicians, with Billy Livesay deserving special mention for his keyboard contributions. With winter finally over and spring set to arrive (so they keep telling me), albums like Showdown will provide fine entertainment for sunny afternoons.

Black Oak
Race With The Devil
Capricorn

Reviewed by ROSS NERENBERG

Guitarist Jimmy Henderson and lead vocalist Jim Dandy Mangrum are the sole survivors from the old Black Oak Arkansas, but, unfortunately, the new Black Oak sounds no better than the old. This band may be new, but they're not improved. They may be more adept instrumentally, but, all in all, they're too tame—they seem incapable of getting down to the good old-fashioned, gut-busting rock'n'roll (save for the Adrian Gurvitz-penned title track and side two's "Feels So Good") which is Jim Dandy's trademark, not to mention his real strength. He's no ballad singer, and the sooner that he faces up to this realization, the better off he (and Black Oak) will be. A prime example of a change which has not worked out for the best, Race With The Devil can hardly be categorized as a hell of a record. Instead, it warrants a "can't make a silk purse out of sow's ear" CD.

Van Halen
Warner Bros.

Reviewed by GERARD F. HALLAREN JR.

Reminiscent of Alvin Lee's back up and, The Blue Oyster Cult, Aerosmith, Deep Purple and just about every other Heavy Metal band, the Brothers Van Halen teamed with vocalist David Roth and Bassist Michael Anthony have turned out an amazingly poor album. Despite Doobie producer Ted Templton's efforts to make a good album the band is just too bad to be true.

If it can be said that the disc has a bright spot it comes with the bands rendering of: "You Really Got Me". Van Halen's treatment of the Kink's rock classic is at best fair but at least it brings to mind the original. Again when they perform another man's work, ie. Elmore James' "Ice Cream Man," the band almost comes together with some good but unorigianl sounds. However this tune is ruined at the break when Alex Van Halen's inexperienced lead destroys any momentum the song had. The rest of the album, composed of original Van Halen tunes, is unimaginative and annoying. (This seems to be the trend when the whole band works on writing the tunes).

With such fine original songs as:"Atomic Punk", "Running with the Devil", and "Eruption"; the band Van Halen have cut an album totally worth ignoring...Now I'll just put on a little Yardbirds or some Zeppelin to recover.

Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band
The Savannah Band Meets King Pennet
(RCA)

Reviewed by MARIO BARROS

This LP is the band's long-awaited second act and after numerous listenings I feel that it's worth the wait. The Band has dealt us another helping of their uncanny blend of innovation and nostalgia that holds something valuable for all to hear.

Their smooth ballroom sound harkens back to the 30s and early 40s with its mellow swing elements. The Band sways while Cory Daye truly entrances with her fabulous vocals which are a very important link to the days when the lady and her leads were the key element in the big bands. We hear shades of Ella leading Ellington and Marlena Shaw leading Basie's band. Ms. Daye is really a textbook vocalist while she ranges from some very mellow crooning to some fast-paced and exciting scat.

Cuts like "Mr. Love" and "The Gigolo and I" will take you back with their smooth arrangements and swing feel while "Transistor Madness" with some well-placed special effects and synthesizer riffs remind you that there is a tomorrow. This blend of yesterday and tomorrow makes the Savannah Band probably the most influential force on the music scene today. Their influence can be heard all over the charts and showed up most markedly in Oddessy's single, "Native New Yorker" (my choice for single of the year in '77).

Stoney Browder and August Darnel throw in another fine production effort that truly warrants a good hard listen.

Barry Manilow
Even Now
Arista

Reviewed by ALICIA CUNEO & GREG LAKIS

Barry Manilow's latest effort, Even Now, is definitely his poorest effort to date. The album, with the exceptions of his latest single, "Can't Smile Without You", and the title cut, "Even Now", is extremely monotonous and very reflective of the music of the 1940's that your parents would be very familiar with. Very little relief from this effect is experienced throughout the entire album. The song, "Copacabana", gives one the feeling that he is sitting in the 1940's night club waiting for Desi Arnaz to come out and sing three choruses of BaBaloo. Even Now is excessively mellow, an excellent album to mellow out and crash to.

The album can not come close to comparing with Manilow's earlier efforts. All songs on the album lack the excitement of "Bandstand Boogie", the feeling behind "Mandy" and "Weekend In New England", and the lightheartedness of "It's A Miracle". The total album is lacking in all areas that pushed his previous efforts to the top of the pop charts.

All songs on Even Now echo themselves, their common theme is that of Manilow's experiences with the female sex, which just adds to the nonotony of the album. The name of Barry Manilow, and the name alone, will be the only object that could possibly push this poor, nonotonous, and mellow album to a respectable position on the pop charts.

Jackson Browne
Running On Empty
Asylum

Reviewed by MARK HARRIS LEVITAN

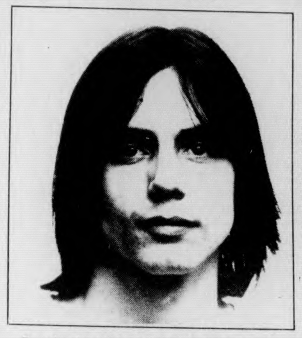
This album presents a novel approach to a live disc with its "all-new" material and its onstage, backstage, hotel room and travelling bus recording locations. The songs deal with the road life of a rock musician, providing a theme that runs strongly from "Running On Empty" on side one through "The Load-Out" and "Stay" on side two. Backing up Jackson is The Section, a fine band unto themselves, along with Browne's musical alter-ego, David Lindley (guitars, fiddle) and vocalists Rosemary Butler and Doug Haywood. The high energy level that these people provide is a welcome change for Browne's music.

Jackson Browne has gained respect and admiration as a writer of songs that have expanded his personal experience into a language that a mass audience can relate to. He has developed themes of alienation and struggle in an uncompromising world progressively with each album. But these themes are lacking here. In fact, an audience grown accustomed to the richness of Browne's "philosophical" songs may have trouble with Running On Empty.



But that is not to say that Jackson has lost his way with words; the subject matter is all that's changed. And where in the past, Browne's attempts to meld sensitive lyrics with harder rock failed more often than not ("Walking Slow", for example), the new album has three notable successes in the rock vein. "Nothing But Time" is a bluesy number with a great backbeat. Co-written with the tour manager, it depicts life travelling on the bus--hell, they recorded it on the bus! The song "Running On Empty" opens the album with a kick. Recorded onstage, it really opens up behind Lindley's lap-steel slide. The song is personal, autobiographical and full of the symbolism that Browne is known for: "Gotta do what you can just to keep your love alive---Trying not to confuse it with what you do to survive." "You Love The Thunder" is powerful in much the same way. Browne's improved singing is another factor in the way these songs come across.

The real exciting part of the album is in the looseness of some of the cuts. Rev. Gary Davis' "Cocaine" makes it into the album (Browne has often performed it), and what's a better setting than to record it late one night in room 124 of the Edwardsville, Ill. Holiday Inn? With appropriate stoned humor at the end. And there's "Rosie," a love song to a groupie, co-written by the head roadie. Tongue in cheek, hand on ass, it's kind of touching.

But Danny O'Keefe's "The Road" is one haunting song that wraps it all up. The first part of it recorded in a hotel room, the finish is live onstage. The distance and the dreams: "And when you stop to let 'em know you got it down---- It's just another town along the road." It's like holding a mirror up to a mirror. It reflects what this album is all about.

This is one of those extremely rare "live" albums that doesn't sound like a dead cliche. And while the subject matter within doesn't grapple with larger-than-life issues, it hits home more directly with its cinematic views of a rock musician's personal side.

Eric Clapton
Slowhand
RSO

Reviewed by ROSS NERENBERG

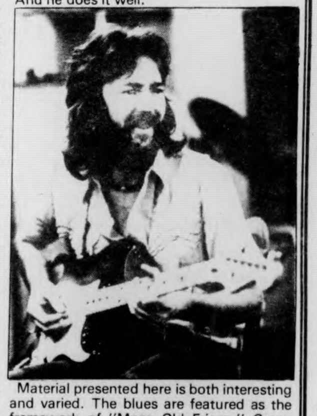
As he has been doing since 1974's 461 Ocean Boulevard, Eric Clapton now is turning out music that he enjoys. It may not be the music that his older fans enjoy hearing from him, but Clapton has progressed and mellowed with age. After all, it's now 1978, not 1968, and should I fail to hear "Layla" again until we are one day able to eat a good meal at the dining commons, it will be too soon! I like the contemporary Clapton; he may not be the fast-as-lightning guitarist of old, be he isn't caught up in the act of trying to pretend that he is. He's doing what he wants.

Clapton's comeback has been a success, and Slowhand affirms it. Whereas on his last album, No Reason To Cry, he needed the presence of such musical heavies as Bob Dylan, George Harrison, and The Band's Robertson, Danko and Manuel Slowhand spotlights Eric and his band, devoid of the stars who previously were required to be around to reassure, inspire, and complement him. Now, Clapton has gained the confidence to do it on his own. And he does it well.



Material presented here is both interesting and varied. The blues are featured as the framework of "Mean Old Frisco." Cover versions of J.J. Cale's nefarious "Cocaine," Don William's country "We're All The Way," and John Martyn's folksy "May You Never" all prove highly palatable. The latter's soothing simplicity is impressive, as Clapton sings, "May you never lose your temper if you get hit in a barroom fight; may you never lose your woman overnight."

New Clapton compositions run the gamut from the bouncy exuberance of "Lay Down Sally" to the forlorn wistfulness of "Next Time You See Her." Still, the most enjoyable work here is found on an eight minute semi-disco duet between Clapton and Marcy Levy, entitled "The Core." Further enhancement of the tune comes from Mel Collins and his steady axe.

No, Eric Clapton is not God, and to the best of my knowledge he never has been nor never will be. However, he is a living legend still able to present fine music, as Slowhand aptly illustrates. It regally earns itself a "let it reign" A.

Radiant, but too perfect

The Boston Ballet
Saturday night, March 4, 1978
Fine Arts Center

Reviewed by REBECCA ADAMS

An Aureole is a radiance or bright light as seen through a thin cloud or mist, a difficult concept to portray through dance. But three wisps of femininity and two energetic young blades from the Boston Ballet danced just this illusion. "Aureole" and "Coppelia" were the two works performed by

dance

Boston's own company at the Fine Arts Center this past Friday and Saturday night.

Dressed in the most delicate white chiffon, the three girls fairly floated across the stage, darting on and off, teasing the two young men accompanying them. Danced to the varying moods of concerto grossi by Classical composer George Frederick Handel, the piece reminded this writer of the soft innocence of spring love, the expectations and apprehensions. Choreographed by Paul Taylor of the Paul Taylor Dance Company, it was first presented at Connecticut College in 1962. It is a fresh and alive piece, beautifully done by Anamarie Sarazin, Ilene Strickler, Leslie Woodies, David Drummon and Larry Robertson.

In direct contrast to this modern dance piece, "Coppelia" is a classical ballet first done in Paris in 1870. It had it's American Premiere in Boston in 1887. It is based on a story by E. T. A. Hoffman about a lifesize doll who causes a temporary upheaval in Galacia, a former Austrian crown land and now belonging to Poland. The music is by LewoDelibes and choreography by Lev Ivanov and Enrico Cecchetti, the latter being the creator of the popular ballet technique taught in many of today's dance schools.

It is a delightful story about an eccentric toy maker, Dr. Coppelius, who constructs a lifesize doll, Coppelia, Swanilda, a village girl obaserves her betrothed, Franz, flirting with Coppelia, who he believes to be warm in Dr. Coppelius' window. When the local village youths tease and jost le Dr. Copplius, he accidentally drops the key to his decrepit and forbidding workshop. Swanilda and her friends find the key and, as they are tiptoeing into the house, unbeknownst to the other, Franz is climbing a ladder to Coppelia's window.

As Act II unfolds, Swanilda and friends discover a houseful of automatons, dolls of all kinds, including Coppelia. After having fun setting them all to motion, Swanilda decides to take Coppelia's place. When Dr. Coppelius enters, he chases them all away, but doesn't realize that Coppelia is no longer Coppelia.

Meanwhile, Franz is also disocovered and after futilely attempting to escape is drugged by Dr. Coppelius. The madman tries to use magic to take the life from Franz and give it to Coppelia, which Swanilda plays along with. Things are going well until Swanilda strarts acting too alive and Dr. Coppelius realizes he is being tricked.

All is resolved and everyone made happy in Act. III, which is only fitting in an old folk tale. The local Duke pacifies the angry eccentric with a few purses of gold and then everyone dances as Franz and Swanilda announce their betrothal. And of course, everyone more or less lives happily ever after.

Well, now that I've told yuu the whole story I will also tell you that the ballet was danced perfectly. Too perfectly. Laura Young, as Swanilda, was a paragon of perfection. Truly, the dancing was flawless, the precision was startling. The dancers were impeccably synchronized, with the music and with each other. This excellence only comes with years of practice and performance. But through the years, while the technique improves, the emotional input decreases. So, after years of ripening, we are disappointingly left with a stale product. Although tantalized by the beautiful costumes and high spirted European fold dances, we are alienated by the cultivated stage smile. This plasticity was evident in both "Aureole" and "Coppelia" but more prevalent in the latter.

To avoid being too critical, I must admit that this is very difficult to avoid. For the most part, it had little effect on the enjoyment of the ballet. We were very fortunate to be able to see this famous company only a stone's throw from our homes.

P.S. Where was everyone? The place was less than half full!

Near performs art for women

by CANDY CARLON

Holly Near began her career in singing and cultural work by touring Indochina with Jane Fonda in protest to the Vietnam War. That was in 1971. Now she is helping to create a space for women to grow culturally and artistically.

At a women's workshop here on Monday, Holly discussed her art and politics and the changes she's gone through since 1971. She commented on the fact that she and pianist-composer Jeff Langley no longer perform together.

"Contrary to popular belief, Jeff and I didn't have a fight. We're still friends. We worked together for 12 years and got into a variety of ruts. He's going to Julliard now and I'm trying to find out what it means to work with women. I've got to get over a well taught habit of finding it easier to work with men rather than women," Near said.

By working solely with women in her concerts, Near is attempting to define women's culture. "We're trying to figure out if there is such a thing as women's music." she said.

Near gives "women only" concerts which enable her to create a "women's space" for her audience. She doesn't believe these concerts are discriminatory or in violation of Title IX of the Educational Amendments of 1972, which states that "no reason shall on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in any education program, or activity receiving federal financial assistance."

"People remember Title IX when they want to. We've got to remember that it's not really discriminaation because you've got to have power to be able to discriminate, and women don't have that kind of power," Near said.

A participant in the workshop asked if the fact that she is singing more lesbian love songs means that she is moving away from political music. Near admitted that some of her friends had been concerned about the direction her music was taking, but added—"Being a lesbian in this world is political. We could be fucking killed for singing those songs."

Near also said that because the Sunday night concert for Women's Week was open to men, she didn't perform a song on lesbian sexuality.

Near is intensely aware of her audience's reaction to her music and the statements she makes during her concerts. She is especially concerned about the reacton to what she calls her "coming out rap" on lesbianism. "I'm wish sometimes that I could follow the audience home and find out what they really carried away from that," she said.

Holly Near's politics are uniquely her own. "I don't belong to any organization. Whatever the issue is, I try to write from a woman's perpective and I try to write about things that don't hurt people," said Near.

Near released her last album two years ago and said that she will probably release another one within the next year or two. Her recording company, which she owns, is Redwood Records.

Her primary concern now is performing and being available to women's groups who need her support, but she added that her audience tends to demand a lot from her. "People criticize me too harshly and love me too much," she said.

books/Literacy on the upswing

Gods & Heroes
Myths and Epics of Ancient Greece
By Gustav Schwab
Translated by Werner Jaeger
Pantheon Books, New York
764 pps/indexed; $5.95 paper

Reviewed by E. PATRICK McQUAID

Long before the technologies of what we now label philosophy, religion, and psychology, before history or any conscious sense of oral preservation, man's attempts to explain his being and his inner being were expressed in the form of myths.

Myths are the living symbols that bridge the gap between the factual and man's sense of ontology. The early Geeks had a clear understanding of what modern psychologists call schizophrenia via their worship of the gods Apollo and Dionysus. Today these dieties represent opposite forms of art, philosophy, political thinking, etc.

In this light ancient myths hold a special interest for modern audiences as wel as providing solid entertainment. The widespread addiction to Tolkien, particularly his chronology of Middle Earth, Silmarillion, which is drawn from the myths and legends of many cultures is supporting evidence to a growing interest in mythology and folklore.

There are now many volumes in this language devoted to retelling the ancient Greek myths. The writings of poet Robert Graves, whose I Claudius kept a public television audience glued to their sets for 13 weeks, has been the scholar's Bible for many years. Schwab's rendition, first published in 1946, has taken the scattered elements of these many tales and molded them into a continuous and harmonius text.

Gods & Heroes begins with the first man/hero, Prometheus—the "forethinker", the "fire bringer." The narrative focuses on the heroes and demi-gods who were more akin to the storytellers and devotes several pages to the legends of Troy, the travels of Odesseus, the tragedies of Oedipus, and the feats of Heracles and Theseus.

At the rear of the single volume Schwab has assembled a detailed index and comprehensive who's-who in Greek mythology which is a valuable asset to both scholar and general reader.

Most important, Schwab's work serves as an excellent introduction to the myths especially for young readers. The language is clear and clean cut and the tales, though written to be read in their order, never slip into obscure references.

The Oranging Of America
By Max Apple
Bantam Books, 163 pages

Reviewed by ALEX STEIN

The N.Y. Times has called Max Apple "a young writer of enormous talent." The word that they should have used, however is "potential" instead of "talent." Apple seems to be currently suffering from an overdose of irony, perhaps brought on by reading too much Vonnegut. All of the stories have excellent settings, character developement and interaction, but all have endings that fall apart when tacked on to these stories. The endings are so corny, so unbelievable, so inappropriate, that the reader is repulsed.

This is a classic example of what happens when an author tries to produce literature by using artsy-craftsy gimmicks in place of talent. If Max Apple can pull himself out of his rut he could become one of America's finest writers—he does have the potential. But until then, he remains a disappointment.

"The Hidden Canyon: A River Journey
by John Blaustein
Journal by Edward Abbey
Penguin Books — Paper, $7.98

Reviewed by MARK HARRIS LEVITAN

"The Hidden Canyon" is more than a book. It is a trip down the Colorado River through the Grand Canyon in a rowboat. There are a few side-trips, but mostly you're shooting rapids, taking in water, getting cold and wet and sunburnt. Thanks to Edward Abbey's brilliant journal, you laugh your ass off. John Blaustein's amazing photographs (99 of 'em) complete the spectrum of possible emotions.

Abbey is a former Park Service ranger-turned-environmentalist and has written a number of novels and stories about the Southwestern wilderness and the huge dams that can turn rivers off. Abbey took his wife and his sense of humor and signed up for a Canyon trip with Grand Canyon Dories, the only outfit to use motorless craft on the river.

The apprehension over the coming trip surfaces: Says he, "I feel like Snow White stumbling into the wrong fairytale." And there are the boats, "Virtually unsinkable. 'Virtually' indeed....How about virtually sunk, virtually drowned, or vitually dead?" Later they confront the Lava Falls rapids, worst on the river, and source of apprehension since the beginning of the trip. After the wet, but safe 20-second ride through, Abbey explains, "Like I always say, running the big rapids is like sex: half the fun is in the anticipation, two-thirds of the thrill is in the approach. The remainder is only ecstasy-or darkness."

In 970, Grand Canyon Dories hired John Blaustein as cook and rookie oarsman. He's been doing it since then — shooting rapids and color photographs. His eye for mood, detail, scale and action is amongst the best in the field of wilderness and wildlife photography (his work has appeared in Smithsonian Magazine and the Time-Life American Wilderness book series).

The chemistry of this combination of novelist-humorist and outstanding photographer makes this book an exercise that works at many levels. Beside his light approach, Abbey shows deep insight into the forces that play with our natural treasures. Thus the approach is unified. Abbey states that the real Colorado died in 1964 when the gates of the Glen Canyon Dam were shut. He'd like to blow it up. And the motorized rubber "baloney boats" have got to go. Blaustein's photos of the colored sandstone walls, the lizards, the scarlet monkey flower, the power of the river and the very scale of the canyon — these are the strongest arguments in the case. They also serve to let the reader capture the spirit of Major John Wesley Powell's legendary first trip down the Canyon. Abbey intersperses parts of Powell's journal in his own account:

> "We have an unknown distance yet to run, an unknown river to explore. With some eagerness and some anxiety and some misgiving we enter the canyon below...."

Like the river, the journal is swift, but you are bound to get shipwrecked on the photographs.

Uruguayan singer performs in ballroom

Uruguayan singer, composer and guitarist, Daniel Viglietti, will appear Tuesday, March 14 at 8:00 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom in the UMass Campus.

Exiled in 1972, Viglietti has since performed throughout Europe, Africa and Latin America gaining prominence as a leading figure in the resistence to the Uruguayan military dictatorship. His first U.S. tour, in 1974, met with incredible success, culminating in a memorable appearance at the Philadelphia Folk Festival.

In Uruguay, today, his records are confiscated and his music is prohibited; in 1972 he was jailed for "subverting the public order" due to the political content of music. "Yet," observed Le Monde in 1975: "He is not a 'folksinger', not a 'rebel'; more simply he is a poet, composer and singer who suffers the wounds of all Latin America...(but whose songs)...changes lives and tears down fences..."

Viglietti's music blends the expertise of an accomplished guitarist with penetrating lyrics in the tradition of such militant songwriters and performers as Victor Jara, Violeta Parra and Quilapayun. His "Song for my America" and "Tear the Fences Down" are anthems of the struggle against imperialism waged by all Latin Americans.

Donations of $2 for low income, $3 for high imcome and $10 for concert sponsors are requested. The Concert is sponsored by the Western Mass Chile/Latin America Solidarity Committee.

you'd have to find a composer agreeable to Mr. Blitzstein's sister, and she's not going to let some graduate student finish the opera..."

Knauf agrees that "Sacco and Vanzetti" needs the involvement of Leonard Bernstein if it is ever to be completed and performed. "If Mr. Bernstein took a new interest in it, I think there would be no difficulty in getting it to come out," he observes. Knauf does not know why Bernstein did not finish the opera years ago, and has never spoken with him about it. He would like to discuss the project with Bernstein, but so far has "just never gotten around to it. I just have not done it, it's just not been done yet."

One source has suggested that Knauf has let the project dangle because he "is somewhat intimidated by a project of that magnitude."

It does indeed seem a bit too large for the theatre department to handle.

Alan Light suggests that "Sacco and Vanzetti" may not be worth the trouble of completing because there are already several works of a similar nature to Blitzstein's. "It's not a subject that hasn't been covered," says Light. "Now that is probably the reason why that was never completed, because there are several other works." Light says that he knows of several plays, a musical and an opera on the subject of Sacco and Vanzetti.

"Whether Blitzstein's work would be the best or not, I don't know," says Light. "But unless the first two acts are damn good, its not worth having it completed by anyone."

**********

David Knauf says that he would like to see the opera produced at Umass. "I hope that it will come true some day." he says.

But are the obstacles too large, insurmountable?

Says Bill Venman: "My basic theory is, if you want to do something badly enough, there is always a way to do it..."

ion dollar greenhouse

ought to consider the possibility of converting the plant into a greenhouse and the metal smokestack into an observation platform for the fall foliage season.

Inside, Tillson is still shiny new, the bright yellow paint which covers many of the pipes and valves still smooth and spotless. Perhaps, if the greenhouse conversion was deemed unfeasible, the administration could offer guided tours of the only clean building at UMass-Amherst.

Of course, they'd have to run a bus there from campus, as the plant is some one and a half miles away. Why engineers would have chosen a site so remote, knowing full well that the steam produced would have to be piped all the way to campus, remains somewhat a mystery.

And although it was not distance but design that caused the fatal problem, it was a faulty steam line which brought the plant shuddering to a halt. Defective casing and joints in the pipe resulted in massive steam leakage. Estimates for the repair of the line range as high as seven million dollars — nearly the original cost of the entire plant.

One has to question whether Tillson will ever be more than a "monument". At the time the plant was planned the university was growing, and the price of oil was hardly prohibitive. But UMass' heating requirements have actually declined since the plant was shut down, and the campus' major period of growth is essentially over. Oil, of course is now both expensive and becoming increasingly scarce.

These trends, which demonstrate the superfluity of the second heating plant, must have been apparent to some extent when Tillson was designed. Judging from the recent revelations about financial and political corruption in the construction of the UMass-Columbia Point campus, one must be highly suspicious of the history of the Tillson plant as well. While the half-hearted investigations which have thus far been conducted have failed to turn up such a major scandal, a more thorough investigation of Tillson is the very least the students and taxpayers should expect. The state can ill afford to make a practice of building 10 million dollar greenhouses filled with metal pipes and tanks.

are any more altruistic or sensitive to student's needs than are the great majority of students themselves.

According to the permanent government, the students, (a mythical group at best) are either apathetic and unaware of their own oppression or cognizant of injustice perpetrated against them and willing to give the SGA and its appendages the right to represent students' interests before the other permanent governments. The wavering and contradictory invocations of the term "the students" cast aspersions on the altruism and the sincerity of the student permanent government members.

In any event, there can be no denying that members of the permanent government get something out of being a part of that questionable institution.

A tendency or leaning that goes right along with their receiving something from students (the people who pay the SATF money) is the desire of permanent government members to maintain their "piece of the rock".

This self preservation type desire is often vented through the pre-emptive strike tactic. All of the permanent government members view some other member as ready to attack, or at least as a potential attacker. Often the attacks are decried as being unjustifiable or irrational. And this brings us to the subject of right and wrong, good and evil, justifiable or unjustifiable.

Permanent government members have put their intragovernment dealings in a polarized good versus evil context. This serves only to cloud the real points of contention between the warring parties and allows them, each in turn, to appeal to the public without revealing what is really at stake.

It is in this context, for example, that students should view controversies between the Student Organizing Project and the student government.

The SGA allegedly exists to help fill the needs of students (obviously it can not and should not fill all of those needs). Students needs are better met when they can accrue the benefits of being organized. Thus, the SGA established the SOP to organize students under its (the senate's) direction.

Along this line, the SOP should be accountable to the senate and thereby to the students. But, as a permanent government member, the project as a whole and its individual members believe their existence is justified simply by their belief that they are good and the senate is evil and unable to fill students' need to be organized.

While the latter part of the statement is right, the former part is wrong. The SOP however, has convinced itself that it is good and accordingly has launched an attack on former senate speaker Brian DeLima. The word former is important because another permanent government canon calls for attacks when the subject is out of power and more "prone."

To think of anyone involved in such a mess as right or wrong is ludicrous. And the senate presidential elections indicate the permanent government will most likely remain ludicrous to students, but self-maintenance by government members will suitably insulate it from students and assure its permanence.

Heterosexual privilege

By BUFFY SPENCER

It seems we are at a time when many of us, particularly in this college community, are beginning to be able to look at our part in oppression both at an institutional and a personal level. (Some of us aren't, but some of us probably never will.) What becomes clear to us when we do this is that while we may not feel we consciously participate in the institutions of, for instance, racism and sexism, we do reap the benefits of these institutional oppressions. For when some are denied privileges by virtue of their race or sex, these privileges do not disappear into an abyss — someone picks them up.

Looking at our privileges, if we are white, or male, or heterosexual, or middle or upper class, and trying to work toward a situation where everyone has equal privilege is one assertive way to act against the oppressive forces of our society that we, by the simple fact of our existence, collude in. We must challenge our privileges. In this society we are not encouraged to do so. We are encouraged to retain our privilege at any cost. In this way we will continue to support the existing structure and never question whether it is really to our advantage.

Those of us who are heterosexual women, particularly those of us involved in the women's movement, must realize that we do have heterosexual privilege. In order for lesbians and heterosexual women to work together in any principled way, heterosexual women must realize our experiences of oppression as women are not identical to lesbians' experiences.

In order to see heterosexism in its proper perspective, as an institution we participate in by definition, we must first define it, then acknowledge its effects on lesbians' lives and understand its effects in our lives.

Heterosexism is the assumption that all people are heterosexual. It is the defining of all women in relation to the presence or absence of a man or control of a man over her life. This goes far beyond a sexual preference issue — women's connection with men has historically been economic and cultural dependence — an all-encompassing state. This, as pointed out in Charlotte Bunch's "Not for Lesbians Only," is at the root of all job discrimination for women.

Women are defined in the workforce as secondary, marginal workers because of their assumed connections to men and exploited because it is seen that they do not need their income as a man is, or should be, supporting them. Here heterosexism is at work, oppressing us all as women. What separates its affect on lesbians from its affect on heterosexual women is that heterosexual women can at any point buy back into heterosexual privilege and assume the accepted role of dependence on a man. A lesbian does not have the option.

In some ways, a heterosexual woman who has been unattached to a man understands what happens when a woman does not join in the institution of heterosexism. People tend to see her as less, they expect her to be always looking for a relationship with a man in order to fulfill herself or support herself. Having internalized this expectation as the result of her socialization she may bow to this pressure and may deny parts of herself that do not meet with male approval and create new parts of herself that do. Certainly, heterosexual women cannot experience this as liberating.

Heterosexual women do not have to fight against heterosexism as lesbians by definition do. But heterosexual women can actively do this by not assuming their choice is the choice of all women, by letting other women become part of their lives and feeling good about that and making a commitment to that, by not always leaving it to lesbians to bring up lesbian issues, by recognizing that there do not have to be lesbians present for heterosexism to be present.

Why should heterosexual women do this? What do heterosexual women have to gain by challenging their privileges? Removing ourselves from male definition could only help us attain a positive self-image. What oppressor is interested in creating a positive self-image for the object of oppression? Putting energy into friendships with other women will allow heterosexual women all the positive effects of such friendships, which we have long been taught not to value. And looking at heterosexual privilege will help us to honestly attempt to understand our situation as women — something we cannot do while seeing ourselves as defined by males.

Youth employment rally in D.C.

To the Editor:

I would like to call your attention to an issue which concerns all of us here at UMass. That is, the problem of unemployment in this country. The Department of Labor estimates that there are presently 3 and a half million jobless youth; the AFL-CIO and National Urban League put the number at twice that. Being employed is not just a privilege, but a basic human right.

With this in mind, the Youth March for Jobs Committee has called a march in Washington, D.C. on April 8th. It will assemble at the Lincoln Memorial and march to the Capitol where there will be a rally featuring speakers representing unemploeed youth, National Advocates of Jobs for Youth and representatives of National Youth Serving Organizations. There will also be entertainment.

The purpose of this march and rally is to demand that President Carter and Congress act immediately to create jobs for millions of youth at decent wages and good working conditions in various programs which will serve human needs. Greater effort should be put into those areas experiencing the highest rate of unemployment, particularly black and other minority areas and, in addition enacting legislation to guarantee full employment for all, with a good start being the Humphrey-Hawkins Bill.

I urge everyone who can to join this important march and rally. Further imformation can be obtained by writing to the Youth March for Jobs Committee, 160 Fifth Avenue, Room 623, New York, N.Y. 10010 or call [212] 675-7777.

Area bars in review

By PETER COX
Collegian Staff

For some, a place of drinking is of no great importance, for what is important is the high. A dorm room, an automobile, under the bleachers of a football stadium; these are all convenient sites for consumption. I, on the otherhand, refuse to join these philistines of burping brew and dreary dregs of drunkenness. Being from Boston, and also Irish, I'm part of that delightful tradition that ranks bar drinking as the apex of relaxation.

With this in mind, my friend Rick and I decided to visit the local Amherst establishments to see if they too had the culture we had grown accustom to back home. Our first stop was The Pub.

Located off E. Pleasant St., The Pub is one of the more popular places for UMass students. One wonders why. To begin with, The Pub doesn't know if it wants to be a disco or a low key bar. Wooden booths and tables give the impression that a folk guitarist might appear to start the evening off. Instead, we are offered a loud dose of disco, with a light show that looks like it was taken off someones Christmas tree. The affect is somewhat schizophrenic.

As for the drinking, pitchers are $3.25 (ouch!!) with draught-and bottled beer a more reasonable 55 cents — 65 cents respectively. Food is served from 11 a.m. — 9:00 p.m.

One of the pluses of The Pub is its clientele. The place draws a big crowd starting around 9:00-9:30, mostly students. People are dressed informally and it is more of a singles bar than a couples bar. But Saturday Night Fever it is not.

There are also many specials at The Pub. From 2-for-1 night Tuesday and Thursday to Happy Hours on Friday, 3-7, The Pub offers more specials than A.B.C. If you're in the right mood, or if you just feel like dancing, The Pub can be a good place to go. We finished the pitcher and headed for our next stop.

Time Out and Barsellottis are your basic sportsmen bars near Amherst square. They're a pleasant spot to watch the Bruins game, rub elbows with the locals and drink cheap drafties — 50 cents. And if your wrists need exercises, there is a dart board at Time Out, the only one found in the drinking tour. If darts aren't your game, there's a pool table next door at Barsellottis. We finished our pitchers and tried heading for the next stop — the Rathskeller.

The Rathskeller. What can you say about this place? It's a carnival, a dungeon, a pit, a great place — all these descriptions hold some truth. Located underneath The Drake Restaurant on Main St., The "Rat" is a cellar that forgot to renovate itself. A stone floor and plaster and brick walls are the decor. Music is provided by your local table jukebox. But one is advised to turn it up loud to be heard above the frenzied noise of pinball machines, televisions, electronic games, and most of all, the people themselves.

Indeed they are the biggest attraction there. You have a mixture of students, working people, and the low life. No roaming eyes and checking out the opposite sex here, as at The Pub. No sir, they are serious sorts, chalking a pool cue or carefully maneuvering a pinball machine.

The beer here is quite cheap, $2.25 a pitcher. And there is an aroma of marijuana permeating the air for those who prefer a different sort of high.

We barely finished our pitchers and wanted to head for our next stop, Poor Richards.

Poor Richards has better disco than The Pub. It is more spacious, with a kinkier decor with mirrored walls. The sound system is much better than The Pub, but the music is the same — disco. Likewise, the clientele of "Poor Dicks" is similar to The Pub, though it is much more crowded. It is best to get there around nine. The drink prices are reasonable, with specials on Wednesday and Thursday.

Our last stop was The Rusty Skupper, out on Belchertown Rd. Now "this" is a nice place. Converted from an old barn into a restaurant downstairs and a lounge upstairs, The Rusty Skupper is bound to stir the latent romanticism in all of us. First of all, you are offered not stiff tables and chairs, but couches lining the wall, with colorful pillows, and a candle burning in a glass upon the counter in front of you. And along the walls you have remnants of farming tools from the turn of the century, and old photographs or a newspaper clipping here and there. Being once a barn, there still exist two wide openings, from which one can view the eating patrons downstairs in the restaurant below.

Next there is the entertainment. The program doesn't stray too far from folk and country rock. But one can occasionally see the out of the ordinary. Late one night, my date and I stopped off here after many hours of consumption, only to be entertained by a muppet show that just blew the whole place away in hysterics. No doubt about it, The Rusty Skupper is highly recommended for dates and couples who want to be mellowed out.

Well, our sojourn finally ended. We had our tour of Amherst and its taverns, and we might add it was a truly delightful, though somewhat exhausting experience. And now, frizzeled and frayed, we made our way back to the Blue Wall to recuperate.

Hampshire president has weekend marriage

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) — John and Adelle Simmons have an arrangement.

She is president of Hampshire College, a progressive liberal arts college in western Massachusetts. He is an economist for the world's largest bank in Washington, D.C.

Married for almost 12 years, they have two young children.

They see each other on weekends.

"When we started this I felt as if I were embarking on a grand experiment," John Simmons, 39, said in an interview.

"It seems to be working, but all the evidence isn't in. There are advantages and disadvantages. I'm not sure how I come out."

The weekend marriage, once a social arrangement limited mostly to movie stars and traveling salesmen, is now a challenge faced by growing numbers of professional couples.

More and more women want careers, and most careers require at least some mobility. Men and women who want fame and fortune as much as they want each other learn to compromise.

The Simmonses meet almost every weekend — occasionally in Washington, where he works for the World Bank, but usually at their home in Amherst, where she is president of Hampshire College.

He flies north into Bradley International Airport in Windsor Locks, Conn., Thursday night, returning to the capital on Monday to begin a four-day work week.

Mrs. Simmons, 35, said she doesn't think the commuting has hurt their relationship: "We've been struck by how well it has worked out. If you only have weekends together, you don't let the little things bother you."

Her husband agreed. "When you get home you can concentrate on major issues. You don't fight over who left the toothpaste cap off," he laughed.

"I think John enjoys his private times in Washington," she said.

His lifestyle is that of the ultimate commuter. He cooks his own meals in a two-room apartment in northwest Washington, occasionally visits friends during the week, reads and writes in the air and on the road to and from Amherst.

Virtually all weekend couples agree communication has to be loud and clear, and the ground rules followed closely.

"That's because it's the little things, like a phone call, that show you really care," said Marie Kargman, a Boston marriage and divorce counselor.

The Simmonses have had a weekend marriage for more than five years, ever since she took a job at Princeton University in New Jersey.

"You have to have planning skills and communication. When messages are sent, they have to be received," he said.

"Many people are opposed to planning past tomorrow. But there'd be extreme emotional distress for them in a situation like ours."

Even for the Simmonses, there are problems.

"I would like to be with the children more," he said. "And I think Adelle feels she's at home alone with them too much."

Sometimes it is nice to have a mate around the house. "Last night for instance, our 1-yearold daughter was sick," she said, "so John spent half the night up with her, and I spent the other half."

Don't the Simmonses look forward to the day when each can walk in the door at night and meet the other?

"We look ahead in small blocks of time," he answered.

Don't other men — jealous of his freedom — grin, wink and poke him in the ribs? "No. Most people see it as a substantial burden and are quite sympathetic.

"Others see it as a real advantage from the work standpoint," he added. "You don't have to come home and listen to your spouse's complaints or cook dinner."

Other couples are less willing to discuss weekend life. U.S. Undersecretary of State Lucy Benson and her husband Bruce, an Amherst College physics professor, refused to discuss their arrangement.

In a variety of careers, such as teaching, journalism and business, separation is an occupational hazard.

"Mobility is a fact of life," shrugged Howard Garrison, a professor at Virginia Commonwealth University in Richmond.

Last year Garrison and his wife Dana split up their worldly goods, loaded a trailer and moved Mrs. Garrison to Chapel Hill, N.C., where she was enrolled at the University of North Carolina.

At 38, legs & class keep Westfall on ice

NEW YORK [UPI] — The legs have 17 years worth of mileage in them, yet they show no signs of wear. Ed Westfall, going on 38, can still show the kids how it's done.

Don't look at the numbers because they are meaningless. Westfall has but three goals and a handful of assists for the New York Islanders, but the stat sheets don't have a column for savvy, nor do they give credit for class, Westfall's specialty.

"The way I feel now, I can play forever," he says, a warm smile crossing his face. "Realistically, though, I'm just looking forward to next year after this one's over. As long as I'm having fun and I'm enjoying myself I'll keep right on playing.

"You know, I don't understand why everyone keeps asking me how much longer I can keep going," adds Westfall, a puzzled look replacing the smile. "It's on everyone's mind but my own. Just because I'm 37 and I've been playing for 17 years, does that mean I'm supposed to lie down and die?

Islander fans hope not. In a recent game against Vancouver, Westfall completely disoriented the Canucks' power play with the persistence of an overprotective mother. Then, like a buzzard circling its prey, he stole the puck, rushed the length of the ice and whipped in a short-handed goal. It was vintage Westfall.

"I have a lot of pride in my penalty-killing role with the Islanders," says the ex-Bruin. "Hockey has gone through many phases since I first started playing. Now there's an emphasis on specialties — this is a very scientific game we play today.

"But I've adjusted to the game's changes whenever I saw them. That's probably why I'm still around. I feel like I have an obligation to my teammates, so there's no way I can quit now. There's great satisfaction for me in that I know I work hard and that I'm needed.

"When I feel I'm no longer needed, that's when Ed Westfall calls it a career. I don't want to ever become a Hangeron. Oh, no. When I leave the game I'll walk out proud. I'll be able to say, 'I'm proud of what I've done.' But that time isn't anywhere in the near future."

Therein lies Westfall's secret. He'll be the first to admit he's without the moves of a Guy LaFleur, without the shot of a Mike Bossy. And he laughs at his paltry scoring totals. Yet, and his coach, Al Arbour, will bear it out, Westfall is one of the Islanders' most valuable players.

He possesses an intelligence for the game that is unparalleled. Nothing can surprise Westfall on the ice — every conceivable occurence has been thought of already.

"There's a neat trick to penalty-killing," says Westfall, a boyish exuberance evident as his is about to divulge a well-kept secret. "It's really simple. You just try and kill as much of the penalty as you can in their end. It takes a lot of extra skating but it disorganizes the other club.

"The key is to get them off balance and force them to make 'hope passes.' That's when the guy says, 'I don't want it' and he throws it somewhere else, hoping it gets there. It usually doesn't. If you can get them to do that, then you've overcome most of the disadvantage."

Eddie Westfall is almost finished dressing now. He adjusts the knot on his light blue tie, then bends at the waist to tie the laces of his shoes. A quick check in the mirror to straighten his hair and he's making his way for the exit.

"Just one favor," says Westfall, pausing at the door and laughing. "No more questions about how much longer I'll be around. I may be 37, but I've got some mileage left.

Nobody laughed back.

Your Birthday

THURSDAY, MARCH 9

Born today, you do not wait for opportunity to knock; you run to meet it. You have a knack for knowing what will be profitable and what will not. It is seldom that you are misled by others into projects that misfire. Practical, considerate, respectful, you are a pleasure to work with.

You enjoy being at the fore of whatever will ultimately bring progress. Sometimes the actions you take entail more risk than is wise for one concerned about his future, but your satisfaction at being in front where decisions and changes occur makes up for everything.

You may become a hero to the young and a romantic figure to everyone else. You have charm, a flair for making things seem more dangerous, and more romantic, than they are, and a gleam in the eye that makes people believe in and trust you. You also have a business sense that lets you capitalize on your assets and gain from them materially and spiritually.

FRIDAY, MARCH 10

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) — Be ready to accept an offer of gain. You can make much of others' failure.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) — It is important to relax periodically today. Nervous tension could ruin success.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) — A desire for material gain must not lead you into actions you will regret. Cool your ardor.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) — Luxury may elude you, but the desire for it remains all day. Take a friend at his word; expect gifts.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) — Play hard and work hard today. A balance between mental and physical is essential.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) — Concentrate on a pleasant avocation today; let vocations take care of themselves. Take a chance at evening.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) — A keen business head and sense of self-preservation should make gains for you now.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) — You may be ahead of your time today, but your ideas will impress. Speak up.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) — Understand the abuses of honesty. You can be truthful without hurting another's feelings.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) — Today you can enjoy the fruits of recent labors. Co-workers are admiring.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) — Public opinion and your own may differ, but you must continue to stand by your principles.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) — Something higher than intellect guides you today. You may find yourself feared at evening.

Seaver happy with new home

TAMPA, Fla. [UPI] — Peace at last. Tom Seaver finally has found it, and you can see how broken up he is over no longer being part of the club with which he became a household name by the way he's enjoying life with his new one.

Unless someone else broaches the subject first, Seaver seldom mentions the Mets anymore.

He was with them 10 years, helped them win two pennants and one world championship, earned three Cy Young Awards while with them and went through his greatest personal anguish before they dealt him to the Reds last June, but he keeps all that locked up inside him.

"That's behind me," he says. "I don't have to put up with that anymore."

In a sense, the way Seaver feels about the Mets is rather sad. Here is a team he grew up with, made so many friends with and always will be associated with because of all he accomplished and yet anytime someone mentions the Mets to him, he becomes somber.

As a member of the Reds, though, Tom Seaver is an entirely different person. He's happy.

"It's a lot more positive over here," he says. "The big difference in the two clubs is ability, obviously."

Seaver always cut up with the Mets and in that regard, he is no different now that he's with the Reds.

He's like the barber's cat in that you'll find him everywhere. One minute he's feeding balls to the pitching machine in the nets and a minute later he's at second base collaring grounders being hit at him by coach Alex Grammas.

"He works like a dog," says Grammas, "and knows exactly what direction he's going all the time. There's no guess work with him. Everything he does is with a good reason."

Only the other day, Seaver threw 115 pitches in batting practice. That's uncommon, highly uncommon, for any pitcher at this time of year, but Seaver knew what he was doing.

"My arm feels so good, it scares me," he told manager Sparky Anderson, who already has made up his mind that Seaver will start for the Reds in their first exhibition game with the Pirates Saturday and in their regular season opener with the Astros in Cincinnati on April 6.

"I think he's like a kid starting all over again," Anderson says of his 33-year-old ace right-hander. "It's as if he has been reborn. I'll tell you one thing about him: he is a working dog. He can flat pitch. I'm not worried about how many games he's going to win, either. He'll get his wins. What I want is to get him to the post 38 to 40 times. If he can start that many games for us, we're a mortal lock."

Last year, Seaver started 33 games for the Mets and Reds, winning 21 of them while losing only six. With the Reds, he had a 14-3 log.

"It took me only two or three weeks to become adjusted," he says about the mid-June trade which sent him to the Reds.

UM rink & indoor tennis?

UMass-Boston is receiving $8.9 million for the construction of a new athletic complex. It's clear that if we leave our (UMass-Amherst) future up to the administrators and politicians we'll vanish into oblivion. Shall we continue to... "hover on the brink of nonentity?"

Please fill out the following questionnaire and drop it off at the Collegian or at the UMass Hockey Club office in the Student Council Chambers of the Student Union Building. The questionnaire was prepared by the UMass Hockey Club.

1) Are you satisfied with the present athletic facilities on campus? Y N

2) Would you like to see an on-campus indoor athletic complex featuring an ice arena, basketball cage and tennis courts? Y N

3) Would you utilize an ice arena? Y N

4) Would you utilize tennis courts? Y N

5) A) Should such a complex be financed by the taxpayers? Y N

B) Should such a complex be financed by the students? Y N

6) Would you be willing to pay a $5.00 increase per semester in student fees to subsidize such a complex? Y N

Cinicola fired

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — Duquesne athletic director Red Manning, acting against the advice of the school's athletic committee, yesterday fired head basketball coach John Cinicola and replaced him with Cinicola's assistant, Mike Rice.

The public announcement of Manning's decision climaxed several weeks of intra-university squabbling and politicking that began when Manning told the athletic committee, which is strictly an advisory body, that he wanted to fire Cinicola.

Cinicola, who compiled a 52-56 record in four years of coaching the Eastern 8 School, was negotiating with university officials for another administrative job, Manning said.

Rice signed a three-year contract, Manning said.

Cinicola, who went home following several hours of meeting with university officials Tuesday night and Wednesday, could not be reached immediately for comment.

Manning said the athletic committee voted 11-1-1 against his decision to fire Cinicola, who had for 14 years been the assistant while Manning was the head coach. The athletic committee instead recommended that Cinicola's contract be extended two years.

Carbo at odds with Sox

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. [UPI] — Outfielder Bernie Carbo said yesterday he plans to play out his option with the Boston Red Sox unless the club grants him a long-term contract with a healthy raise.

General Manager Haywood Sullivan, in rejecting a counter-proposal offer from Carbo and his agent, instead signed the left-handed swinging reserve for the 1978 season under the renewal clause of the Uniform Players' Contract.

"We're so far apart, that it would be useless to go back and forth right now," said Sullivan, who also announced pitcher Bob Stanley had signed a one-year contract.

Carbo, who lost arbitration over a Red Sox contract in 1975, hit .289 with 15 homers and 34 runs batted in last season in 86 games. The 30-year-old, opposite field hitter said he turned down a contract offer from the Red Sox last winter even though it contained a "substantial raise."

Disappointed the contract did not contain enough security, Carbo and agent Dick Moss sent Sullivan the counter-proposal last week.

Sullivan refused the counter-offer but did sign Carbo to the one-year renewal at the same estimated $80,000 with a cost-of-living raise — even though a club can cut a player's salary by 20 per cent.

"I don't think I'm going to sign," said Carbo after inking the temporary pact. "I'm not getting any younger. I'm looking for a long-term deal, trying to make the Red Sox my last team. If I don't give it (the free agent draft) a shot, I think I'd be cheating myself and my family. I owe it to myself."

Bobby Orr won't quit, views summer action

NEW YORK [UPI] — He's had six operations on his left knee, hasn't played a game in more than a year, was told by his surgeon that he had only once chance in 10 of ever playing again, and next week he'll observe his 30th birthday.

Nevertheless, the greatest defenseman ever to play the game of hockey hasn't given up yet about making another comeback.

"I want to try once more," Bobby Orr said recently. "My knee feels fine and I'm very happy with it."

Orr not only expressed confidence with his words, but with his actions as well. In New York to present the Lester Patrick Trophy to Phil Esposito, his old friend and teammate with the Boston Bruins, Orr appeared jubilant, smiled a lot and occasionally bounced on his feet with nervous energy as he talked.

Now an assistant to coach Bob Pulford on the Chicago Black Hawks, Orr has been skating lightly with the team since mid-January and also does daily weight work to help strengthen his knees.

"The doctor told me to stay off skates for a year and that's what I did," Orr said. "I'm not skating hard and the knee is reacting well. I'm very happy with it. I'm going to take a week next summer in camp to see how the knee reacts to some harder work and if it holds up then I'll sit down with Bob Pulford and talk about my future."

Orr, chosen as the National Hockey League's scoring champion, has played only 30 games in the last three years, the final one in Vancouver Jan. 22, 1977. Last April his left knee was cut open for the sixth time in nine years. The surgeon, Dr. John Palmer of Toronto, quoted his chances of ever returning to the game as one in 10.

"I don't know what my chances are," Orr says now when those numbers are thrown at him. "I realize there's a very strong possibility I won't play again. I'm not getting my hopes up too high. But I want to give it another shot."

In the meantime, Orr enjoys the work he's doing with the Black Hawks, the team he signed with as a free agent for an estimated $3 million in 1976. He has traveled as far as Moscow in a scouting role, he does public relations work and he helps coach the team.

"I'm keeping busy and enjoying it very much," he said. "It's still a little difficult for me to watch a game and I get a little edgy at times. But if I can't play, I'd like to stay active in hockey and I enjoy what I'm doing now."

Still, even at 30 and burdened with a knee that he describes as "bone on bone," Bobby Orr can't help looking ahead with both anticipation and fear to a week this summer when he'll put his future on trial.'

LaFleur nets two

MONTREAL [UPI] — Guy Lafleur scored twice in the third period last night and reached the 50-goal plateau for the fourth season in a row leading the Montreal Canadiens to a 4-3 victory over the Washington Capitals.

The Canadiens trailed 3-2 going into the final period. Lafleur was credited with his 49th goal at 8:21 when Serge Savard's shot from the blue line deflected off Lafleur's skate and past goalie Jim Bedard. Lafleur scored the winner on a breakaway at 13:28 as the Caps went down to their 22nd consecutive defeat at the hands of Montreal.

The Capitals took a 2-0 first-period lead on goals by Bob Girard and Ace Bailey.

Borg returns home

GOTHENBURG, Sweden [UPI] — Returning to his home country after a self-imposed professional absence of 16 months, Wimbledon champion Bjorn Borg yesterday, defeated New Yorkers Vitas Gerulaitis, 6-4, 1-6, 6-3, to capture the $33,000 first prize in the two-day, four-man $60,000 Scandinavium Cup.

The 21-year-old Swede broke service to 4-3 and then held to win the first set, but Gerulaitis, who had met and lost to Borg five times previously, easily evened the match in the second after breaking to 3-1 with a clever drop shot.

Gymwomen at EAIAW tourney

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

The women's gymnastics team travels to Pittsburgh today in preparation for the Eastern Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (EAIAW) Regional gymnastics championships. Competition begins on Friday for the team title and on Saturday for the individual championship.

The gymwomen enter the EAIAW seeded fourth. The seedings are awarded on the basis of total team scores for the season. UMass averaged 136.17 points for eight meets. The last two competitions against UNH and Towson where the gymwomen amassed totals of 138.10 and 142.10 were not included in the averages because they happened after the cut off date.

Ahead of UMass are top-seeded Penn State in first with 147.81. Clarion State, the defending national champions, is seeded second with a season average of 146.24; the University of Pittsburgh, the host school is seeded third with 137.73, just a point and a half ahead of the Minutewomen.

"The competition will be very tough," said coach Virginia Evans. "I think we have a chance to move up higher than our fourth place seeding but the actual competition will decide that."

"The team is totally convinced they can beat anyone and that's a good sign", said Evans. "Enthusiasm and encouragement has been a key to the teams success and it couldn't come at a better time then at the Eastern Championships."

In Pittsburgh Evans will be using five all around competitors. Four are required by the AIAW but Freshman Karen Clemente has earned herself a position in all four events. Joining Clemente will be seniors Susan Cantwell and Stephanie Jones, team captain Karen Hemberger and Junior Cheryl Morrier. Clemente has been working against an ankle injury all season long but appears to be fully recovered as she enters her first eastern championship as a Minutewoman.

Cantwell is a veteran of the Easterns as she makes her fourth appearance and has the distinction of being on both of the UMass teams which won the eastern title in 1974 and 1975. Bars specialist Debbie Law also competed for the gymwomen at those title winning Easterns.

Cantwell is coming off her "best ever" all around performance, a 36.75 against Towson last weekend. At last year's nationals Cantwell finished seventh individually.

Jones finished fifth individually at last year's Easterns. She has been bothered by a hip injury throughout the season but according to Evans is "looking stronger every day."

"I expect Stephanie to be stronger at Easterns than she has been in recent meets, she has learned to work with the hip injury and has her nine point scoring range back," said Evans.

Hemberger has been a consistently strong performer all season and lends to the team's spirit and enthusiasm as the captain. She has been averaging 35 point totals for four events and has the capability to earn 36 or nines in each event.

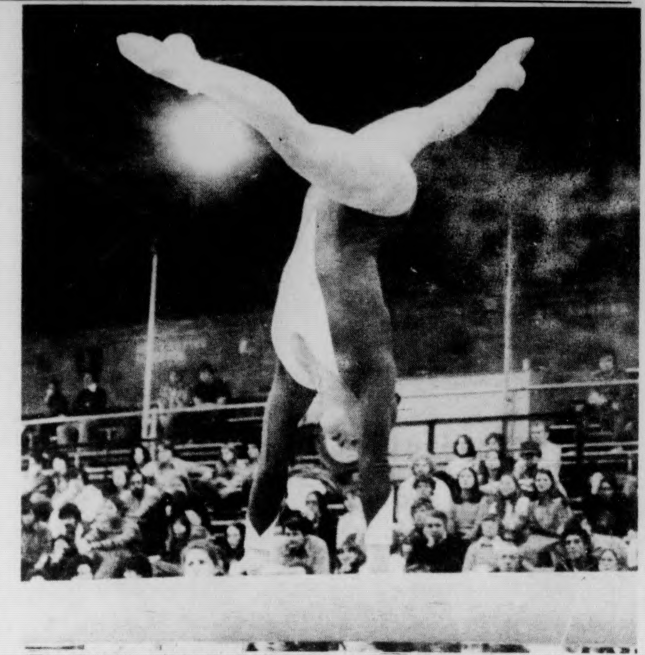
Morrier has been battling back from the flu and scored her highest all around total of the season against Towson last week. Her 33.05 total is near the 34 point total necessary to qualify for nationals as an individual competitor.

Filling out the line up will be Laurie Knapp on the balance beam, either Diane Laurenson or Kim Whitelaw in vaulting, Julie Myers on the floor with Law on the uneven parallel bars.

There will be fifteen teams competing in Pittsburgh. UMass will compete in the fourth and final round at 9 p.m. along with Clarion, UNH and Towson. UMass will begin on the beam in the team rotation followed by floor, vaulting and bars.

The first place team in the region automatically qualifies for the national AIAW championships to be held in Seattle on March 31 and April 1. Besides the nine regional champs, six teams will receive at large bids determined by their scores at regionals. In the last two years UMass has received at large bids and went on to finish fourth and seventh in 1977 and 1976 respectively.

"At Easterns you are not only competing for first place but also for the highest score possible so just in case you don't win the title, you still have a shot at the nationals. It's not going to be easy but it isn't going to be impossible either!" said Coach Evans optimistically.



The women's gymnastics team is seeded fourth at this weekend's EAIAW championships hosted by the University of Pittsburth. The women will enter individual and team competition with hopes of capturing the Eastern crown, which would send them to the nationals. (Staff photo by Ellen Davis)

Spinks—Ali rematch

PANAMA CITY, Panama [UPI] — The World Boxing Association approved yesterday a rematch title bout between heavyweight champion Leon Spinks and Muhammad Ali.

Elias Cordova, chairman of the WBA Championships Committee, said yesterday in a news conference that the fight sought by Bob Arum of Top Rank, Inc., will take place next September in an African country, possibly in Bophutatswana.

Cordova said the WBA cannot oppose the bout because it is within regulations and added that in the contracts signed for the fight of last Feb. 15 in Las Vegas, Nev. in which Spinks wrested the title from Ali in a split decision, there was no clause against a rematch or similar commitment.

He added that, according to WBA rules, the heavyweight champion has one year to defend his title against the best classified challenger available and, in the interim, can fight any of the 10 best-classifed boxers, and that Ali is among them.

If Spinks retains his crown against Ali, he will again defend it in February, 1979 against the first-ranked available challenger, Cordova said Arum told him. If Ali regains the title he will then have a year to defend it also against the first-ranked challenger available, Cordova said.

Staff meeting

ALL COLLEGIAN SPORTS STAFF MEETING — There will be a meeting tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Campus Center Rm. 101. Spring beats, Spring Sports Special and other topics will be discussed. Attendance is mandatory.

Following the end of the women's swimming season last week, coach John Nunnelly presented the team's awards for spirit, dedication, loyalty and excellence to members Deb Schwartz, Rachel Mack, Cheryl Robdau, and Val Gulla. # Junior varsity jive

I spent this past weekend covering the New England University Wrestling Association Championships in Rhode Island. There was a junior varsity tournament going on simultaneously, but of course you don't want to hear about that.

Ah, hold on, Buck.

Just for kicks let us spend these next few minutes in the lowly junior varsity ranks. After all, our UMass JV wrestlers won the New England championship last weekend so it is altogether fitting and proper that these gentlemen receive their due.

Oh, before continuing, I should point out that the correct title is "sub-varsity" tournament. Euphemism is the spice of life...

The tourney was highlighted by the feats of two freshmen, Rich Schiarzzi and Dave O'Brien. Schiarzzi, the 118 pound grappler from Quincy, went undefeated en route to a championship in his weight class. O'Brien, from Malden, duplicated that feat by taking home the bacon in the 167 pound category.

But Schiarzzi and O'Brien never could have done it alone.

Take Louis McDonald for instance. Mac' was more worried about his brother from Newton High who was competing in the high-school New Englands in nearby Warwick; but that didn't stop him from pulling in second place in the 134 pound class. The younger McDonald finished second in his New Englands by the way.

And then there was Gary Rotatori; not a very loud type, but one of those who prefers to let his wrestling do his talking. Gary, a freshman out of Framingham South High, took third.

There was another Framingham product; this one from North High, Dave Daly, who is a part-time Collegian photographer with a full-time dedication to this sport was a third place finisher at 118 pounds; capping off his season with a pin over a BC grappler.

Mike Mitrowski looked more like Gerry Cheevers than a wrestler, but he still was able to place third in the 150 pound category. A broken nose earlier in the season resulted in the New Jersey native having to wear a mask-like implement to protect his shnozzle.

Another freshman, Joe Marra, rumored to be a New York sports fan, placed at 150 pounds; as did Marty Rogers, the Concord heavyweight who overcame a mid-season shoulder injury to make the trip.

The JV Minutemen had two grapplers entered in the 177 pound class; Gary Minski and Bob Smith. Thus, there was a Chance that these two athletes might be pitted against each other in the finals, but no such luck. These guys aren't going to fight each other. They're too busy blasting the other colleges. Both men placed.

The JV's operated under the guidance of one Dennis Fenton, certainly no stranger to championship competition. Fenton, the JV coach, looked very much at home as he accepted the first place plaque. And why not? He's been collecting wrestling hardware for years, and if there's an art to receiving a trophy he certainly should have it mastered by now.

JV wrestling. I guess the same can be said for JV baseball, JV women's hoop, and JV football. (UMass has a JV football team?)

But do not be misled. Keep a sharp eye on our varsity sports and cheer them to one exciting victory or heartbreaking defeat after another. But do not turn your backs to any of those JV teams; for before you know it their participants will have made the big time and you'll want to know who they are...

— — — —

Hats off to the following students who won intramural wrestling championships last week: John Cusick, (120); Fran Young, (125); Martin Zangi, (130); Marc Abrams, (135); Brian Chew, (140); Mark Venchesi, (145); John "Rat" Moynihan, (155); Brian Fawcett, (160); Pete Palermo, (165); Pat McHugh, (170); Roy Barudin (175); Frank Kinny (180); Scott McGlashin, (185); Paul Martin, (190); Charlie Anderson, (195); and Joe Scanlon, (unlimited). Overall, the team championship was a tie between Phi Mu Delta and EOTNC. Take a bow, men.

— — — —

And while we're in a mood for tipping hats, let us offer a doff to Dr. George Snook, who made it through still another season as team doctor for more than one UMass sport. He was present at numerous wrestling and gymnastics meets and was also at the wrestling New Englands last week, not limiting himself to the ailments of just the UMass grapplers.

Federal judge orders miners to work today

WASHINGTON [AP] — A federal judge yesterday ordered coal miners to report to work this morning and temporarily end a 94-day strike that has forced widespread power curtailments and the layoff of thousands of workers.

There is widespread expectation within the government as well as both the union and industry that thousands of rebellious miners will defy the order.

But President Carter declared at a news conference three hours before Robinson signed the order: "The law must be enforced."

U.S. District Judge Aubrey Robinson issued the back-to-work order under the Taft-Hartley Act as the striking United Mine Workers and the soft coal industry unexpectedly agreed to resume contract talks.

They set their first negotiating session for this morning.

Robinson's order becomes effective at 7 a.m. local time today and requires coal miners to work for the same wages and benefits they received under the most recent contract — the one signed in 1974 that expired on Dec. 6.

Robinson's order followed an afternoon of court arguments involving lawyers for the government, the UMW and the coal operators.

Robinson, after hearing arguments from Attorney General Griffin Bell, agreed that "such strikes, if permitted to continue, will imperil the national health or safety."

The order is directed against 1,451 defendants, including the United Mine Workers, its local unions, mine work contractors and mine operators.

Each defendant must be served with a copy of Robinson's order, together with the complaint by the government and all the legal papers that went with it on or before next Monday.

The restraining order expires at 6 p.m. EST on March 17. The judge has ordered a hearing for that day — a week from today — on a motion for a preliminary injunction.

The judge's order specified that the defendants continue bargaining "and to make every effort to adjust and settle their differences."

The announcement that negotiations would resume followed a private session at the UMW headquarters, where top industry officials and union leaders agreed on terms for reopening talks.

Greek liquor licenses limited

By JOAN FEENEY
Collegian Staff

The Director of Greek Affairs has passed a ruling limiting liquor licenses in the Greek community to Friday and Saturday only. The policy further limits the issuing of licenses to only one fraternity or sorority each week.

A license from the town is necessary to sell liquor in Amherst. The signatures of both Dean of Students William F. Field and Greek Affairs Director Shannon Ellis are needed before a Greek house can approach town officials for a license.

"The Sunday through Thursday prohibition was made because class is in session," Ellis said.

Denying two houses a license for the same date will "make it easier for the fraternities to make money: no competition," said Vice President of Greek Affairs Bob Davidson, adding that the policy will affect fraternities more than sororities.

Ellis said she wants to help change the heavy drinking image of the Greek community at UMass. "This policy will make for much better-planned events," said Ellis, explaining the fraternities will have to apply early for the license to be granted on the date requested. "They will have to explain their security precautions to me," she said.

"This way," said Ellis, "rather than eight parties on Saturday night, there will be only one." Private parties with a cash bar and parties distributing free beer will be the only exemptions to this ruling. Both Ellis and Greek representatives said they do not foresee the fraternities getting around this policy by giving out free beer. "That would defeat the purpose of making money," said Ellis.

Greek Area Council Treasurer Kurt Krueger said "in terms of keeping order in the area, it's a good idea. She (Ellis) can keep an eye on it."

"The only problem with this decision," said Davidson, "was that it couldn't be announced at a meeting." Ellis initiated the policy between meetings, and the Greeks became aware of the decision only after applying for a license.

"The Greeks have a drink and destroy image on campus," added Davidson. "Shannon is working on that, and we'll back her. We think we need it."

Minimum drinking age may rise to 19

BOSTON [UPI] — A bill to raise the drinking age in Massachusetts was endorsed yesterday by a legislative committee.

The Legislature's Committee on Government Regulations approved a bill to increase the 18-year minimum drinking age to 19 in bars and restaurants and to 21 for package store sales.

The 19-year minimum drinking age for bars and restaurants would go into effect on Jan. 1, 1979 and the age for package store sales would be raised gradually from 18 to 21 over a three-year period.

Under the proposal, 18-year-olds would still be able to work in restaurants where alcoholic beverages are served.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis two years ago vetoed a bill that would have ralsed the minimum age from 18 to 19 years old.

Two dozen bills calling for an increase in the minimum drinking age were filed this year in the Legislature.

Another bill which was endorsed yesterday by the committee would set up a liquor purchase identification card system designed to prevent minors from buying alcoholic beverages.

This old Pontiac looks like it deserved a place to "crash" today in Amherst Center, but with spring break one week away it may be headed straight south again. (Staff photo by Amira Rahman)

Inside

A demonstration supporting the striking United Mine Workers is being planned for Boston. For details, see the first story in the "Newslines" section on page 2.

As International Women's Week draws to a close, the Collegian continues its daily reviews of workshops, meetings and other events held in conjunction with the campus concentration on the women's perspective. See page 6.

The Faculty Senate met yesterday and approved the creation of a Women's Studies major. They also discussed why former UMass president Robert Wood receives a full salary for teaching while he offers no classes. Megan O'Reilly's stories are on page 3.

Profiles of candidates for the Student Government Association president's office continue today in the Collegian. For profiles of co-candidates Shelly Gordon and Herb Tyson, Brad Goverman and Bill Edelstein and of solo candidate Jay Flynn, see the stories on page 2.

Some Stockbridge students have built a small scale greenhouse and they are raffling it off. Details about the building of the facility are in Martha Kimball's story on page 7.

Weather

Well, the weather should continue its gradual turn for the better well into this afternoon. This upturn will then continue until spring arrives and Frisbees are once again in the public's eye.

SGA presidential candidates

Gordon... Tyson

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

Shelly Gordon age: 20 major: political science and women studies, Class: '79 Past Positions: Board of Governors co-chair, Space Committee, Finance Committee, off campus residence.

Herb Tyson, age: 19 major: political science, Hometown: Potomac, Maryland, Class: '80, Past Positions: Co chair Board of Governors, Budgets Committee, member of Alcohol and Beverages Committee, Fine Arts Council Off campus residence.

What are your impressions of the SGA as it operates now?

"Right now I think its really ineffective. It doesn't allow room for creativity, new ideas and new people. That's something that has to be done by keeping constant turnover and constant input in the Senate," said Tyson. Gordon added, "More energy has to be put into the dorms, commuters and Greeks. They feel real alientated. Without everybody feeling involved and feeling a part of it its going to be pretty ineffective."

Do you think students should have a larger voice in decisions on campus? If you feel they should how should this be accomplished?

Tyson said, "The lack of student input causes the problems we have with Pierpont, the problem with financial aid, the problem with the buses. There is a need to air issues like Pierpont in a public forum. There are relationships which can be built through collective bargaining and pushing to have students' votes on collective bargaining so students can have a hell of a lot of say in negotiating contracts. We have to become involved in that process through academic councils, dorm councils, various ways." Gordon said "Students don't act; they don't speak until it really affects them and hits them inside." The student doesn't see a vehicle to stand up and work with him as a student. We have to be seen as this," Tyson said.

How would you assess the bargaining position on each side of the faculty-administration bargaining sessions?

Tyson said, "The Administration wants more from the faculty in terms of control, in terms of giving up tenure. They're able to squeeze more from the faculty at the same time. The faculty wants more from the administration, in effect more from students. They want more money at the same time; they want less class hours and less office hours. All we have is a voice which, as Shelly says, is not heard. We need to get the right to collectively bargain, need to be recognized by the state of Massachusetts as a bargaining agent for the students.

What do you feel is the best solution to the upcoming spring concert?

It (the conflict over the event) shows the lack of communication the Senate has with the students. I don't know what the outcome will be. I support it (the senate decision). People seem satisfied with it," said Tyson.

Background—
Edelstein, William
Age: 22
Major: Communications Studies
Home Town: Salem, Mass.
Experience: none
Year of Graduation: 1978
Campus residence: Brandywine Apts.

Goverman, Brad
Age: 20
Major: Journalism
Home Town: Needham, Mass.
Experience: SGA student reporter
Year of Graduation: 1978
Campus residence: Brandywine Apts.

Questions:

1) What are your impressions of the SGA as it operates now?

Goverman: "The SGA has become a brontosaurus."

Edelstein: "It's a white elephant whose time has come."

Goverman: "It's an eater of student monies... It's an incompetent body in high places, an inefficient body in low places, an unflinching body of mediocrity in middle places."

2) Do you think students should have a larger voice in decisions on campus? And if so, then how should this be accomplished?

Edelstein: "I feel that students should have more of a voice in the SGA and that this could be accomplished by getting rid of the red tape that the SGA now puts students through. We will not be responsible to the student government but only to the students."

Goverman: "This way (being responsible only to the students) the students can speak directly to us thereby alleviating the red tape."

3) How would you assess the bargaining position on each side of the faculty-administration bargaining sessions?

Goverman: "Our plans in dealing with this fence which separates the students from the faculty is to deal with the faculty directly... Since we deal with the faculty directly we don't even recognize the Administration as an intervening body between the students and the faculty."

4) What do you feel is the best solution to the upcoming concert in the spring?

Edelstein: "Our solution to this spring concert situation is to put on two concerts in the spring. One of them will be the Black American Music Festival and the other a concert to be determined."

5) How do you feel the Student Senate bus service should be funded?

Edelstein: "We feel that there should be more buses to South Amherst and that there should not be any cutbacks in the present system." "We also feel that students should not be forced to be bused against their wills."

6) How should the situation in Pierpont be resolved?

Edelstein: "Pierpont as it is now will undergo dramatic changes. It will be turned into a bastille. The present residents of Pierpont will live in better facilities than they live in at present with the same social life that they are happily living in currently."

Jay Flynn

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

Jay Flynn: Age: 21 Major: political science Hometown: Worcester Past positions: Senator, co-chair Governmental Affairs, Lease Task Force, Legislative Task Force Advocate on Attorney General's Staff, Alcohol Policy Task Force, Fine Arts Council, Housing Exemptions Board, Central Area Council. Class: 1980

What are your impressions of the SGA as it operates now?

The main problems it suffers from are a lack of communication and a lack of information; what the organizations are, how to get involved. I do think it will be fairly easy to turn around. There would be a hundred per cent increase if people knew how to get involved. The latest reorganization proposals are another attempt to centralize power. It calls for a small group of seventeen people to make the day to day decisions.

Do you think students should have a larger voice in decisions on campus? If you feel they should, how should this be done?

Ultimately it would lead to collective bargaining rights for students through the legislature. We should begin by informal negotiations and court actions plus legislative change.

How would you assess the bargaining positions on each side of the faculty-administration bargaining sessions?

We have more to fear from the faculty than the administration. The faculty is pushing for higher wages, increased use of TA's. I support a wage increase just to keep the professors here.

What do you feel is the best solution to the upcoming spring concert?

The Black American Music Festival would be nice as a fall concert or as something in the Cage, not a good substitute for a spring concert. I liked the proposal for two concerts. Basically I'm opposed to it because people I have talked to don't think it should be one kind of music.

How do you feel the Student Senate Bus Service should be funded?

I support the Senate proposal that seventy per cent should come from the senate with the thirty per cent from the parking fees. I don't think the five dollar fee is a good idea at all.

How should the situation in Pierpont be resolved?

The people in Pierpont have to make some changes in their community to make it acceptable to the Amherst community. It's something Pierpont has to do on its own; clean up its own act. I don't think Matlack's plan is good at all. In fact I think it sucks. I understand there have been problems with teenagers selling drugs, or at least that's what's alleged. This is just what Jerry Allen's looking for; to cut down on special programs.

Local students will join striking UMW at rally

Students in a local strike support committee will join United Mine Workers representatives and officials from various unions across Massachusetts Sunday afternoon at a Boston raaly in support of the striking mine workers.

John McDonough, member of a newly formed Boston mine workers support committee, said yesterday he expects 1,000 to 1,500 to attend the IBEW Hall in Dorchester for what he calls "a working people's rally."

More than 15 members of the four-week-old United Mine Workers Strike Support Committee of Western Massachusetts will drive to the rally in vans, according to committee member Brian Kelly. The committee ccmprises mostly Hampshire College and UMass-Amherst students.

Louis Anatat president of the United Mine Workers' District 3, will address the rally, scheduled to begin at 2 p.m. The West Virginia union official replaces union president Arnold R. Miller, who earlier this week was expected to attend, but will not, said McDonough.

Between 25 and 30 unions throughout Massachusetts have endorsed the rally, according to McDonough, and are encouraging their members to attend.

William Cleary, president of the Massachusetts AFL-CIO is listed as a speaker. Other scheduled speakers include Lois Balfour, president of Service Employees International Union local 509 and Donald Berry, business agent for International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers local 103.

Parking board reminds area of appeal procedure

The Parking Appeals Board would like to remind the UMass community of the appeals procedure:

If you receive a parking ticket or should your car be towed and you feel you were legally parked, you can appeal the ticket and-or towing.

You must pick up an appeal form at the Department of Public Safety, located in Dickinson Hall. This form must be filled out properly and returned to the Dept. of Public Safety between 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. Monday through Friday. The form must be returned within seven calendar days of the violation or the appeal will not be accepted.

The parking ticket (or a copy) must be attached to the form and if a tow is being appealed the tow receipt (or a copy) must be

Ackermann to announce candidacy

By SEAN HORGAN
Collegian Staff

Former Cambridge mayor and city counselor Barbara Ackerman last night told the Collegian that she will officially announce her candidacy for governor March 30.

Ackermann's decision to run widens the field of Democratic candidates to three. The two other candidates are Gov. Michael S. Dukakis and Edward J. King, the former director of MassPort, the agency overseeing airport and seaport operations in Boston.

Ackermann said last night she will center her challenge to Dukakis' incumbancy around the issues of human services, fiscal management and the rising property tax.

She criticized the Dukakis administration for their policy of level funding, calling it "an amateurish government."

"I wonder if people realize that level funding from the Dukakis administration has driven the property tax in this state up an average of 13 percent in one year," she said.

Ackermann also described Dukakis' fiscal policies as "inhuman and senseless."

"Dukakis doesn't seem to realize that there are certain services the state must supply, and supply properly," she said. "Problems with human services and waste in the state government are historical problems that have been ignored long enough, and must be tackled now."

She also took the Dukakis administration to task for their policies dealing with the state's higher education system, saying that public higher education must be competitive with private educational institutions. Ackermann said she did not believe the Dukakis policies toward public higher education worked toward this goal.

Ackermann, 53, was an established figure in the Cambridge political scene through the sixties and seventies. She served as mayor of the city from 1972 to 1973. Before that she served six years on the Cambridge School Committee (1962-1968) and nine years on the Cambridge City Council (1969-1978). She lost her council seat in last October's city elections.

According to Ackermann, the final decision to run was made when Secretary of State Paul G. Guzzi announced he would not enter the race. She said she believes she will garner strong support within the Democratic Party from liberals and moderates displeased with Dukakis' performance.

"I also expect to get support from the cities around Boston where I am known better," she said.

Ackermann said the state Democratic primary will be September, but the first major test for her will be at the Citizens for Participation in Political Action convention in April, where that organization will deliver endorsements for state-wide officials.

FacSen approves Women's Studies as major

By MEGAN O'REILLY
Collegian Staff

The Faculty Senate voted its approval of a Women's Studies major yesterday which awards the bachelor's degree and also extended the Women's Studies Program mandate for five years.

However, funding the new department promises to be a major problem. According to chairman of the Program and Budget Council Harvey Kline, funding for the program will only be possible through reallocations of existing resources as the University faces a "no growth" situation next year.

Maurianne Adams

Acting Provost Jeremiah Allen said only three sources are possible: the budget reserve, ($469,747 for fiscal year 1979), the contigency reserve ($100,000) and the special programs allocation of which Allen said the budget reserve is the most likely.

Amidst the wide debate over the motion, Secretary of the Senate Terence Burke said, "The telling insult would be to pass a motion which is meaningless allowing the Women's Studies Program to think they sail into a golden future, when in fact, none exists." But Senator Margot Culley, English — Women's Studies, refuted Burke's statement saying, "It's not fair to saddle Women's Studies with the question of resources now, "it deserves to be a department first."

Cully said the program is among the top two or three in the country and was named as one of 15 "mature Women's Studies programs" in a review conducted by the National Advisory Council on Women's Educational Programs.

The lack of appropriate developmental sequence of courses was cited by a special report of the Academic Affairs Council as the major problem in the program which has the largest undergraduate enrollment in the University.

Wood draws professor pay

Robert Wood

By MEGAN O'REILLY
Collegian Staff

Former UMass President Robert C. Wood is drawing a university salary which is funded completely out of the Amherst budget but he is teaching no classes here, Acting Provost Jeremiah Allen told the Faculty Senate yesterday.

Wood is being paid by the $53,000 a year Ralph Waldo Emerson Professorship which is controlled by the board of trustees because according to Allen, "they had to find some place to park his salary since UMass President Franklin K. Patterson is drawing his salary through the President's office."

After seven years in the president's office, Wood resigned and is presently writing a book while on administrative leave. Formerly a political science professor, Wood still holds a tenured position with the University and "will decide whether or not to go back to teaching between now and September," Wood said last night in a telephone interview.

"This was all arranged through open meetings of the board of trustees, Wood said, and the Faculty Senate is once again suspicious that the administration is trying to rob them of their power."

Wood, however, said he was not aware his salary was coming from the professorship, nor did he say he knew which campus was providing the funds.

Wood will continue to collect from the professorship until he completes his six month leave of absence.

In the meantime, Allen said the Amherst campus will be funding the professorship which it has no control over, although Wood is not making any visible contribution to the University.

As to the ethics of the situation while the university is in a "no growth" state, Allen refused to comment. "I guess it's like eminent domain," he said.

Six guilty of shoplifting in University Store

BY ARNOLD WARSHAW
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — Six UMass students were found guilty yesterday in Hampshire County District Court of shoplifting from the University Store. All had pleaded not guilty and will appeal the court's findings.

In addition, four other UMass students Wednesday had charges of shoplifting continued for one year without a finding.

Those found guilty of larceny of less than $100 were: Susan M. Lawrence, 114 Crampton Dorm; Cynthia Mahler, 117 Gorman Dorm; David J. McWilliams, 417 Grayson Dorm and Lauren N. Merz, 54 Oxbow Road, Weston. All received fines of $31.25.

Also found guilty were Richard King, 413 Wheeler Dorm, fined $25 and Mary L. Wright, 431 Melville Dorm, ffned $62.50.

Only two people in the past have ever been found guilty of shoplifting from the University Store. Most defendants usually have their cases continued without a finding.

Students charged with larceny of less than $100 who had their charges continued for one year were: Mark H. Allen, 318 Pierpont Dorm; Paul C. Dudek, 317 Grayson Dorm; Daniel X Madden, 1316 George Washington Dorm and Koorash Modaresi, 433 Prince Dorm. All except Dudek were assessed $50 in court costs.

These cases date back to last semester, all taking place between Sept. 14 and Oct. 18, 1977. The backlog of cases at the District Court has kept them from coming to trial sooner.

"We haven't even started eating into last semester," said a University Store Security officer. "It's unbelievable."

According to the officer, 19 more people will be arraigned on shoplifting charges April 6.

While shoplifting at the store has increased over the last few years, according to Store Manager Winthrop E. Cummings, so has the number of people caught.

In the spring of 1977, 120 people were apprehended for shoplifting, the security officer said. This past semester, 170 were caught and 90 have been nabbed so far this semester.

Cummings and security officials at the store attribute the increase in the number of people caught to a larger and better-trained security force.

"Everybody's treated the same, nobody gets off," Cummings said. "It's the only way we can be fair."

The security officer said that in the past "the court had some understanding and gave them (shoplifters) more than an even break." The guilty findings are a "warning to students that it's a problme, it's got to be curtailed."

Most people who shoplift do it, the officer said, because it seems easy and they don't feel they'll be caught.

"Most of them don't realize what they're getting into, what the possible consequences could be," he said. "They don't understand the seriousness of it."

A finding of guilty in a shoplifting case, as with any other crime, goes on the defendant's record.

"It's pretty sad," the officer said, "Because these people aren't going to want to have records; it's going to hurt their careers."

Items taken by shoplifters usually have little monetary value the officer said, but "whatever's there, they'll take it."

One of the persons found guilty yesterday stole four bars of soap, three record albums three tubes of toothpaste, two pen refills, two pens, one sweater, one pair of panty hose, one pair of gloves and one bottle of Woolite.

Housing rule oversight trivial, says Woodbury

By JACK GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

The mandatory housing requirement which was overlooked by the UMass board of trustees last June is of little importance, according to acting Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury.

The discrepancy was brought to the attention of the Senate and the student body by Senator Dan Salce during the Senate meeting of Wednesday night. The reaction of that body was split between outrage and disinterest.

"Lots of times we have resolutions that are passed retroactively. We just overlooked it," said Woodbury. He concluded by saying, "It doesn't matter whether or not it was voted on. These things happen. It doesn't mean that students won't have to live on campus." He cited an overlooked Student Activities Tax Fund resolution of a few years ago as an example of the same situation.

Residential Resource Director Robert Campbell said, "It's a technicality."

Board of Trustees Chairman Joseph P. Healey, in a telephone interview said "It has not been brought to the attention of the board." He also said he is "not up on that issue."

Prior to June 1977, since 1962, the trustees had initiated policy statements concerning undergraduate mandatory housing. According to Senator Salce, there are possible legal implications.

Salce this week told the senate, "most questions that I have are legal ones. But most of these questions I can't answer. I have not had the opportunity to do the amount of research necessary to answer these questions, besides, I'm not a lawyer."

Salce also added "There is an issue that I feel deserves great consideration. And that is, that I, through a minimal amount of research, utilizing easily available public documents was able to learn to this situation. I think it is important to point out that this is an issue by which we as students must form a united front.

Ex-speaker subpoenaed by Governmental Affairs

By JACK GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

A pro-student pamphlet created by former Student Government Association speaker Brian J. DeLima was subpeonaed late last night by the co-chair of Governmental Affairs for its depiction of a student with a screw through him which is similar to a cartoon character used in the Gordon-Tyson campaign

All copies of the said pamphlet are to be turned in to Governmental Affairs today.

From informed sources it was learned that DeLima will comply with the subpeona. As of last night neither Gordon-Tyson nor DeLima were available for comment.

One of the co-chairs of Governmental Affairs, Marcie Levington, informed the Collegian that neither Gordon nor Tyson were aware of the pamphlet or its content. She stressed that media coverage of this affair would serve only to injure the Gordon-Tyson campaign.

A tribute: International Women's Week

By Black Affairs Staff

This week has been designated International Women's Week at UMass, yet when the week is over the concept of women everywhere uniting in the spirit and determination of change, will remain.

The call gets stronger and stronger to solve the problems of the world, and more and more women are answering the call of change.

Though it was back in the 1800's when these words were spoken, we are sure that all will see the relationship to feminine oppression even now. Read these immortal words by sister Sojourner Truth ..... and be amazed by truth.

SOJOURNER TRUTH
1797-1883

I come from another field — the country of the slave. They have got their liberty — so much good luck to have slavery partly destroyed; not entirely. I want it root and branch destroyed. Then we will all be free indeed. I feel that if I have to answer for the deeds done in my body just as much as a man, I have a right to have just as much as a man. There is a great stir about colored men getting their rights, but not a word about the colored women, and if colored men get their rights, and not colored women theirs, you see the colored men will be masters over the women, and it will be just as bad as it was before. So I am for keeping the thing going while things are stirring, because if we wait till it is still, it will take a great while to get it going again.

I am above eighty years old; it is about time for me to be going. I have been forty years a slave and forty years free, and would be here forty years more to have equal rights for all. I suppose I am kept here because something remains for me to do; I suppose I am yet to help to break the chain. I have done a great deal of work; as much as a man, but did not get so much pay. I used to work in the field and bind grain, keeping up with the cradler; but men doing no more, got twice as much pay... We do as much, we eat as much, we want as much. I suppose I am about the only colored woman that goes about to speak for the rights of the colored women. I want to keep the thing stirring, now that the ice is cracked.

I am glad to see that men are getting their rights, but I want women to get theirs, and while the water is stirring I will step into the pool. Now that there is a great stir about colored men's getting their rights is the time for women to step in and have theirs.

Editor's editorial

By ANGELA THOMAS
Black Affairs Editor

The Third World Steering Committee met as usual this past Wednesday afternoon, March 8, at 5 p.m. in New Africa. The meeting convened as expected, yet it produced some very unexpected results.

Discussing the Black American Music Festival and the work that lies ahead, it was soon apparent that different people held different beliefs, and attitudes about the format of the festival. Heated debate ensued as more thoughts and questions were raised for discussion.

At this time a committee member moved for the chairperson to be replaced by an impartial constituent. This proposal was seconded, and with no hesitation, little time lost, and surprisely no conflict, a new person took the place of chairperson.

Debate, denied while the exchange of chairperson took place, once again rose in fury. After the fury subsided nothing remained, except the unexpected. The unexpected realization and knowledge that individuals could and did honestly each other (sometimes harshly) without fear of being accused of attempting to undermine the planning of the concert.

Before the committee came to an end, it was moved that the planners and organizers of this year's Black American Music Festival be recognized for the vast amount of time and effort put forth into bringing the festival to reality.

Let it so be recognized.

Leftfield — Three emerging societies

By TERRELL EVANS
Black Affairs Staff

All information was gathered from the N.Y. Times series "Two Societies" February 26 thru 29, '78.

In 1968 two reports were published on race relations and civil disorders in the United States. The Kerner Report warned that the nation was moving toward "two societies, separate and unequal." The other, The National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders reported that the U.S. was evolving into three societies: white, poor black and middle class black.

Evidence shows that the National Advisory Commission was more accurate. We cannot deny that blacks have made significant gains since the 50's and 60's, but the gains that have been made have certain repercussions for blacks who are poor. Also, the gains made are not to such an extent that history could not repeat itself a lot sooner than we may think.

White America

The pressure white America once felt has been eased because of the advances of blacks and the creation of a black middle class. Many white Americans are now beginning to feel resentment toward many blacks because of so-called 'reverse discrimination'.

It is felt in white America that it is wrong to lower scholastic and professional standards in order to comply with 'civil rights' and 'affirmative action' laws. Resentment is present because they feel that blacks have been given handouts for too long and it is time to produce some "black sweat and not white handouts."

As a result of childhood separation of the races, whites, especially those associated with middle class blacks, are faced with minor but embarrassing moments as to what to say in conversation over cocktails.

Black Middle-Class America

The most damaging action the black middle class has taken is the moving from poor communities after acquiring the means to do so.

The middle class packed up its education, money, pride, and know-how, moved to a white middle class or a predominately black middle class community, and to a large degree severed connections with their original communities.

Blacks have made gains in all of these areas, but the figures I have present speak for themselves.

I chose not to draw any conclusions about what could be done to alleviate America's problem, but leave to you. You can write a letter to Black Affairs or drop it in the mailbox in the Collegian office. Your response will be printed next Friday. Next week I will present my conclusions. All letters must be in before next Thursday.

Ethiopian troops advance

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Cuban soldiers and Soviet-supplied MiG fighters helped Ethiopian troops destroy a Somali brigade and recapture the strategic desert town of Jijiga recently, U.S. government sources said in quoting intelligence reports.

The sources, confirming the fall of the last major occupied town on the eastern route to the Ethiopia-Somalia border, said intelligence reports indicated four Somalian brigades were defeated following MiG bombing sorties.

Jijiga is located about 50 miles from the frontier.

Sources said one of the Somali units was reported destroyed in the fighting, although no casualty figures were available.

The other three were reported to have retreated under bombardment from the MiGs.

Although the official attacking force was an Ethiopian division, sources said Cuban fighting units were reported heavily involved, along with Soviet-supplied helicopters used to call in air strikes and artillery fire.

The Ethiopian government acknowledged last week that Cuban troops were assisting in the Ogaden Desert fighting, but has made no official reference to the role of at least the Soviet military advisers estimated to be at the scene.

High Notes...

Kongas, Africanism - Polydor

It seems as though there has been a long time since an LP was reviewed in this space doesn't it? Well then, I guess it would be fitting to review an LP that would require some extra attention. This LP will be reviewed in two parts.

In the first part, we'll talk solely about the musical style, merits and demerits etc. To start with, these grooves find some very exciting and pulsating music. This is a Cerrone production so one can see why there's some very powerful drum work. While the emphasis lies here, the listener will find it hard to ignore the equally percussive horn and string arrangements. There's a sense of urgency in them that adds to the vibrancy of the music rather than "sweetening" it and rendering it helpless, harmless and serene. Side one is a conglomeration of "Africanism" and a remake of Steve Winwood's "Gimme Some Lovin' " that has a French styled twang to it. The vocals are raspy and intrusive much in the style of Belle Epoque (another French group) and their cut "Miss Broadway." The flipside holds some tamer, more subdued material when compared to the more rockish, stormier side one, but the beat does go on.

Now that we may understand the music itself a little better, we can ask a couple of questions. First; "Is this Disco?" Yes it is. The name Cerrone is a dead giveaway for that. In fact, this is one of his better efforts as he breaks from sophistication and goes to a more energetic format. The LP is also climbing the disco charts at this very moment.

Now a bigger question; "Is this Africanism?" My answer to that one is no.

The "Africanism" from side one is the only reference to the theme and a very poor one at that. The people playing and singing the music aren't African either. The vocals are done by Cerrone's stable, headed by Sue Glover et al. We also have Don Ray and Wisniak (more of his people) lending a hand. With the whole being the sum of its parts, we don't have enough representation of African music to warrant such a title as "Kongas, Africanism." This, combined with a cover that looks as though it was off of a novel by Joseph Conrad (the cover has a white hand holding a baby crocodile by the tail) offers a big misrepresentation.

Today marks the end of International Women's Week and I don't want to let it go by without properly acknowledging my sisters in struggle. Please accept my humble thanks for helping me and my brothers in a fierce struggle for so long while continuing and sustaining a struggle of your own. I only regret that at times you had to struggle with your brothers and against them. Again, thank you for so much strength and comfort along the way.

'Women Under Apartheid' workshop held tonight

By LISA MELILLI
Black Affairs Staff

Nana Sheshebe from South Africa, poet Zoe Best, Singer Vea Williams and members of the Diana Ramos Dance Workshop will be featured in a special program tonight on "Women Under Apartheid" beginning at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

This program will center on the oppression women have suffered in southern Africa under the system of apartheid.

Nana Sheshebe will present her analysis of how women have historically resisted racist repression under apartheid. She will point out the most recent efforts of the Black Consciousness Movement to counter the Vorster regime.

Zoe Best, area poet, will read poetry by and about women in South Africa as well as from her own works. She will be reading one of her poems written in 1975 dedicated to Joanne Little. Little is currently appealing New York Governor Carey's extradition orders, which if carried out, could turn her over to what she said will be certain death at the hands of racist interests in North Carolina.

Vea Williams will sing a selection of songs while Terry Jenoure and Patty O'Neil, members of the Diana Ramos Dance Workshop, will also perform.

Announcements

Reverse Bakke decision meeting

The next meeting of the Coalition to Reverse the Bakke Decision will be held on Saturday, March 11 at 1 p.m. Campus Center Room 917. We are hoping that holding the meeting on a weekend will allow more people (especially community people) to attend. The main agenda item to be discussed is the proposed picket line on April 8th in front of the courthouse in Northampton. Other discussions will include transportation to the April 15th demonstration in Wash. D.C., publicity in general and developing more educational materials.

One of the ideas for advertising that has been raised is to collect money from each organization and individuals who support the coalition and taking out ads in the Collegian and local papers. The ads could be educational and could list the organizations that have endorsed the Coalition. People will be calling groups to see if there is enough interest to do this. If you want to help in this or any other aspect please call Sally Rees, 527-0316 or Lee Martindale, 586-1891.

In struggle,
Sally Rees

Auditions for fashion show

Auditions for the Third World Women's fashion show will be this Sunday, March 12, in NAH at 7:00 p.m. Anyone who has or has not signed-up must come at this time. The models for "One Of A Kind" will be chosen Sunday, so please be prompt! For more information contact: Adreienne Phillips, Karien Zachary, 546-9305.

Malcolm X Center sponsors Broadway musical trip

The Malcolm X Center is Southwest would like to invite the five-college area to attend the musical The Wiz in New York during the first week of April.

All people interested in attending this one-day trip, should sign-up in the Malcolm X Center leaving your name and number. For more information or sign up, contact Mike Hughes or Ralph Moore at 6-9772.

Black university in jeopardy

OKLAHOMA CITY [UPI] — Angered by a student sit-in demanding more funds for Langston University, a state legislative committee voted this week to abolish the predominantly black university.

The action by the House Appropriations Commiteee came less than a week after more than 100 students blocked the House's doors, trapping legislators and staff members for four hours.

House Speaker Bill Willis said the vote "was obviously a reaction to the demonstration." But he predicted the full House would kill the measure.

Committee chairman Don Davis said abolition of the school had been discussed in private for years but never emerged in public because of racial sensitivity.

"This is going to get the decision of Langston's future into public debate," he said. "Now it is up to the House to vote it up or down."

The committee voted 9-6 to abolish the school despite warnings from the university's chancellor that the move could cost the state more than $70 million in federal funds.

Belly dancing workshop explains feminist origin

By WENDY CARLSON
Collegian Staff

Belly dancing instructor Mary Rose Dow told a group of 20 workshop participants Wednesday that the ancient Middle-Eastern art form, which is of feminist origin, has been "turned into an object of sexist oppression."

"The belly was the center of the universe in ancient Middle-Eastern culture, and belly dancing was performed by women for women who were going through labor. Some of the same movements are used in the Lamaze method of childbirth today," said Dow.

"Besides being a symbol of the womb, the belly represented life, love and sensuality. But in America, it was promptly assumed that since women were dancing sensuously it was for men," she added.

Dow urged the women in the room to attempt the movements she demonstrated. The room was darkened and incense was burned.

"Belly dancing is a unique form of self-expression using every part of the body while the dancer improvises to music," said Dow.

The women danced to Middle-Eastern music for 20 minutes. Then Dow performed an ancient dance beckoning the coming of spring which incorporated all the movements demonstrated in the workshop.

"Belly dancing is all improvisation; a time to get into yourself and your beauty. A time to express your sensuality for yourself; not for the man in the corner who flatters himself into thinking you're out to seduce him," Dow said.

"The dance is a celebration of birth and womanhood," she added. "It makes you more aware of your body and brings you into contact with your inner spirit. Each belly dancer is unique."

Dow invited all women to attend a colloquium she will be teaching every Thursday night at 7:30 at McKimmie dorm in Southwest. She stressed that no prior belly dancing experience is required.

Dow said that women as well as men have misinterpreted the purpose of belly dancing as an art form.

"Many women take up belly dancing in order to be more pleasing to men; to become sexy, sensuous, seductive and sultry," she said. "We must regain our female energy for our own benefit, personally and collectively."

Last night, in the Student Union Ballroom, students and instructors from the Women's Karate and Self-Defense School in Northampton demonstrated various martial arts styles and techniques. (above) A student performs a training exercise. Instructors Banshee and Wendy Dragonfire said, "Our goal is to make karate and self-defense available to as many women as possible and to teach in a supportive but challenging atmosphere."

Women harassed on job

By DEBORAH BROIDE
Collegian Staff

A spokeswoman from the Everywoman's Center yesterday told a group of 30 women "sexual harrassment is a violation of a woman's personal dignity."

Cheryl Schaffer, facilitator of the women's week workshop, described sexual harrassment as "verbal abuse, forced touching, pressure for a sexual act, attempted rape and rape."

Saying almost every woman has a sexual harrassment story to tell, Schaffer cited as an example a waitress who was expected to tolerate with harrassment by customers or lose her job.

Another example of harassment cited by Schaffer concerned a secretary who refused advances by her supervisor and ultimately lost her job because he turned in bad working evaluations for her.

"Losing jobs over sexual harrassment is not something you talk about and as a result it isn't seen as an issue," said Schaffer.

She added "sexual harrassment is a power struggle. Women are seen as sexual objects. They're seen as soeething with which a man can carry out his power."

Schaffer also discussed women's vulnerability to sexual harrassment. "We've learned to accept obnoxious behavior," she said. Economic reasons force women to put up with harrassment. They don't want to lose their jobs."

"A company will often support a man rather than a woman in a harrassment case because he is considered more valuable to the company," she said.

Record distributors speak

By GAIL FLEMING
Collegian

Four Amherst area distributors of Olivia Records yesterday spoke at the Campus Center on the principles of Olivia Records and its commitment to the women's movement.

Olivia Records is the largest recording and distributing company of women's music in the country.

A group of 30 women attended the workshop conducted by Sherry Woods, Karen Kalustean, Cheryl Schaffer and Deb Curtis. Woods stressed the importance of independent distribution as "the life line to keeping Olivia Records in communication with women's movements across the country."

Olivia Records is a women's distributive collective which has four objectives in their business of recording women's music: making music by women, providing women with access to the music industry and control over the music production, providing training for women in the music industry, and providing jobs for women in a non-exploitive working situation.

Kalustean talked on the connections between women's music and women's culture. "Women's culture integrates personal and political struggles," she said. "Women's music is a positive force in the emerging women's culture, and helps to strengthen individual women to make changes."

Olivia Records is a non-profit organization based in Oakland, California. Records produced through Olivia are available at Common Woman, Sun Music and Main Street Records in Northampton, and in Amherst at Faces of Earth, Amherst Audio, and the Women's Newsstand located in the Student Union.

Students build new greenhouse

By MARTHA KIMBALL
Collegian Staff

Stockbridge students majoring in fruit and vegetables completed construction last week of an A-frame plastic greenhouse to be raffled off Thursday in Bowditch Hall.

The greenhouse is a project of Stockbridge freshmen enrolled in the Stockbridge greenhouse vegetable crops course taught by plant and soil science professor Paul Jennings.

Jennings said, "This project helps students gaan experience and makes them aware of problems they will face when constructing and working in greenhouses."

All 22 students in the class designed and made plans for a greenhouse. Pros and cons of each design were discussed and a final design for contruction was selected.

Joseph Perella, designer of the greenhouse, said, "It is simple for the home gardener. The dimensions are 10 x 10 ft. and can be dismantled. I suggest setting it on cindre blocks and placing hay around the bottom for insulation."

Bob Nault, in charge of construction commented, "The greenhouse is a good design. Our class has a lot of enthusiasm. Many hands have sure made light work."

This is the second year for the project. Money from last year's raffle was used to purchase wood and other construction materials for this year's class. "It's a perpetuating operation. I'll continue having future classes build greenhouses as long as I'm teaching the course," Jennings said.

Fruit and vegetable major Tom Luippold commented, "I gained a lot from making the greenhouse plans, especially learning about ventilation, construction and cost. I hope it continues with future classes. Jennings sure stimulates a lot of interest."

Raffle tickets can be purchased from any freshman in fruit and vegetable or people can contact Pat Rosseel in 418 Gorman. Tickets are 50 cents each or three for a dollar.

Ted Picado, head of ticket sales, said, "Sales have been going moderately well."

The winner of the greenhouse receives the wooden frame and plastic for covering. The class will help with loading, but the winner must provide transportation.

New school opens here; students build own homes

By STEVE DAIGLE
Collegian Staff

Classes at a new school which teaches laymen to build their own homes began this week at Amherst Junior High School.

The Heartwood Owner-Builder School, which is also starting classes in Pittsfield, is attempting to expand the idea of the owner-builder school in the Berkshires. The first such schools were Shelter Insitute and Cornerstone Insitute of Maine. Heartwood's main offices are in Washington, Mass.

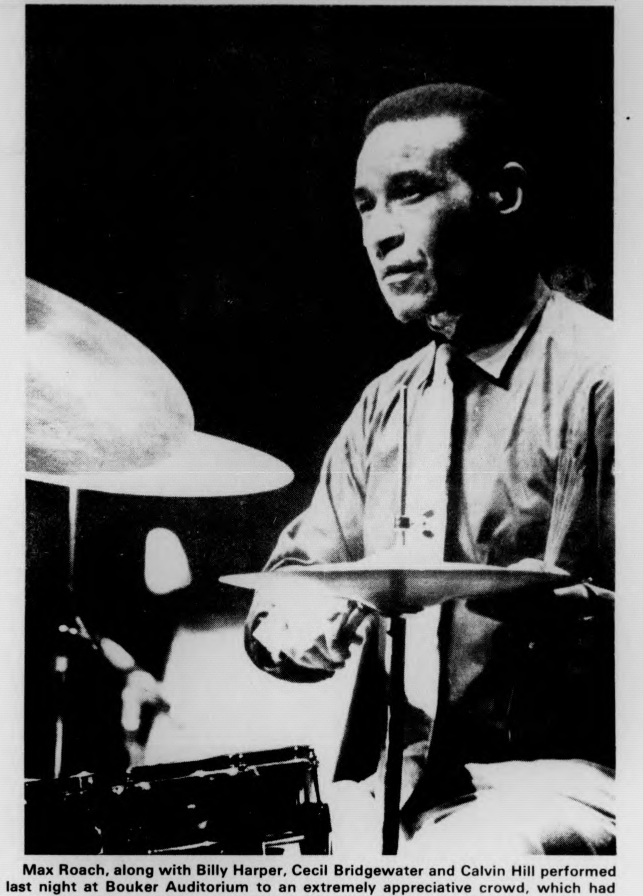
"Response to the school has been amazing," said Elias Velonus, one of Heartwood's instructors. He said one of the major reasons for the possible response is the present high cost of building. From 1972 to 1976 the median cost of building rose from $27,000 to $47,000. Projected median building price for the 1980's, according to recent studies, will be $78,000.

"We're not just a school," said Velonus, "we're more of an ongoing resource center. Once people have taken the basic courses they can count on support and encouragement from us in their own projects — information, references, material cooperative and advice from the staff."

"We basically see ourselves as a function," said Velonus, "We are there for people who want to build their own houses or extensions."

Heartwood will hold evening classes during the spring and fall on planning and building homes. Three-week full-time summer sessions will be held teaching practical carpentry skills.

The school is inviting anyone interested in the classes to go to one course free of charge. According to Velonus, "No grades, no tests; it's how much energy you're willing to put into it."



Max Roach, along with Billy Harper, Cecil Bridgewater and Calvin Hill performed last night at Bouker Auditorium to an extremely appreciative crowd, which had patiently awaited Professors Roach return to campus after an extended tour. (Staff photo by Jon Geller)

Journalist lectures to forty on Stalin's era in Russia

By FRAN BASCHE
Collegian Staff

Joseph Stalin, the man who ruled the Soviet Union 25 years ago is practically unknown to school children in that country today, according to Henry Shapiro, a retired United Press International Moscow correspondent of 40 years.

In his lecture "Stalin's Russia", Shapiro last night spoke of what he called "de-Stalinization", the process by which Soviet leaders eliminated Stalin, as an important figure in Soviet history.

When Stalin's death was announced, there was crying in the streets, Shapiro said. "It didn't take them (the Russians) long before they realized they'd do better without him," Shapiro said.

"They never used words like 'tyranny', 'dictator' when talking about Stalin," Shapiro said, but criticized him through implication.

Officials said leaders who were obsessed with the "personality cult', or self-centeredness, were fascists — unlike men such as Marx and Lenin, leaving Stalin's name off this list.

Later, Soviet officials decided to remove Stalin's body from the public view where it had laid next to Lenin's "Stalin's, built up into a legend, almost immortal, a military genius, a statesman — became a forgotten, if not forgiven, man," Shapiro told the 40 people who attended the lecture.

"It shows what you can do to history when you have full control of the media and education in the hands of a few people," he commented.

Shapiro said many of the criticisms of Stalin by officials after his death were incorrect. He was not, as many officials said, incompetent as a military strategist, Shapiro explained, citing many examples of Stalin's successful military career.

"Stalin was a self made semi-intellectual" and he was very "anti-press", granting only five interviews in his lifetime.

Shapiro told stories showing a side of Joseph Stalin that few Americans, or even Russians knew although he acknowledged Stalins cruelty and iron rule as a leader for 20 years.

Shapiro himself felt the man's power through censorship of his stories and by remaining in the country for 16 years with his Russian wife who was not permitted to leave the country until Stalin died in 1953.

Shapiro said things are not as strict in Russia now. Travel, once practically impossible, is easier. "A lot of things are happening in the Soviet Union I wouldn't have thought possible 25 years ago," he said.

Summer program seeks proposals for activities

The Summer Activities Program Planning Committee is seeking proposals for summer activities events for Summer Sessions '78.

The program has a total budget of $30,000. Past summer program activities have included an intramural program, the Summer Collegian, WMUA radio, concerts, films, and stage productions.

Proposals may be submitted with as much detail as possible to James Riley in the RSO office no later than Monday.

Monday meeting to cover conservation internships

An informational internship meeting, dealing with internships in such fields as environmental law, conservative fieldwork, and cooperative food projects, will be held on Monday at 2:30 in room 615 Goodell.

The meeting, sponsored by the UMass Office of Internships, will have representatives from the Center for Human Ecology in Freeport, Maine available for questions and comments.

All interested students from any discipline are urged to attend.

Comic betrays confidence

To the Editor:

Being one who empathizes with any individual, or group of individuals, suffering the pains of injustice and also being one who would support any well-intentioned effort to correct them, I duly pledge my support of the aims of Women's Week at UMass. This I consider to be reasonable. Given that most people are reasonable and assuming that reasonable people will admit to the presence of injustice then most people are apt to share my feeling of empathy. Few sensible people are callous enough to scoff at the suffering of others, particularly if they are aware that they are somehow responsible.

With regard to the women's movement, this group of empathizers, while being fully aware of the injustice, will feel at liberty to view such with a sense of humor but not in order to flout their responsibility; it is done for the mutual benefit of the victims and empathizers. For the victims' humor is in their best interest, not only to ease the frustration but more importantly to demonstrate to the perpetrator that their fight is with confidence, of which humor is manifest; that they are, in fact, winning.

The defensive nature of the letters that were written to the Collegian in response to Ron Ranney's later comic strips betray the confidence of the women's movement. Ron is not laughing at the goals of the movement. He has good-naturedly expressed opinion to the general public on a particular aspect of the movement. In doing so he has unobtrusively and, I believe, effectively poked fun at the segment of the public whose attutude toward lesbianism is more phobic than that of the sympathizers and has, in a small yet significant way made them less so. So while being critical of this aspect of the movement Ron appears to be confident of the movement's goals.

It is a pity that the few who do not have the confidence in their own effort that their peers do, feel obligated to convey the impression to those who need to be shown the movement's respectability that it has none.

Uruguayan artist to perform

To the Editor

"In my country," said Daniel Viglietti at the 1974 Philadelphia Folk Festival, "we cannot sing only for fun." In exile since 1972, after Uruguay's military government imprisoned him for "subverting public order," Viglietti now sings abroad, though still not just for fun. He will appear in concert at the SUB on Tuesday, March 14, at 8 p.m.

The Uruguayan singer, composer, and guitarist has toured Europe, Africa and the Americas, singing gentle but compelling songs of politics and life in Latin America. In particular, he sings of life under a military regime for which arrest, torture and murder are the primary tools of rule. For in his native land more than 50,000 people have been imprisoned at one time or another in recent years, and one out of every sixty people have been subjected to torture by the government.

Before 1972 Viglietti played the role in Uruguay occupied by Victor Jara, Violetta Parra and Quilapayun in Chile. In Uruguay as in Chile, popular democratic and socialist political movements of the 1960's spawned energetic cultural movements based on rediscovered folk traditions.

His concerts always sold out. At political rallies as Barbara Dane wrote, he could "turn demonstrations of hundreds of thousands into the best kind of culturally integrated events." Works such as his "Song for America" are still sung throughout Latin America, from Puerto Rican political meetings to rural Chilean villages, though his records are often banned.

In the 1960's Viglietti used his training as a classical guitarist to create new music for old themes, setting poems by such writers as Pablo Neruda and Garcia Lorca to music. Now he also sings for the thousands killed, tortured and exiled since the right wing military regime began its campaign to eliminate the popular movement.

Rally tomorrow for striking miners

To the Editor:

A storm of struggle is raging through the coalfields, and over the howling winds comes a call: "Our struggle is your struggle, join us!" On Thursday morning, the Miners' Right to Strike Committee called on all workers, students, and others who support the miners strike to come to Charleston, West Virginia this Saturday, and rally with tens of thousands of miners.

This rally is being called at a critical time. President Carter has brought down the Taft-Hartley Act in a desperate attempt to break the miners' resistance. The government is also considering bringing in federal troops, reasoning that if a scrap of paper [Taft-Hartley] can't convince the miners to abandon their just demands, then perhaps guns will. But the miners have seen both before, and have yet to be intimidated by either. Carter does this in the name of the "public interest"— but we say it is in the people's interest to support the miners, as have the striking farmers who contributed tons of food, the auto workers who have collected clothing, the steelworkers who have given their hard earned money, and the thousands of students who have shown their support in various ways.

We call on all who support this strike to come to West Virginia and stand, literally shoulder to shoulder, with the miners to demand:

Down with Taft-Hartley! No troops in the coalfields!

VICTORY TO THE MINERS' STRIKE!

Carter's plan for undeclared workers

To the Editor:

In Mexico, 40 percent of population is unemployed or underemployed. With no welfare on effective unemployment insurance these workers have two choices: starve, or look for work in the United States.

For more than a year there has been a big scare over so called illegal aliens. Articles have appeared in countless newspapers and magazines blaming undocumented workers for taking money and jobs from a country where they "don't belong."

In August, 1977, President Carter announced an "amnesty plan" which essentially amounts to manipulation of unorganized work force with profits, not human needs, the guiding factor.

There are an estimated eight million undocumented workers in this country, spread throughout the major metropolitan areas. Forty percent of these workers are paid less than the minumum wage, according to U.S. Secretary of Labor F. Ray Marshall.

A 1975 study prepared for the Labor Department found that of 793 arrested undocumented workers, 73 percent had federal income tax withheld from their checks, and 77 percent had Social Security taxes deducted. Yet only .5 percent collected welfare, 1.3 percent received food stamps, and 3.9 percent collected one or more weeks of umemployment benefits. Facts which the Labor Department fails to publicize.

In June, 1977, onion growers in Presidio, Texas, received special permission from Carter to import 80 Mexicano workers to pick the onion crop. The growers said that U.S. citizens wouldn't put up with the wages and conditions they were offering.

Carter's immigration plan does not attempt to eliminate undocumented workers as a source of cheap labor, but more, acts as means of creating a controllable pool of cheap labor.

The Carter plan is designed to make it difficult to impossible for immigrant workers to join in struggles for jobs, housing, or bilingual-bicultural education, by keeping them "illegal" and "alien."

By threatening to fine employers who "knowingly hire" undocumented workers, the Carter plan furnishes bosses with a pretext to demand "proof of legality" from all dark-skinned people, making it more difficult for Chicanos, Puerto Ricans, and blacks to find work.

On Monday, March 13, Luis Castro, from the UMass/Boston Puerto Rican Student Union, will be speaking at the UMass/Amherst campus in Herter 227, at 7:00 p.m. He will be leading a discussion of undocumented workers, the Carter plan and its implications.

The meeting is sponsered by the Amherst Young Socialist Alliance.

Women working together

To the Editor:

We are writing in response to the exchange of thoughts about the relationships between women of different sexual preferences expressed between the Everywoman's Center and Julie Melrose. Although both Julie Melrose and the staff of Everywoman's Center expressed excellent points, we feel it is important not to alienate women from each other because of their differnces.

We are community and student women of the Counselor/Advocates of the UMass Rape Task Force. The Counselor/Advocates are a group of lesbian, bi-sexuaal and heterosexual women with different political ideologies who are working toward a common goal. Despite the differences in the group, our baseline is a concern for the issues of feminism. Our direct counseling and advocacy services are available to all women and we have found it possible to meet the needs of women while working together cooperatively. We want to stress that the Everywoman's Center is a center with a great diversity which serves every woman. We are glad to see women communicating about these issues in the paper and encourage further dialogue that can help us understand each other, if not bring us together.

Tee shirts too much

by CANDY CARLON

There's a new addition to the tee-shirt rack in the University Store. Besides the ambiguity of "Teachers Do It with Students" and the triteness of "My Girlfriend-Boyfriend Goes to UMass and All I Got is this Lousy Shirt," they now have a shirt which reads, "UMass, a Tradition of Women in Exciting Positions."

Maybe I've become over sensitive. Maybe the shirt is really harmless. Maybe I just can't deal with such blatant sexism after a week of celebrating the fact that I'm a woman. Maybe someone is out to get us.

At a seminar last Monday, Holly Near discussed the extremist opposition to the Equal Rights Amendment. "When the reactionary forces are becoming visable, then we're doing good work," she said.

Could it be that tee-shirt manufacturers are part of the "reactionary forces?" I think not.

Someone has to sell what they print. So, what about the University Store? Yeah, let's deal with them.

The University Store is your complete department store. It caters to all tastes. It serves the entire student population. And now it encourages the printing of sexist remarks and even tries to make a profit from them.

The newsstand in the University Store is frequented considerably more, however, than the tee-shirt racks. The usual copies of "Newsweek" and "Time" and, oh right, "Ms.," (that magazine for bourgeoise feminists") are all contained there. Side by side with "Playboy", "Penthouse" and "Oui." The males who gather around sporting cool and casual grins and flipping through the pages of "Playboy", etc. dare also a permanent fixture of the newsstand.

I find it highly incongruous that a store housed in the campus center of a university bearing all the trappings of affirmative action and provideng courses designed to combat sexism should carry merchandise so blatantly exploitative of women. Is it possible that the male manager, who is ultimately responsible for the selection of merchandise in the University Store, could stand some educationg on the part of the University community?

Maybe it is time for the people offended by the sight of fellow students drooling over "Penthouse" that greets them as they pass through the turnstyles to stop averting their eyes and take people to task for their actions.

There has been a lot of energy generated by the International Women's Week activities that have taken place over the past few days, but the sense of exhiliration and power felt by individuals attending the events means little if not translated into concrete action after the week is over.

There are many places on campus to which women's effort toward combatting sexism might well be directed. The University Store might be a good place to start.

S. Africa, love; at Davis Cup

charlie baglie

A young teacher lies in bed slowly recovering from knife wounds. His name is Lipchick. He was not caught in the middle of a gang fight, he was jumped by two KKKers and "nigger" was carved into his stomach.

This took place in the middle of February, 6978, not 1870. Lipchick is an organizer in the Virginia—D.C. area for a protest against the participation of South Africa in the Davis Cup Championship at Vanderbilt University, Nashville Tennessee.

South Africa has been banned from many international sports competitions because of its racist apartheid regime which keeps 20 million South African blacks in slave labor for the benefit of U.S. corportations. This year (Jimmy Carter's Year of Human Rights) America is hosting South Africa and the Davis World Cup Tennis Match.

The matches have been moved. The tournament is now in hiding at Vanderbilt University, in Nashville, Tennessee. The NAACP, along with others, have refused to be intimidated by the match's location in the deep south. They have refused to be intimidated by the racist violence which goes on with the approval of the police (there are no suspects in Professor Lapchick's case) and have called for a demonstration on March 18 in Nashville.

South Africa's participation in the Davis Cup makes it much more than a tennis match. It is a further legitimization by the U.S. of the brutal apartheid regime in South Africa. Their presence which many countries ban as a protest against apartheid, makes this an important match.

The opening volley by the U.S. Lawn and Tennis Association tries to spit on African Freedom Fighters as well as the black, Latin, Asian and other minority people who have suffered under the lash of slavery, and the chains of discrimination and segregation (and still face it today.) It follows up to our rulers' new attacks on affirmative action and support for the Bakke decision.

The challenge has been taken up by many people, minority and white, that stand for freedom and justice. They have taken inspiration from the African youth (as they have protested the murder of Stephen Biko and the destruction of their culture by Soweto schools) that have gone barehanded up against the South African troops, armed U.S. guns, paid by U.S. government aid and supported by U.S. technology and investments. To honor that inspiration a contingent has been formed for the Nashville march called the "Soweto Brigade." The protest in Nashville will have the same spirit and determination as our brothers and sisters in South Africa.

The net of the Davis Cup stands for the barbed wire that's surrounding the people of South Africa. They are fighting day and night ot tear those fences down, coming closer and closer to victory, sending the whole white minority government and their U.S. backers running. The tennis courts and the whole country should be out-of-bounds for them.

Blaming ourselves

By Adam Auster

In my column last Wednesday, I tried to use the specific example of brick-throwing in Southwest to illustrate the problem of "blaming the victim". Though this problem is not widely recognized, it is the root cause of many problems including the high level of campus violence, vandalism, senseless antagonisms among social groups and our own apparent innability to successfully change our society and our own lives in it, even when we clearly see the need for reform.

In Southwest, the University "solved" the problem of bricks thrown from the high-rises by welding the mesh screens across the windows. In this way, they made the students of Southwest accept punishment for a problem that was not their fault.

In this case, not only did the University blame the victims in this situation, but the victims quickly began to blame thenselves. Yet any actual "guilt" should have been pinned on one or two brick-throwers, and on the University itself, for deliberately creating a set of circumstances that make brickthrowing all most inevitable.

There are two important lessons to learn from this example. First, the incident of "blaming the victim"— when we are the victims— is nothing less than an act of selfhate. It is based on a lie, that we are at fault for all the things our teachers, administrators, and even our own "student leaders" do to us. It leads to serious problems; apathy, alienation, and feelings af powerless anonymity.

> "Student government. says Tweedl dee. doesn't work because the students are so apathetic. Ditto for unionization. says Tweedldum. Student unionization is a great idea. says Dum: if only those lousey students would cooperate with it. Same for SGA. echoes Dee."

Anyone familiar with the University's justification for manditory housing ("well, we built 'em, so somebody's got to pay for 'em") or the complaints of some faculty members about the poor quality of students in their classes (because the professor cannot teach worth a damn) knows that "blaming the victim" is not limited to Southwest Residential College.

But blaming the victim goes further than this. Some students, tired of getting blamed, pull themselves to the top of the pile of guilt and proceed to blame everyone underneath them.

For exampole, take "Student Government" and "Student Unionization" - the Tweedledee and Tweedledum of the UMass landscape. When they are not bickering with each other, where do they direct their scorn? At students.

Student government , says Tweedledee, doesn't work because the students are so apathetic. Ditto for unionization, says Tweedledum. Student unionization is a great idea, says Dum: if only those lousy students would cooperate with it. Same for SGA, echoes Dee.

Do they consider - even for one moment the idea that all this "apathy" may be due to their closed-mindedness, lack of creativity, and petty power games? They do not.

Every week, the word "apathetic" thunders down at us from some pulpit on the Editorial pages of the Collegian. And the news bias of this paper, while sometimes pro-SGA, pro-Union or pro-this-or-that-SGA- candidate, is sadly almost never pro-studnet.

I hope that this perspective can give us some new insights into some old problems.

Lack of a "student comminity". Most of us don't even expect to feel a sense of community with other students any more. But why not a "student community"? Because everyone knows that UMies just can't ever get it together? No, because we have accepted a load of blame and self-hate that makes us feel cynical, un-likable, and too scared to take the risks involved in forming a real "community".

Student Apathy.* This ia really a catch-all phrase that SGA/Union people use to blame for their failures. They make it sound as though students do nothing but sit around, smoke, drink, and party for four years. But this isn't true.

UMass students run a newspaper, manage several radio stations, sponsor numerous clubs, and champion hundreds of causes. There's hardly time for everything we do- but the SGA/SOP heavies say we're apathetic.

It seems that what they mean by "apathetic" is that the things we care about don't count. We're apathetic, all right— about the "Year of the Union", about SGA Presidential elections, and about the Student Senate Reorg Plan. Does anyone wonder why?

&Students are always manipulated. Everyone knows when the University, is about to stick it to students, but we're never able to stop them. Everyone knows how bad the SGA is, but we can't seem to change it. Is this becuase students are so hopelessly immature that we can't do anything bedides complain? I doubt it.

The real reason for our apparent incompetance is that our feelings of inferiority and isolation keepp us from learning how to cooperate effectively with one another. This is a result of blaming the victims - in this case, of blaming ourselves.

The last point I want to make is just that we don't deserve nine-tenths of this blame: we are not at fault.

Students at UMass are not dull, insensitive or boring. We are intelligent, open intersting, good people trying to cope with a set of problems that we did not cause.

We are not apathetic" - except about those things that deserve our apathy. Those who criticize us by using that work are often expressing their own frustrations that we Umies won't get up and march in their parades or get excited by their ideas. Considering the quality of those ideas, no wonder.

Your Birthday

FRIDAY, MARCH 10

Born today, you are temperamental and inclined to explode when upset. You ara always abjectly apologetic when others are hurt through your outbursts, but you seem never to learn your lesson. You are inclined to dwell upon life's darker side and are often depressed, although you are angered by others' pessimism.

You will sacrifice if necessary for your loved ones, but seldom for yourself alone. You enjoy thinking of yourself as unworthy of friends or gain. Your bids for attention may endanger the emotional health of those you love, for they evoke worry and nervous strain.

Your fondness for society is superficially quite contradictory to your depressed nature. People expect you to try to be alone, when in truth what you seek is company. Your desire is to be cajoled out of your dark moods into the lighter side of your nature.

Also born on this date: Alexander III of Russia; Siegfried Borries, musician, prodigy.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

SATURDAY, MARCH 11

PISCES(Feb.19-March 20) — Pride enters the day's activities. Don't become the victim of your ambition.

ARIES(March 21-April 19) — Improve living conditions. Bargain purchases add the needed touches.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20) — Logic has little to do with what happens today at work. Expect to be surprised.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20) — Direct energy toward achieving goals set by influential friends. Study at evening.

CANCER(June 21-July 22) — Seek advice from the young. They alone today have no axes to grind, and speak the truth.

LEO(July 23-Aug.22) — There is power and glory in accepting responsibility today. Speak your mind.

VIRGO(Aug.23-Sept.22) — Control your temper early today, or you will make it hard for projects to evolve later.

LIBRA(Sept.23-Oct.22) — Overcome an obstacle in family matters by speaking frankly to those who expect much of you.

SCORPIO(Oct.23-Nov.21) — If misused, a hidden talent could be dangerous. Confide in the young; you may need their help.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov.22-Dec.21) — Your success at others' expense will not make you happy. Seek other means.

CAPRICORN(Dec.22-Jan.19) — The lesson for the day comes from the young. The pure in heart share their secrets.

AQUARIUS(Jan.20-Feb.18) — Activities with family impress you for a long time. Choose them well.

Gridders in Div. I-AA

UMass will join Division I-AA Football of the National Collegiate Athletic Association, President Franklin Patterson announced yesterday.

The NCAA restructuring approved in January divided the former Division I into two new Divisions, I-A and I-AA, and institutions must decide by March 14 which division they wish to play in. UMass formerly played football in Division II.

"We think that Division I-AA offers a number of benefits to the University of Massachusetts, including the anticipated opportunity for a national championship, post-season play, and television exposure," Patterson said.

UMass-Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said the decision to select Division I-AA was made after careful deliberation and consultation with other institutions on the UMass schedule.

David Bischoff, Dean of the School of Physical Education, said, "I believe this action is consistent with our aspiration and history of being among the best in New England football." Both Patterson and Bromery reaffirmed that the university is committed to maintaining a winning tradition against the best Division I-AA teams in the nation and selected Division I-A teams.

The university had an outstanding football season last fall, including two televised games, and hosted the regional playoffs in its stadium. This fall, under new coach Bob Pickett, it will be facing its most rigorous home schedule.

Frank McInerney, head of the Department of Athletics-Intramurals, said "The decision to elect Division I-AA will give the football program the best of both worlds. We can continue to play a representative group of Division I-A schools, and at the same time have the opportunity to compete for a national championship."

Associate Athletic Director Robert W. O'Connell also announced yesterday that the Minutemen will play six home games next season.

The complete schedule is as follows: Sept. 16 Villanova, Sept. 23 at Maine, Sept. 30 at Harvard, Oct. 7 Morgan State, Oct. 14 at Boston University, Oct. 21 at Rhode Island, Oct. 28 Connecticut, Nov. 18 New Hampshire and Nov. 25 Boston College.

Spinks—Ali rematch off

MEXICO CITY [UPI] — The World Boxing Council yesterday formally ruled out a Muhammad Ali rematch with World Heavyweight Champion Leon Spinks until No. 1 contender Ken Norton gets a shot at the title.

WBC President Jose Sulaiman released a statement for the organization's executive council saying, "If Spinks was given the opportunity of fighting for the world title, it was only after his acceptance of making his first title defense against the No. 1 challenger Ken Norton in absolute respect to the World Boxing Council's regulations."

In January, Spinks sent a registered letter to the Nevada Athletic Commission committing the former olympic champion to face Norton in his first defense as boxing authorities requested.

Earlier yesterday, Spinks was suspended for 90 days by the Nevada State Athletic Commission for failing to inform it that he had taken an injection of novocaine for an injured rib prior to his bout with Ali.

Sulaiman explained that the WBC's constitution prohibits rematches after a champion loses his title without an intervening defense by the new title holder with another contender.

"Rematches belong to the dark ages of boxing. They belong to the days when boxing was ruled by people — some of whom are now in prison," he stated.

"The law is the law regardless of how hard it is sometimes and it must be respected. The executive committee of the WBC... wishes me to express its strong position of not accepting the Spinks-Ali rematch for being against our constitution," he added.

The WBC has invited Spinks to a "face to face conversation" to discuss his position on his first defense of the title.

In its statement, the WBC reiterated its great respect for Ali, calling him a "great among greats".

a position to break the school record of 1:39.07.

Injuries come into play here, as Wolf, Bukowski and Wilson have all been injured in the recent past. Wolf's injury is causing Lettis the most concern, as she suffered a slight hamstring pull in the NEAAU's last weekend.

Bukowski (ankle and knee), Martin Diana Sealey (foot tendonitis) and Wilson (stress fracture) have all been pronounced as being in "good" shape by Lettis.

"We're not in as good shape as we could be, though," she said. "What makes that worse is the competition will be a lot stiffer this year."

Sealey, usually a four event performer, will concentrate on the 440. The school record holder (57.4) will have to get through two rounds to make the finals.

Monica Scott, Tina Francario and Debbie Farmer will compete in the distance events, which were responsible for 15 of UMass' total of 25 points last year. Francario and Farmer will run the two mile, with Scott either running the two or three mile.

Other competitiors will be Nancy Cominoli in the 50 yard hurdles, Sue Ares and Anna Mathieu in the high jump, and Linda Stillman and Julie Horgan (new school record holder) in the long jump.

Sox win exhibition opener

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. [UPI] — George Scott drove in two runs with a sacrifice fly and a single yesterday to pace the Boston Red Sox to a 6-0, rain-shortened win over the Detroit Tigers in the first exhibition game for both teams.

Luis Tiant gave up both Detroit hits in his three innings of work while Reggie Cleveland picked up the victory with two innings of hitless relief. Jim Slaton pitched three scoreless innings but Boston won the game with two fourth-inning runs off Roric Harrison.

The Red Sox scored four more times in the fifth as Jim Crawford finished up for the Tigers.

Fred Lynn, Butch Hobson and Carl Yastrzemski also drove in runs for Boston.

Bei—Israel's gift to UMass

By BILL TARTER
Collegian Staff

The Olympics are still the most cherished of all sporting events. Every four years this special occasion attracts the world's greatest athletes, while capturing the hearts and minds of sports fans everywhere.

Children and adults alike fantasize being a part of it all, imagining themselves striding into the huge stadium for the pageantry of the opening ceremonies, proudly holding aloft their country's flag and visualizing the ultimate thrill of stepping up to the top block to receive the gold medal.

For many of us, this is all just a romantic daydream, but for some it is a reality.

Bei Melamed has indeed experienced a piece of this life most people can only live vicariously in front of their television. Before coming to the University of Massachusetts five years ago, Melamed was a champion swimmer in his native land, Israel. He represented his country in the 1964 Olympics at Tokyo, again in the '68 games at Munich and finally at the infamous '72 summer games at Munich.

Within the modest confines of his office overlooking Boyden Pool, Melamed reflected upon his past.

"I don't know why swimming was important to me at an early age," said Melamed, "but in the back of my mind every morning when I woke up to swim was the thought of making it to the Olympics."

Of course, getting there requires infinitely more than a desire and talent for swimming. "You don't get there in one day," said Melamed in his unmistakable foreign accent.

One has to be able to withstand the extraordinary demands of mental and physical sacrifice. The pool becomes a home away from home. The endless hours of practice are as much a part of the daily routine as eating and sleeping.

Melamed's specialty was the butterfly stroke. "It's the hardest and most demanding style, yet there is a beauty within it that I always enjoyed," he said.

The discipline required to be a great swimmer takes years to attain. The constant striving for self-improvement must renew itself each morning, but eventually there comes a harmony with the mind and body.

"It's just like a violinist. You don't feel the beauty till you've achieved a high level of perfection," said Melamed.

Melamed was 20 when he qualified in the 200 yard butterfly at Tokyo. As in all the events, his qualifying time followed International Olympic Committee standards. The Olympics is never an honorary membership, he had to earn it.

"Just the whole experience of being there made it unforgettable," remarked Melamed. "It's a special environment, seeing all the athletes from around the world — the people, the press. For three weeks you're amidst all that glory," he said.

In that first Olympics he came 33rd in his event. There was no doubt in his mind though, that he would improve. He was far from mastering the stroke to his satisfaction. "It became important to me to keep going," said Melamed.

Between Olympics, Melamed was in the military service. Unfortunately, unlike other countries, there was no such thing as preferential treatment for athletes. Israel was more concerned with the ongoing feuds among its neighboring countries. Melamed, if lucky, managed to hitchhike to practice for one or two hours a day between military obligations. Practices were spent on his own. He worked out by himself, with no coach to assist him. He was a self made man.

Despite the hardships, he had continued to progress, and went on to compete in Mexico City. His memories of the '68 Olympics were brief. "Unfortunately, I had very little time to actually watch anything. The swimming was near the end of the third week, so I spent most of my time training. I saw Bob Beamon's jump along with the rest of the athletes on TV," said Melamed.

He arrived seeded 24th, meaning he had recorded the 24th fastest time in the world for the 200 yard butterfly. When you reach this level, half a second can separate many opponents.

When his race was finally concluded, despite suffering bronchitis for the entire three weeks he was in Mexico City, he landed 10th.

While '68 marked the high point in his Olympic experience, the tragedy which surrounded the '72 games unquestionably represented the worst incident in his association with athletics.

Arab terrorists shocked the world by breaking into the Israeli dorm in which Melamed was living, and killed many of his fellow countrymen. Melamed was fortunate enough to escape the incident unharmed. Continuing any competition after that was senseless.

His aim after Munich was to come to college in this country. Not knowing how to go about it, he came to America as a tourist. It was then that he met an American swim coach who persuaded Melamed to come to his college, West Liberty State in West Virginia.

Melamed, seeking the challenge and thinking that all American colleges would have a great swim team, accepted. But WLS was hardly an Indiana or USC when it comes to swimming.

In his first meet Melamed broke the school record by a ridiculous 16 seconds. Liberty State had never seen a swimmer like him. Melamed overwhelmed his competition in the small college NAIA tournaments. He never lost a race in his collegiate career, while only losing once in a championship meet.

Finally a friend got him interested in the exercise department at UMass, so he came to Amherst. He is now involved in the computer science department.

With his swimming days restricted to AAU meets, it seemed natural to assume the job as swim coach. He brought to the job an unrivalled knowledge of the sport, plus the dedication that characterized his former swimming career.

Without the benefit of scholarships, the best Melamed can do is "respond to people interested in the program." His comprehensive work with each swimmer yielded tremendous rewards this season as 23 school marks were broken and rebroken. It's showing in this year's New England's was the team's best ever as it snared 10 different school records.

Departing senior Russ Yarworth considers Melamed "the best coach in New England. He knows so much, at the Championships in Springfield, other coaches and swimmers would come up to him for advice. If he was at a school that would devote money to the swim program, he could develop a dynasty."

While other schools, such as the University of Maine have created powerhouse swimming programs overnight with scholarships, Melamed sees the future of the UMass program as "quite grim."

Welcome to UMass, Bei Melamed, It's a long way from the Olympics.

Women travel to track Easterns

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's track team will participate in the Eastern Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (EAIAW) track and field championships today and tomorrow at Tufts University in Medford.

All running and field event trials will be held today from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., with finals in all events tomorrow in the same time period.

Maryland is the defending indoor champion, having upset Penn State in last year's meet at Dartmouth, 66-64. Penn State won the EAIAW outdoor championship by an overwhelming margin. Maryland was second.

UMass was fifth indoors, scoring heavily in the distance events. Delaware State and Federal City College (Wash., D.C.) were third and fourth, with Delaware moving ahead of UMass on the final event, the mile relay.

This year, UMass coaches Charlotte Lettis, Gary King and Ken O'Brien tried to ''put together a team that could pick up points as a team.''

''With only 14 people, that's pretty difficult,'' said Lettis.

The women's squad has been hurt by injuries, sickness, people dropping off the team and the training missed during intersession.

Minutewomen's top performer of late, Cindi Martin, will run in the 880 trials today, and if she qualifies, will run in tomorrow's finals.

Last year UMass gained no points in the 880, although this year's Captain Bonnie Bukowski made the final. Last year's winning time was 2:18.11, and since Martin has run 2:15.7 this year (NEAAU's), she has a good shot at placing.

A strong two-mile relay team will also step to the line tomorrow. Bukowski, Laurie Wolf, Priscilla Wilson and Barb Callanan are all sub-2:25 half-milers, which could put them in

Gymmen head to Syracuse for championship meet

By STEVEN MARKS
Collegian Staff

Today the UMass men's gymnastics team travels to Syracuse for the Eastern Championships, to be held over the weekend. Coach Dick Swetman is fairly optimistic about the outcome of the competition, especially after the two impressive wins over Springfield and Temple.

In the team competition, Southern Connecticut will undoubtedly be the winner, with either the Cadets of Army or the Syracuse Orangemen taking second. But the real problem for the gymmen will be the compulsory competition which will be held tonight. Each competitor in an event is required to perform one compulsory set along with an optional one. The two scores are then averaged together with the top eight scores competing in finals which are held on Sunday.

For UMass the compulsory routines are the weak point and it could be the evenutal factor which keeps the gymmen from placing third in the team results. Most important will be the individual competition, where senior Dave Kulakoff will be defending his Eastern League Pommel Horse Championship which he captured last year. Kulahoff is the odds-on favorite to win this year with very little competition for the title.

In the other events, the only possible finalists are senior John Forshay, who placed fifth on floor last year out of thirty competitors. John also has a very good chance to make nationals in the long horse vaulting event, where he must place at least in the top three to go. The other possible finalist is freshman Dave Felleman, who could pull an upset on the still rings event. The competition itself will be the most grueling for the gymmen with the possibility of three days of competition for a competitor.

Title IX—equality or bust

A funny thing happened to me on the way to completing my perusal of colleague Mike Smolens' informative two-part Title IX mini-series. I discovered that, like myself, the university administrators readily admit to a certain lack of comprehension concerning the specific points of the Title IX anti-sex-discrimination ruling.

Dean David Bischoff, UMass's Phys-Ed Head, reports that his department knows not what federal officials expect of the university's athletic department in regards to equalizing athletic facilities, teams, team travel, etc. In fact, the administrators aren't even sure about the estimated time of arrival of the feds — 2:00?... 3:00?... Monday?... Tuesday?... April?... May?... 1984?

The predicament is similar to that of the sheriff in a ''B'' western; he doesn't know how the outlaws are a-comin', he doesn't know when they're a-comin', the only item he's sure on is that they ARE a-comin'.

Not wanting to see my university caught with its gym shorts down, I have completed all of the necessary telephone calls and compiled the following primer on How To Avoid Getting Bagged for Title IX Violations:

Chapter I - Teams

This may sound like an unnecessary precaution to take, but it is advisable that all athletes on women's teams be female and all men's team members be male. This would engender a large-scale, chromosome-testing campaign.

Remember, the presence of two ''X'' chromosomes represents a female, an ''X'' and a ''Y'' note a male, and a pair of ''Z's'' indicate that the athlete is asleep.

Chapter II - Facilities

Efforts should be most concentrated to bring about a complete and abrupt end to discrimination in this area. After a bladder-settling hour-and-a-half, air voyage from the nation's capital, the first places the Federal Health Education and Welfare officials are going to ask to see are the facilities of the university. A female member of the HEW task force would certainly not take kindly to being confronted with a urinal in her hour of need.

Chapter III - Travel

Distance and numbers are the keys here. At the end of each semester, travel distance should balance for the sexes. If, for example, a 14,000 mile discrepancy exists in favor of men's teams, strategic women's teams should be placed on buses and driven to Malaysia. Moreover, the number of male and female athletes in transit at a given instant should offset each other.

Say there are 15 women's gymnasts aboard a DC-10 on their way to the National Championships in Los Angeles. Any men's team with an off-day is required to send a comparable contingent of athletes in a similiar airplane which would immediately be placed in a seven-hour holding pattern over Bradley Airport.

Chapter IV - Equipment

Watch out for this one! The HEW will lull you into a false sense of security by letting you believe that simply requiring female athletes to wear athletic supporters and male gamesters to sport chest protectors will fulfill Title IX dictums. That's when they'll drive the nail in your coffin for failure to stipulate that the men's lacrosse team wear skirts and the women's swim team compete topless. Institute these changes before it's too late.

Chapter V - Media

In recent years it has been determined that press coverage greatly affects fan interest. In deference to the HEW's recent Oak Ridge, Tennessee, ruling, requiring varsity cheerleaders to root equally for men's and women's teams, media cheerleaders — the press — must reserve an identical amount of column inches or air-time for both sexes. Words and letters should also be carefully counted.

Along these lines, the letters ''m'' and ''n'' should be doubled when describing ''mmenn's'' sports. In this way the words ''mmenn'' and ''women'' could both consist of five letters. Trebling the ''n'' for ''mennn'' is also acceptable.

Chapter VI - Summary

Now that you know the specifics of Title IX, we can all rest easy, secure in the knowledge that sports at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst is about to enter into a Brave, New Era.

Tel Aviv curfew lifted

Terrorists seized or killed

TEL AVIV, Israel [AP] — The military command said yesterday it has accounted for all 11 Arab terrorists involved in the bloodiest raid in Israel's history. It halted a massive hunt for possible guerrilla survivors near Tel Aviv and lifted a curfew in the area.

A military spokesman said nine of the terrorists were killed and the other two were captured.

He reported at least 32 Israelis were killed and 72 were wounded in Saturday's terror rampage — most of them sightseers on a tour bus hijacked by guerrillas on a highway linking Tel Aviv and Haifa.

Earlier, the government had announced 37 Israelis were killed and 76 wounded and that three of the guerrillas had escaped and were being sought.

But the spokesman said yesterday night that further identification of the remains reduced the number of Israelis slain and the bodies of the guerrillas being sought were found in the charred wreckage of the bus.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin said the ''architects of the bloodbath cannot enjoy impunity,'' suggesting possible retaliation.

In Beirut, the Palestinian General Command said guerrillas clashed twice yesterday with Israeli forces north of Tel Aviv ''inflicting heavy losses on enemy ranks.'' Israeli did not mention continued fighting.

The military spokesman said the nine terrorists were killed only when troops blockaded the careening bus and the two were captured at the same time. He said remains of the terrorists had been found among the bodies of Israelis burned in the wrecked bus. Military sources said at least one of the dead guerrillas was a woman.

The military lifted the curfew imposed along a 25-mile stretch of the coastal Plaint of Sharon after the area was combed by combat troops and police, aided by dogs and helicopters.

The curfew, the first in a Jewish area since Israel declared its independence in 1948, covered an area of upper- middle-class suburbs with about 300,000 Israeli residents and a large group of American and other foreign residents.

After a violent ride on the heavily traveled coastal highway, the hijacked vehicle finally was stopped at a barricade erected across the highway seven miles north of Tel Aviv. It had sped 30 miles south from the point where it was comandeered.

''This is a terrible day in our lives,'' Begin said in an emotion-choked voice. The news conference was broadcast live to the stunned nation. He put off talks with President Carter for at least a week.

Defense Minister Ezer Weizman, recalled from talks in the United States, told reporters the 11 raiders came from Lebanon and that he held that country responsible for the massacre. Weizman's words appeared to carry an ominous threat, considering Israel's past policy of retaliatory bombing raids against guerrilla bases in Lebanon.

In Beirut, Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization said its Al Fatah guerrilla unit was responsible for the raid and called it ''our answer to Israeli arrogance.''

Saudi Arabia's state radio called the Palestinian raid a ''courageous operation'' that would let the world remember that no peace talks would succeed without Palestinian participation.

Begin said the attack ''should not and will not'' affect negotiations with Egypt. But Weizman said it ''certainly will have an effect on the general atmosphere.''

UMies protest Skokie

By CAROL ROSENBERG
Collegian Staff

The UMass Skokie Action Committee last night voted to solicit funds from the student senate and other groups to send students to Skokie, Illinois to take part in a non-violent protest of a Nazi Party march on Adolf Hitler's birthday, April 20.

The meeting, attended by approximately 30 students, was sponsored by the Skokie Action Committee, which defines itself as an ''ad hoc committee.''

The committee, which is coordinating the protest through the New England Federation of Zionist Students, is protesting the march through Skokie, a town with a large population of Jewish holocaust victims.

The Nazis may be attempting to change the date of the march from Thursday, April 20 to Saturday, April 22, the first day of the Jewish freedom holiday of Passover, according to Elizabeth Kent, a committee spokesperson.

''I think that's deliberate on behalf of the Nazis,'' Kent, one of the committee's principle members and organizers said.

The committee will petition the Undergraduate Student Senate on March 29 for funding, and then will petition other on and off-campus groups for money.

Committee members hope to obtain student senate funding for one bus, and find money from other groups for a second bus. ''I think approximately 50 people are seriously thinking of going and that's the best estimate I can give now,'' Kent said.

The committee told those attending the meeting to lobby their student senators for the senate funding. Petitions are also being circulated on campus for presentation to the senate.

Marcy Levington, co-chairperson of the senate Governmental Affairs Committee, pointed out some senators favor funding the bus, but ''they won't give money if there is a possibility of violence. I'm not saying that the senate is against this because I am not talking for the entire student senate,'' Levington said.

The possibility of violence has arisen since the Illinois Supreme Court ruled in favor of the Nazi party's march on First Amendment grounds.

A UMass student at the meeting said, ''They (Nazis) have as much of a right to march as anyone else around here. I'm protesting what they are saying.''

The protest was originally planned to be a counter-march on a parallel street lead by Illinois Gov. James R. Thompson, according to a committee spokesman.

But due to Saturday's Nazi demonstration in St. Louis (described by Kent as a kick-off for its ''grand march''), the other recent developments, formal acts of civil disobedience have been suggested.

The group unanimously passed a non-violence resolution which will be presented to the student senate with its plea for funding. The resolution expressed the desire of the group to take part in a peaceful demonstration.

The resolution said the group realizes it is illegal to cross state borders with the intent of inciting a riot and agreed not to ''use violence, or force, for any reason other than in the event of actual attack and physical need for self-defense.''

''Hopefully we can contain violence, hopefully we can deter violence. I think that we are guaranteeing as far as we can that this will not be a violent demonstration,'' Kent said.

Concert-goers to be searched at Geils

By GAYLE YOUNG
Collegian Staff

The Union Program Council proposes to search those attending Wednesday's J. Geils concert for cans, bottles and illegal smoking matter in an effort to secure the Fine Arts Center for future rock concerts.

Union Program Council Public Relations Director Bob Humphreys said it is Geils' reputation as a ''rowdy'' band that prompted the proposed searching.

The Geils concert is the first hard rock band to be hosted by the Fine Arts Center, according to Humphreys. ''Our use of the hall for future concerts like this one is contingent with what will happen here,'' he said.

Patrons will be searched or frisked at the door by members of the council. Humphreys said he did not expect any trouble but police will be present as well as the usual security personnel.

The council is urging students to take their time arriving at the concert since all seats are reserved. The council also asks patrons to have respect for the hall, to leave cans and bottles outside, to not stand on the seats and to not smoke in the hall. Smoking in the lobby is allowed.

These are the normal rules for the Fine Arts Center but Humphreys said the council is re-emphasizing them for the Geils concert. ''If the people want to see this type of band on campus they will have to behave,'' said Humphreys.

The alternative to the Fine Arts Center had been the Curry-Hicks Cage but the acoustics were not suitable there. The council hopes to have two other concerts at the Fine Arts Center this spring: Tower of Power and David Bremberg-Maria Muldaur.

Lawrence Greene

By JACK GALLAGHER
Collegian Staff

Howard Greene

Background — Age: 20 Major: Urban planning Hometown: Needham, Ma. Past experience: President of Patterson House, Treasurer of Resources Judaica, former president of Resources Judaica Class: 1979 School residence: Patterson House

Paul Lawrence

Background — Age: 22 Major: Economics Hometown: Fairfax, Va. Past experience: SGA senator Class: 1979 School residence: Patterson House

What are your impressions of the SGA as it operates now?

Howie Greene: "The way that we view the Senate now is as one very large body that is highly unaccountable and inept and inaffective in dealing with student issues. We basically feel that the Senate, if it was really concerned with the students, then it would try to reach out and attain much greater student input. However, the way it is now we see many senators in there representing only their own personal views and biases. Take the issue of student unionization, it was a big issue last semester but the key to unionization should be more effective communication between the senators and the student body.

Do you think students should have a larger voice in decisions on campus? And, if so, then how should this be accomplished?

Paul Lawrence: "Naturally, students should have a say in decisions on campus. This could be accomplished if, first of all, students are aware and understand the issues on campus. I think that, for students to be more knowledgable, the senators should be more accountable to the students. When this is done then the students will have a better voice.

How would you assess the bargaining positions on each side of the faculty-administration bargaining sessions?

Lawrence: "The administration holds all the cards and no matter who deals with them you're going to get screwed. It's the same thing with students, unless we can effectively organize, we're all gonna get ripped off. They give us increases in tuition and deny us more teachers while giving us more students. What can we do? Nothing. They've got you coming and going."

What do you feel is the best solution to the upcoming concert in the spring?

Greene: "The best possible solution to the upcoming spring concert is to try to get talent from all across the nation that appeals to as many varied musical tastes as possible. Granted, the talent that is being negotiated with for the Black American Music Festival is good talent that you really like to see. Like Al Giraux and Bob Marley and the Whalers. There is really no reason why a University of twenty thousand cannot attract major national talent. We've got plenty of money and plenty of time to spend on it. But instead we see the Student Senate working ineptly."

How do you feel the Student Senate bus service should be funded?

Greene: The Student Senate bus service should be funded fairly. All groups that rely on the buses should help pay for the service.

How should the situation in Pierpont be resolved?

Greene: "We look at Mr. Matlack's solution as a stopgap, bandaid-type solution. Granted, the students can be kicked out but if the drugs that are supposedly in Pierpont now are attempted to be alleviated, they will not be. No chain of supply will be broken. The administration is just admitting that they are inept."

Bob Melia

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

Bob Melia Background — Age: 21 Major: Social thought and political economy Hometown: Newton Past positions: Former senator, Economic Development Office Class: Senior School Residence: Sunderland

What are your impressions of the SGA as it operates now?

My impression is that it's operating just as it is designed to operate in that it is designed to insure that students have no effective influence on this campus. I'd rather see it relegated to a caretaker function where most of the policy decisions are taken out of its hands, where it funds certain things that have to be funded. The replacement (of the SGA) is not something I have a blueprint for. I would rather see ideas well up from below.

Do you think students should have a larger voice in decisions on campus?

If you feel they should, how should things be accomplished?

Like all other candidates, I agree. I think the only way you can accomplish this is to reverse or at least balance the decision-making process. The SGA always reacts to something the administration proposes. They are rarely actively pressing claims to the administration. It's only when issues go up the ladder from all types of outside groups that can press them at all different levels that students can get any type of effective voice in policy-making.

How would you assess the bargaining position on each side of the faculty administration bargaining sessions?

The administration has the upper hand. The faculty union is still new and they are still learning how to use it. The faculty is divided (Arts and Sciences, Special Programs). Those areas sometimes have different interests.

What do you feel is the best solution to the upcoming spring concert?

The idea of a Black American Music Festival is a good one. I think black art is rich enought, diverse and varied enough to represent most groups on campus. Had the Senate opened up its procedure more it could have been handled in a much more satisfactory manner.

How do you think the student senate bus service should be funded?

The administration has a rather sneaky plan to shift more of the funding from staff and faculty to students. We will be paying a disproportionate percentage. I don't think the SGA by itself is capable of getting it changed. The best route would be the threat of at least temporary disruption of the bus service to hold the threat of angering enough people so the administration will have to think twice before it decides to screw us on this issue. The disruption would be that which disrupts students the least. The type of funding I would like would specifically allow administration and students to share the burden of the costs with students. They are more able to bear an increase in services than students.

How should the situation in Pierpont be resolved?

I think the only way that it can be resolved is for Matlack to withdraw his proposal. He says Pierpont doesn't provide the good atmosphere for academic growth. To put them in that type of oppressive environment and then to blame them for not having a good environment is absurd. As for the drug charge, to push drug traffic out of Pierpont would only disseminate it to other dorms.

Correction

Student Government Co-presidential candidate Bill Edelstein said he believes there should be three concerts in the spring instead of two as he was quoted as saying in Friday's Collegian.

The concerts, according to Edelstein, should be the proposed Black American Music Festival, a concert for the general will of the students, and a concert for the oppressed minority of "Bess-Arabians."

Edelstein said the Bess-Arabians were so oppressed that "nobody even knows who they are."

Dorms leaks 'worked on'

The leaks in the roof of a Southwest area dormitory, which drip one half gallon of water daily into a fourth floor room, "are being worked on," according to Richard Lannon of dormitory maintenance in Southwest.

Matt Ruland, of James House 413, last night said enough water leaks into the room to "fill up a half gallon bucket per day."

James House Head of Residence Kevin Fandel said water has leaked through the ceiling of the fourth floor for three semesters.

Southwest Area Management Coordinator John Findley said Ruland and his roommate were offered alternative housing, but chose to live with the leaks.

O'Donnell withdraws

Student senator Patrick O'Donnell, citing "new developments in my political status" has withdrawn from the student government presidential race and the senate election in Brown House.

In his letter to the Governmental Affairs committee last Thursday O'Donnell apologized "for any troubles caused having waited till today to decide, but it was beyond my control." O'Donnell would not elaborate on his statement about "new developments in my political status" when asked by Governmental Affairs to explain this statement. O'Donnell was unavailable for comment this weekend.

O'Donnell's name first arose in UMass politics when he formed the Non-Unionists students' group last fall. He was appointed as Brown House interim senator earlier this semester when Senator Regina Hurley resigned her seat. O'Donnell was seeking a full term as Senator while also running for president.

As presidential candidate, O'Donnell's proposals included termination of the Student Organizing Project and the Senate Third World caucus.

UMass profs honored

Two professors in the Food Sciences and Nutrition Dept. are co-recipients of the Distinguished Scientist of the Year Award given by the Institute of Food Technologists in New York.

Fergus M. Clydesdale and F.J. Francis, both of whom are graduates of the University of Toronto and UMass will share the honor. The award consists of a plaque and an honorarium.

SGA material turned in

No Student Judiciary Subpoena was issued to former Senate Speaker Brian J. DeLima on Thursday night since DeLima voluntarily turned in materials sought by the student government.

DeLima had printed a pamphlet with student government money which depicted an individual with a screw through him. The same illustration appears on campaign posters for presidential candidates Shelly Gordon and Herby Tyson. The Student Senate Governmental Affairs Committee considered this unfair publicity, and impounded the pamphlets until the election is over.

DeLima turned in the pamphlets before the subpoena was completely written.

Mine authorities clarify work order for union miners

[AP] - Union safety committees made the first moves toward reopening at least two of the nation's struck coal mines yesterday as union officers told hundreds of local meetings that a Taft-Hartley order directs the miners to go back to work.

Whether the order would be widely obeyed — some locals were told to report on the 12:01 a.m. shift today — and whether it would restore much coal production, remained uncertain.

The United Mine Workers officials were legally required to urge their men back to work, and ting after meeting they did. But some predicted later that the order would have little effect.

Even where locals were deciding to obey the order, UMW members said they would not cross picket lines if resisting miners set them up.

The strike, which began Dec. 6, has cut coal production in half.

Union safety committees began inspecting two big mines in Kentucky and West Virginia Sunday afternoon — the first step in reopening.

One safety committee, from Local 6196, went into the Keystone mine near Welch, W.Va. "I had to order them back to work," said Wilbur Christian, local president.

Christian said he expected the safety unit to finish by midnight — perhaps allowing production to resume on the 8 a.m. shift Monday.

But John Crenshaw, a member of the safety committee, said the men would not cross a picket line if one was set up. When the committee entered the mine at 3 p.m., there was no sign of trouble.

In western Kentucky, another safety committee checked a surface mine owned by the River Queen Strip Mine Co. between Central City and Greenville, according to David Hinton, president of Local 1178.

At Monongahela, Pa., however, members of Local 2244 said they were bitter that President Carter had invoked the Taft-Hartley Act to obtain an order for an 80-day cooling off period in the strike.

"I'm a damn good Democrat, but he's made a Republican out of me," said Walter Sgaggini.

Local UMW president Alvin Berkich told about 300 strikers that the back-to-work order took effect with the 12:01 a.m. shift Monday.

"We're not going back," James Simboli said after the meeting adjourned. "We've been out more than 90 days now, and going back would defeat the purpose of what we've done."

The local union meetings were held to pass along formal word of the court order from union officials who were served with copies of the order by U.S. marshals. Many locals, including those not yet formally notified, scheduled similar meetings today.

"I will comply with the law," said James Taranto, president of 2,200-member Local 1269 in Bakerton, Pa., before his local meeting started. "It'll be my job to read it and their job to ignore it."

"I'm just going to read them the injunction and advise them to go back to work. I've got to under the law," said Robert Carter, president of UMW District 30 in eastern Kentucky. "From what membership I've talked to, I don't think they'll go back to work."

Clyde Hoffman, president of UMW District 14 in Pittsburg, Kan., said, on the other hend, that "We will take the actions necessary to make sure the order is carried out."

COSHOCTON, Ohio (UPI) — Rank and file United Mine Workers members give an unposed thumbs-down as Joe Taylor, Local 1323 financial secretary, explains the Taft-Hartley summons during a meeting yesterday. The 300 members of the local say they are not going back to work without a contract.

State union members stage rally for UMW

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

DORCHESTER — More than 1,100 supporters of the striking coal miners crowded into a union hall in Dorchester yesterday to assert the solidarity of the United Mine Workers and, more generally, the Massachusetts union movement.

Union leaders also took the opportunity to rail against the Taft-Hartley Act and the coverage of the miners' strike by the national press.

"By virtue of being union, we're united; by virtue of being united, we're behind the UMW" said William Cleary, president of the Massachusetts AFL-CIO. Throughout the afternoon rally, Cleary and other union officials sat under an orange sign that ran the length of the stage declaring: "Salute to the Miners!"

"I'd support the Mine Workers under any condition," Cleary said.

Lois Balfour, president of Service Employees International Union Local 509, told the crowd, "I don't think we've had the trade union movement together like this for 35 or 40 years."

The rally is almost without precedent, according to the UMass director of labor relations research. Although it was common for various unions to assemble between 1935 and 1947, they have done so rarely since, Harvey L. Friedman said in a telephone interview last night. He said yesterday's rally reflects "a rare situation among the miners," and said it will help to strengthen the union movement as a whole.

Lou Antal, president of Mine Workers District 5 in Pennsylvania, said he is urging miners back to work in compliance with the Taft-Hartley Act invoked by President Carter. "But," he added, "we don't always do everything we have to do because we like to do it."

Antal echoed other speakers at the rally saying that Taft-Hartley is a bad law because it puts pressure on the miners and the union and not on the coal operators. He urged the audience to "wipe out" the Taft Hartley Act, " ... you're young enough and can fight hard enough to do it."

Concerning Taft-Hartley, Cleary said, "We didn't like it in '47 and we don't like it today," but he quickly added, "Quite obviously, Taft-Hartley is the law of the land."

Antal and another Mine Workers representative — Mason Caudill, president of Kentucky Local 1596 — said Carter should have seized the mines. The main advantage to the coal miners, Caudill said, is that seizure means the federal government would be able to "open the books" of the coal operators.

After listing what he said the miners would have to give up under terms of the Bituminous Coal Operators Association contract proposal, Caudill said in turn, "I know what they're giving us: They're giving us the shaft — or trying to."

During a press conference Cleary angrily denied that by supporting the miners, the AFL-CIO was urging them to disobey the Taft-Hartley. "In no ways, means, or manner is this group encouraging the Mine Workers to break the law," he said.

Antal accused the press of doing "a terrible injustice to the coal miners and the public" through its coverage of the strike, which he said has left the public confused. The press has "misconstrued and turned things around," leaving the impression there is a political war within the union, which is not the case, according to Antal.

Balfour criticized the press and the government for ignoring the troubled miners before the strike became threatening. "You never heard a word from the government or the press," she said. "All of a sudden the UMW strike was a bigger media event than the Blizzard of '78."

About $4,000 was donated to a strikers' support fund at the IBEW Hall, according to David Martin, the Mine Workers representative who moderated the rally, Martin, from Illinois Local 989, spoke at UMass and Hampshire College March 5.

Members of the Amherst-based miners support committee of western Massachusetts added $500 in donations, according to committee member Barbara Byrd.

SGA prexy champion needs one-third to win

By JON KLEIN
Collegian Staff

Bigger than bingo and better than baseball, the Student Government Association presidential campaign season is underway with a cluttered field of 15 candidates vying for the presidency.

The large number of candidates in this weeks election is important since one-third of the vote is needed to win. With 10 different candidacies it may be difficult for anyone to grab the one-third needed. If none of the contestants reach this figure, the election will go to an electoral convention.

The convention consists of residential area governments and the Undergraduate Student Senate. The senate and the area governments each get 50 per cent of the votes. Some student politicians are concerned that the candidates who makes the best deals or has the best ties to the Senate will get the majority of the Senate vote and become President.

The two top vote getters from the popular election will be on the first ballot at the convention. If no candidate receives a first ballot majority, then any UMass student can become student government president, the nomination is open to everyone. The convention continues until a nominee receives a majority of the votes.

A multitude of other rules, ranging from posters to post-election regulations, govern the race. One of the most significant rules regards campaign financing. Public financing was begun in 1975. In past elections each candidate has received $250 from a $1500 account set aside for campaign financing. The $1500 is from the Student Activities Tax. Candidates cannot use any personal funds if they agree to accept student government funds.

This year, each candidacy is getting $136 instead of $250. This is another way in which the amount of candidates has affected the election. The $1500 account could not be spread among eleven candidates.

There are a variety of other rules for the race. The statues sound serious ("Candidates shall in no way defame the University, deface University property, nor break any University regulations nor any local state or national law") and the statures sound silly ("No campaign material will be postsd on any of the local vegetation). The latter rule refers to trees and shrubs, not any items found at Earthfoods or the Dining Commons.

Yet candidates can be eliminated for seemingly minor infractions. For example, if a campaign manager ripped down an opponent's poster, the manager's candidate could be evicted from the contest. In the end, on election days, Wednesday and Thursday, the only rules that matter are that all students can vote and it takes one-third to win.

OHAG office nominations reopened

By KAREN PARMENTER
Collegian Staff

Despite possible legal difficulties, nominations have been reopened for the four Orchard Hill Area Government Officers.

Prior to last night's OHAG meeting only two persons had filed nomination papers for president, one for secretary, with no one running for treasurer or vice-president.

Vice-President David Schillier asked that the election dates be changed from the last week in March to April 5 and 6, and the nominations be reopened.

Former Co-chairman of the Student Governmental Affairs Committee Jay Flynn told the OHAG representatives that if nominations were reopened a candidate who had originally submitted papers and lost to someone who had filed papers after the reopening could sue the area government. Schellier said he wished to reopen the nominations in order to give more people an opportunity to become involved in OHAG.

An additional $100 was voted for the Orchard Hill-Central Spring Concert budget. Andy Davidson, Orchard Hill's concert representative, told the members the budget currently allowed $1700 for bands. Davidson said $1000 was slated for a headliner band, with the remaining funds to pay for two or three lesser-known bands.

Representatives voted to donate $50 to the UMass Men's Conference, at the request of Leo Murphy, a member of the Conference Committee. Murphy also said the Orchard Hill Men's Center will hold a coffee house on Thursday from 8 to 11 p.m.

Musician Oscar Peterson, whose concert last night was postponed because of a delayed flight from Australia, will perform tonight in the Fine Arts Center at 8 p.m. Last night's tickets will be honored, and refunds may be made at the box office within the next two weeks.

Reformed Alcoholics speak out

By MARCIA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

In a workshop on "Women and Alcohol" offered by Leslie Simic Friday afternoon in the Campus Center, several women spoke about their personal experiences with alcohol and the need for female alcoholics to support each others' attempts to cope with alcoholism.

"I got desperate wanting to talk to other women," said a woman named Carolyn. "I need other women for my sobriety. I can't do it alone."

Carolyn is a mother of four who drank for 25 years before going to a rehabilitation hospital. She is now a psychology major at a New Hampshire college, and works with women alcoholics.

Simic referred to alcoholism as a "mental, physical and spiritual disease." Both she and Carolyn said they feel women alcoholics face some unique problems.

"Female alcoholics aren't as visible as male alcoholics," said Simic. "Where men can joke and put up fronts about their drinking, women alcoholics are thought of as 'disgusting' and often become 'closet cases'."

She added, "Women alcoholics are taught to be quiet, but they really need to yell and scream in order to grow."

"Alcoholism is a male-oriented disease," said Carolyn, "but there are so many of us in dorm rooms, closets and barrooms."

Simic advised alcoholics to accept their alcoholism and look to organizations for help.

She said the amount of alcohol a person drinks, the person's drinking pattern and reasons for drinking can all be of use in recognizing alcoholism.

Another woman who drank heavily for 18 years but has not had a drink in eighteen months spoke of the stigma of alcoholism. "Once you take the alcohol out of your body, you still have the 'ism'."

Simic urged people to take advantage of the many resources available for alcoholics both on and off the UMass campus.

Women discuss case of alleged murderer

By PATRICIA KEEFE
Collegian Staff

The case of Ella Ellison, convicted of murder in 1974 for her alleged part in the 1973 holdup of the Suffolk Loan Company in Boston, was discussed Friday in a Women's Week workshop.

Mary Fusoni, a representative of the Ella Ellison Support Committee, said, "Ella Ellison was convicted on the strength of testimony from two others involved in the case, Anthony Irving and Nathaniel Williams. Their testimony came as a result of a plea bargaining in which they implicated a 'young light-skinned girl' as the 'wheel-man'."

According to Fusoni, Ellison is a dark-skinned woman and looked her 28 years."

A third man, Terrell Walker, who was convicted with Ellison, received four life sentences for four counts of armed robbery. He never implicated Ellison, said Fusoni.

"Previous to plea bargaining, the two men gave statements saying that only the three were involved," she added. "It was under the pressure of plea bargaining that they implicated Ellison. They knew she had left Massachusetts and that the police would be unable to trace her.

In November 1976, Williams and Irving recanted their previous testimony implicating Ellison, explaining "wheel-man". Having gone through several appeals and lawyers, "Ellison remains buoyant and harbors no anger against Williams and Irving. The committee is expecting a favorable decision from the State Supreme Court in three to six months," said Fusoni.

Representatives from Northampton State Hospital and Family Planning Services told 50 people at a workshop on "Women and Mental Health" Friday that "women are deemed crazy by social and political definitions instead of psychiatric."

Spokesperson Michele Reiter said that "if a woman is not passive, dependent, inferior and frigid, society does not consider her normal."

"Women are institutionalized for disorders that the male medical establishment created. The male medical establishment not only create the disorders of women, but they cure them by involuntary means such as hospitalization, electro-shock and psychosurgery," she said.

Spokesperson Sebern Fisher said that "once a woman is deemed crazy she can act out all the aggressions she has felt for years." She added that due to the cultural oppression of women, "we should all be in a rage."

"Women must learn to unlearn their helplessness and be powerful, strong and assertive in order to maintain their mental health," said Reiter.

DO THIS OR DIE

Is this some sort of joke?
Well, not really.
We are not trying to tell you that you as an individual will actually die.
However, you may die as a representative of the student body.
And that in turn will lead to the death of student democracy.
A democracy that we've built up over decades so that we could have a voice in university affairs.
What should you do?
Participate in the upcoming elections for SGA president, the Board of Governors, Student Senators, and the referendum to increase the SATF by $2.00
Check the Collegian for what the candidates' thoughts and views are on the issues, and most importantly, vote.
The elections are March 15th and 16th and the polling places are:

Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra made beautiful music in Arts Center

By BENNETT COLEMAN
and DAVE GRAM
Collegian Staff

The Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra was well-received Friday night, as they performed a program of romantic and neo-romantic music in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

Under the direction of Swedish conductor Sixten Ehrling, the orchestra provided its audience with a sampling of two Twentieth Century Russian works in the first half of the program.

Dmitri Shostakovich's Festive Overture (opus 96), the opening work of the program, was a colorful mixture of brass fanfares and Russian folk melodies carried by the woodwinds and strings. Unfortunately, somewhat sloppy trumpet playing detracted from the overall brilliance of this festival prelude.

Music Review

The next piece on the program, a Violin Concerto in D Minor by Aram Khachaturian, featured Mark Piskunov as guest soloist. The 19-year-old Russian emigre, now a scholarship student at the Juilliard School of Music, played with great accuracy and sensitivity.

Employing one of the Juilliard's better instruments, an old Italian violin made by Joseph Guarnerius, Piskunov developed a beautiful rich dark tone, though not quite vibrant enough to overcome the vastness of the hall.

Originally conceived as a flashy showpiece, the concerto exploits both the lyric and technical capacities of the violin.

Both the Shostakovich and the Khachaturian are easily likable works that reflect the spirit of the folk dances of the Russian people. The end of the first half of the program was greeted by mild applause.

The orchestra opened the second half of the program with Antonin Dvorak's Seventh Symphony in D Minor. A more substantial, but at the same time easily accessible work, the Dvorak featured a strong viola section and well executed horn solos.

In comparison with the lighter first half, the more profound Dvorak was well liked and even received a modest standing ovation. This prompted Cincinnati's new music director to call for an encore, the Ruslan and Ludmilla Overture by Glinka.

While certainly not a rival to the great symphony orchestras of the Midwest (i.e. Cleveland and Chicago), Cincinnati put together a pleasurable and, in the case of the Dvorak, moving performance.

Ehrling took over the podium at Cincinnati only three months ago upon the death of Thomas Schippers. As he adjusts to the orchestra and the orchestra adjusts to Ehrling, the Cincinnati Symphony may soon become one of the better orchestras in the country.

Rabe tragicomedy produced as thesis project

By MICHAEL P. DORAN
Collegian Staff

Sticks and Bones, David Rabe's tragicomedy, is about a blind Vietnam war veteran who returns home to T.V. land American only to find that he no longer belongs. Staged as a thesis project at Amherst College's Kirby Theater last weekend, it was a successful production of a haunting play.

Rabe, with his meat-cleaver mind, gives us the typical American family of Ozzie, Harriet, and Ricky, whose concerns, respectively, are proving his masculinity or trying to do so in any way possible, getting fudge and milk for Rick, and looking good while playing the guitar and picking up "not so nice girls." The military trucks that bring the fourth member of the family, Dave, home from the war bring a demon who no longer fits, who hates himself and hates his family for the mess they made him.

When Zung, the spirit of the Vietnamese girl, he slept with but couldn't love, haunts him, he realizes the political and sexual double standard he has grown up with is evil and destructive. The play is so satirical it becomes hateful at times, and one must ask if Ozzie and Harriet are really straw people set up for the easy effect. But it is a dramatically satisfying play, and it works because so many of our self conceptions, mirrored in our television families, are inflated, full of impotence, and purposely ignorant of their effects.

There was some fine acting in this student production. Ozzie, played by G. Denis Markell, was timid and mouselike, with his whisk broom mustache and beady eyes making him perfect for the role. He walked on stage with a hunched stature, and never slipped out of character, alternating between impotence and his inability to convince others of his manhood. He manages the crack-up scenes, as well as the final catharsis, with grace, alternately getting lost in his armchair and pathetically, gleefully watching and cheering the murder of David.

Harriet, too, was very good. The character's air brained singular desire to feed the family and then go grocery shopping was well played by Lindy Jones, who also looked her part. She also realized that what underlies her role is the overwhelming desire for a facade of love and harmony in her household, and because of this she is the real target of David's intended destruction. She never overstepped the bounds set up by her part in the family, intelligently avoiding extremes of caricature when they could have easily surfaced.

Ricky, played by Larry Geller, lacked somewhat when it came to realizing his role as the symbol of success product of the contradictions lived by Ozzie and Harriet, but he did well to play up his good looks and saccharine voice effectively.

And David, played by Anthony Peck, made the show. Playing a blind person is not at all easy, and at times he did seem to have eyes, but overall the acting at this level was superb. His sense of alienation, caused by his encounters with what America really stands for, as evidenced by the slaughter of men, women, and children in Vietnam, was brought in Peck's every movement gesture and word; even his speech was so stilted at times it seemed as if he were used to speaking another alien, language.

The three minor characters in the play lacked shine. Father Donald, played by David Kalodner, was absent from the stage enough that he did not make the production too much with his forced gesturing and elocution. The Sergeant who brings the blind David home in his military truck played by Drew Pinsky was only on stage for a minute but missed, in his short space of time, to convey an image of impersonal military bureaucrat as much as he could have. Zung, played by Kathie Min, was a good spirit, but some of her movements seemed overly slow, as if she hadn't quite decided what a spirit should do on stage.

Presidential candidates given campaign funds

By ROBERT FALETRA
Collegian Staff

Student government presidential candidacies this year are each allocated $136.36 in campaign funds, according to Governmental Affairs Committee Co-chairperson Marcy Levington.

The candidates are together allocated $1500, which comes from the student activities fee. The money is the only money permitted for use by the candidates for campaign purposes. The following is an account of how the money is being spent, according to Levington.

Candidate Russell Swan has spent money on 1,000 posters, 30 tee shirts and a number of rubber ducks.

The David Barenborg—Susan Birmingham candidacy has spent money on paint, one bedsheet, poster paper, masking tape, stencils and 2,000 posters.

Candidate Donald Bishop has used allocations for mimeograph paper, stencils, blue and green paper, leaflets, xeroxing and 2,000 flyers and posters.

The Steve Brickman—Mark VaFiades candidacy has spent money on a Collegian advertisement, masking tape and printing.

Candidate Robert Melia has used his allotted money for tape and chart pack letters.

The Howard Greene—Paul Lawrence candidacy has spent money on three Collegian classified advertisements, one Boston Globe advertisement, a Collegian news page advertisement and flyer printing.

The Shelly Gordon—Herb Tyson candidacy has used allocated money on chart packs, masking tape, paper and flyers.

The Bill Edelstein—Brad Goverman candidacy has spent money on xeroxing.

Candidate Steve Ross has used allocations for sheets, spray paint, tape, stencils, posters and paper.

Candidate Jay Flynn has spent money on Collegian advertisements.

French edge to Reds

PARIS [AP] — A Socialist-Communist alliance challenging 20 years of Gaullist rule was winning a slim popular majority yesterday in the first round of French legislative elections, computer projections showed.

The combined left was given just over 50 per cent of the vote, short of pre-electoral opinion poll predictions that ranged as high as 56 per cent. The ruling center-right coalition was projected to be winning 45-46 per cent.

The rest was scattered among minority groups whose votes could prove decisive in the second, run-off round of elections next Sunday.

Analysts said the leftist bloc — the Socialists, Communists and the small Leftist Radical Party — would need solid support from minority parties, such as ecologists and extreme leftists, to turn a narrow popular victory in the first round into a parliamentary majority in the second.

The preliminary projections, based on results from key voting districts, were made for France's government-owned television stations.

As predicted, the turnout at the polls were massive. The Interior Ministry said 36 per cent of the 34.4 million registered voters had cast their ballots by noon, sharply up from the pace in the last national legislative elections in 1973. At least 80 per cent were expected to vote by day's end.

from our perspective

SGA candidates—none of the above

The elections for Student Government Association President will be held this Wednesday and Thursday, March 15 and 16. If past elections are any indication, most of you will not vote. This is a mistake. There are too many things wrong with the SGA system to be apathetic and not raise your voice and say so.

To cite a few examples: the student organizing project has been in existence for four years, spent a quarter of a million dollars, and has accomplished nothing; the Student Senate is so inefficient and mismanaged that three or four people control the votes of a majority, making sure that their own interests are served, not the student interest; the presidents of the SGA sooner or later become patsies of the trustees and administration or simply keep their mouths shut about the way student interests are ignored. In short, the whole SGA system is unrepresentative, and most times misrepresentative, because the people in it are more concerned with personal advancement and their vested interests.

Not voting not only allows these people to continue with their unethical system of patronage, but it also allows them to justify their actions by saying that the majority of students at UMass are apathetic, and therefore we who care should run everything.

But, you might ask, why should anyone vote then voting will only perpetuate a rotten system. Indeed why vote when the people on the ballot are senate cronies, naive, or running to point up the farce that SGA has become. There is an alternative. On this year's ballot there is a place for you to vote none of the above.

Checking none of the above would, in effect, be a vote of no confidence. It is different from not voting at all in that it registers a sentiment, which not voting cannot do. Voting none of the above will show the people who run the vast bureaucracy on the fourth floor of the Student Union Building that you want a change. It should not be thought, however, that voting in this way will cause immediate change. It is very likely that the Student Senate will gather in some psuedo-constitutional group and elect one of their cronies.

The effect that voting none of the above will have is long range. It will be a big step in the undermining of a system that is bad, and will foster the development of a student government that starts a the student level up, instead of th other way around. It will be a firs step in a long process of chang but it is becoming rapidly apparen that this change is needed an should start as soon as possible.

Not voting will accomplis nothing, and allow a self intereste group of prople to continue a complishing nothing. Voting n confidence, none of the above, wi be the first step towards creating system that is concerned with th interests of students and will b willing to work for them, instead o paying lip service and waste student money for it.

Letters

'None of the above' box clarified

To the Editor:

It is the opinion of the Governmental Affairs sub-Committee on elections that a clarification of our reasons for putting "none of the above" on the ballot is in order. In the past, there was no alternative for students dissatisfied with the candidacies for S.G.A. President to express their displeasure. Placing "none of the above" on the ballot provides the opportunity to do this.

However, as with any strong medicine, there can be serious side-effects. If no Presidential candidates receives one third of the votes cast then the election will be decided by an electoral college. This will eliminate the decision by popular vote and place it in the hands of the Student Senate and the Area Governments. To emphasize the meaning of this, John Quincy Adams was rejected by the majority of the voters, but was then elected President of the United States by the Electoral College.

Clearly this is not the most open and democratic process. The participants in such a process could be open to wheeling and dealing and who knows what other undesirable methods.
